The preparations for the elaborate productions to be given by the Castle Square Opera Company during the latter half of the third season of opera in English at the American Theatre have necessitated the closing of the theatre for the week of Dec. 18. It will be reopened with a special matinée on Christmas Day, Dec. 25, when a superb spectacular production of Millioecker's tuneful opera, "The Beggar Student," will be given. It will be followed by "Die Fledermaus," never before given at this theatre. "A Basso Porto," ("At the Lower Harbor,") its first production in America, and the first time in English on any stage; and many other novelties in both grand and light operas. "The Beggar Student" will reintroduce to American Theatre audiences Miss D. Eloise Morgan, Miss Gertrude Quinlan, Mr. William G. Stewart, Mr. Reginald Roberts, and Mr. Frank Moulan. The cast will also include several newcomers in the persons of Miss Bessie Tannehill, Miss Belle D'Arcy, Mr. Louis Casavant, and Mr. Charles Myers. They will be assisted by the great singing chorus of sixty, the American Theatre orchestra, and a military band. A feature of the performance will be a grand march, which will employ over 100 supernumeraries, garbed in the picturesque attire of the period. Sumptuous stage settings, accessories, and novel electrical effects have been manufactured especially for this production, which is calculated to surpass all previous presentations of light opera at this theatre.

Mme. Saville, whose departure from Vienna for her American concert tour was delayed by a special performance of the Imperial Opera Company, sailed on the Kaiser Wilhelm Dec. 13, and she is due here on Tuesday.

Petschnikoff's next New York appearance will be at Carnegie Hall, Dec. 26. Since he last played here the great Russian violinist has filled engagements with the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, and Chicago Symphony Orchestra, and he has given recitals in St. Louis, Philadelphia, Detroit, St. Paul, and Chicago.

The following facts concerning Mark Hambourg are significant: Eight appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, two with the New York Philharmonic, three with the Kaltenborn, and two with the Thomas Orchestra in Chicago, place fifteen orchestral appearances to his credit within the first seven weeks of his stay in America, an almost unparalleled record for any pianist here; and in Philadelphia and Cincinnati he has already been booked for return dates. This besides a large number of recitals given by this eminent young Slav pianist.

The Seidl Society of Brooklyn, which had just completed its twelfth season of orchestral concerts at the time of Mr. Seidl's death, and which has been inactive since that event, will renew its activities with the beginning of the new year. Mr. Emil Paur will conduct an orchestra of sixty men, and be assisted at the first concert to be given at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Thursday evening, Jan. 4, by two local artists, Mr. Dudley Buck, tenor, and Mr. August Walther, pianist. The second concert will occur on Feb. 10, and the third on March 17.

Mr. Paderewski will give one orchestral concert this season. It will take place at Carnegie Hall on Dec. 31 at 8:30. The great pianist will be assisted by Walter Damrosch and his orchestra.

THE MUSICAL SEASON IN ROME.

Announcements of Grand Opera Productions at the Costanzi Theatre.

ROME, Nov. 28.—The management of the Costanzi Theatre here has already published the programme for the second series of operas to be given at the well-known theatre during January and February. The series is to be opened with the première of Maestro Puccini's anxiously awaited "La Tosca," fixed for Jan. 4. Eleléa Darclée is to sing the title rôle, and De Marchi and Giraldoni complete the trio of first-class artists chosen by the composer for the opening night. Sardou is to be present also.

The other operas selected for performance are Halévy's "La Juive," Wagner's "Tannhäuser," the same composer's "Lohengrin," Massenet's "Sappho" and "Werther," Verdi's "Aïda," Donizetti's "Elisire d'Amore," Mascagni's "Amico Fritz," and Gounod's "Faust." Outside of the three singers mentioned above, the principal artists engaged are Signorina Novelli and Gemma Bellincioni, Brogi, De Lucia, and Vignas. Leopoldo Magnone is to direct.

With such a strong company, the Costanzi bids fair to be the most popular of the Roman opera houses during the coming Winter.

The new Politeama Adriana and the Argentina are two more Roman theatres where grand opera is most probably to be heard during the carnival season, (January and February,) and if we take into consideration the humbler attempts of the Nazzonale and the Quirino, the theatregoing public will have no dearth of dramatic music this Winter.

Naturally, interest and expectation centre at present upon the "first night" of the new "La Tosca," and, as far as I know, the public will not be disappointed. In the line of instrumental music, Rome will be again able to hold its own against the more northern cities of the peninsula, as it did last year and the year before. In addition to the regular orchestral concerts of the Philharmonic Society and the Santa Cecilia and the chamber music "afternoons" of the Court Quintet and the Guilli Quintet, we are to have several recitals by foreign celebrities. Add to these the concerts of the Sebastian Bach Society and those of Sgambati's new orchestra, not to mention a dozen others, it is apparent that Rome certainly has a right nowadays to be considered as one among the "musical" cities, not only of Italy, but of Europe. At present the Costanzi and the Politcama Adriano are bringing to a close two unusually successful autumnal seasons, with such operas as Boito's "Mefistofele," Meyerbeer's "Dinorah" and "Les Huguenots," Mascagni's "Iris," Ponchielli's "Gioconda," Giovana's "Fedora," Bellini's "Sonnambula," and Verdi's "Trovatore," &c. Sonzogno, the well-known editor and impresario of Milan, is hard at work contracting for the rights of a Winter season at the Argentina Theatre of this city, but, although he has offered to guarantee the usual number of performances without the usual subsidy, his efforts have so far met with considerable opposition, due in great measure to the influence brought to bear against the enterprise by the strong "Costanzi" party.

Besides "La Tosca," we are promised several other new works by Italian composers during the coming Winter, which promises to be one of more than usual interest.

M. Saint-Saens's New Work.

The Paris correspondent of a London paper writes: "M. Camille Saint-Saëns's new lyric drama 'Prosperine' was performed for the first time at the Opéra Comique last night. The subject of the work may be summed up in a few words. Prosperine is a courtesan of the Italian Renaissance period, who is enamored of a young signor named Sabatino. Out of pure coquetry she, however, refuses his advances. Wearied with being always rejected, Sabatino falls deeply in love with Angiola, sister of his friend, Renzo, with whom he goes to the convent to seek his affianced bride. When Prosperine learns that Sabatino is to marry Angiola, she is seized with a fit of jealousy, and seeks to inspire her former admirer with love for her, in the hope that he will break off his projected marriage. Her efforts, however, prove vain. Sabatino sends her away to receive Angiola. Instead of leaving, Prosperine hides behind some tapestry, determined to spring forth at an opportune moment between the lovers, and stab her rival. She does, in fact, suddenly leave her hiding place, but when her hand is lifted to strike Angiola, the knowledge of the indignity of her own life and the remorse for it causes her to turn the weapon against herself. She stabs herself and dies wishing happiness to the young couple.

"Saint-Saëns is at the present moment perhaps the best French musical composer. After having written symphonies, oratorios, concertos, operas, &c., he not long ago produced a ballet gavotte, which has met with great success. It was, therefore, with high anticipations that the musical world of Paris went to the Opéra Comique to hear 'Prosperine.' The first act is lively and brilliant, the orchestration being fairylike. The critic can but admire the variety of those tones, which are always employed at the proper place and in their right turn. A Sicilienne sung by two voices was particularly remarkable, and Prosperine's reverie, followed by her anger and nervous exaltation on learning of the proposed marriage of Sabatino, gave great éclat to the close of the first act. The second act, however, is still finer. It may be said that it is useless for the dramatical development of the piece, but the convent scene is simply exquisite, breathing innocence, charity, and purity. Unfortunately, from this moment the interest diminishes, and it becomes clearly apparent that the dramatic part of the drama has not inspired the musician. The melodies are less fresh and the orchestration heavier. But the entrance of Angiola in the fourth act is charming, and the final trio comm

With Christmas only a week away, the influence of the coming holiday season will be felt increasingly in the social world from this morning on through the week. Blank days now begin to appear on the social calendar for the first time in some weeks, and the thoughts and energies of the members of the gay world will be devoted for a time more to Christmas shopping, outings, and arrangements than to entertaining and entertainment.

The schools and the colleges will begin to send their students home for the Christmastide by Thursday next, and the welcoming of the young people by their friends and families, with the dinners and other family reunions which Christmas always brings, will fill the hours and days. Yesterday brought almost the last of the more notable coming-out receptions which have been such a feature this year of December, while with the weddings of Mr. F. Leopold Schmidt, Jr., and Miss Gertrude T. Townsend at East Williston, L. I., and of Mr. Graham Lusk and Miss Mary Woodbridge Tiffany, daughter of Mr. Louis C. Tiffany, in the Madison Square Presbyterian Church, both of which will be celebrated on Wednesday next, December's fashionable marriages will also close. Other events of the present week which must be noted this morning will be Mrs. George Crocker's evening reception and musicale for her daughters, the Misses Rutherford, at her residence, 1 East Sixty-fourth Street, on Tuesday evening; the reception to be given for Mrs. Wyllys Rossiter Betts by Mrs. Frederic H. Betts, at 22 East Sixty-fifth Street, also on Tuesday afternoon; Mrs. Edson Bradley's reception at her residence, 892 Fifth Avenue, for her daughter, Mrs. Herbert Shipman, on Wednesday afternoon, and the amateur theatricals to be given by Mrs. George Gould at her Lakewood residence on Thursday evening, and of course the opera, whose first night is to-morrow, is always a gala one in society.

The opera is, with the exception of the Horse Show, the one place where all grades meet, and although it may have something of the dress-parade or even the Tussaud waxworks idea about it, it is much enjoyed by the entire audience. The list of boxholders has already been given. Mrs. Astor has announced that she will be present to-morrow, as has been her wont for many years. Mrs. Ogden Mills, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry, Mrs. Edmund Baylies, Mrs. Richard T. Wilson, Mrs. Luther Kountze, Mrs. Henry Barbey, and Miss Iselin will be among the representative women of fashion in the parterre, and the number will be increased by the addition of Mrs. John R. Drexel and Mrs. Pembroke Jones. The dinners given before the opera will not be elaborate, and the opera socially will be in full tide at the intermission after the second act.

For sixteen years, or since that eventful night in November, 1883, when the Metropolitan Opera House was first opened, the initial appearance on their annual return to this country of the European song birds has, with the exception of the season following the burning of the first opera house and the Winter of 1897-8, when no opera was given, been perhaps the most important event of the Winter social season in the metropolis. For it "my lady" spends weeks of planning and preparation; for it a host of dressmakers and milliners have been designing and working day and night; for it, the musical world has also been preparing, and to it a small army of people have been looking forward.

The Opera House will present, as usual, a fascinating scene to-morrow night. There will be new forms and faces in many of the boxes and seats, and there will be ghosts in other boxes and seats, and these will even walk the corridors unseen by the many, but whose presence will be felt by the few.

Other entertainments in the week before Christmas are not many in number. There are still a few débutantes to bring out, and the receptions are not all over. Perhaps the most elaborate private entertainment will be that given by Mrs. George Crocker, 1 East Sixty-fourth Street, on Tuesday evening, which will take the form of a musicale. Mrs. Crocker's youngest daughter, the second Miss Rutherford, makes her début at this affair, and Mrs. Crocker's new home will be thrown open for the first time for the inspection of her many friends. The last touches were put upon the drawing room and the other handsome apartments during the week. Mrs. Crocker has employed wherever possible home talent, and her magnificent residence is a monument to the workmanship of New York artists and decorators. The musical part of the programme will be interpreted by such artists as Mme. Nevada and Signor Campanari. The former has been a personal friend of Mrs. Crocker, and was her guest on the first evening of the Horse Show.

On the same evening, Tuesday, the annual Christmas ball of the junior class of Columbia University will take place at Sherry's. This, with the Cendrillon dance at Sherry's, will constitute the list of larger entertainments for the week. Wednesday and Friday will both be fashionable nights at the opera, the latter especially so. Dinners will be given and there is a rumor that the dances known as "supper dances" will be revived by the set in which Mrs. John Jacob Astor and Mrs. Ogden Mills hold prominent positions.

Always about the last week in December Mrs. Astor begins her series of state dinners. She is followed by Mr. and Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry, who have always chosen Tuesdays for these entertainments, and Mrs. Townsend Burden. Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish and Mrs. John R. Drexel are both engaged in entertaining in this manner, and it would look as if the dinner would be the popular form of social amusement this Winter. At nearly all these dinners there are thirty or more guests, and there is also an orchestra and some vaudeville performers or individual singers or artistes. As nearly all the fashionable houses have private ballrooms attached, this form of entertainment becomes in reality a dinner dance, and has the supposed merit of being exclusive. Once during the season a larger entertainment is given and the entire visiting list is asked.

The past week was rich in its offering of débutantes. Yesterday there were almost numberless teas, and the Assembly showed an array of "buds" which was larger than in any former year. Many of the young women in a certain set which for years has been rather devoid of débutantes are still adjudged to be of the "awkward age," and will not be presented this Winter. Miss Nathalie Wells, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Storrs Wells; Miss Gwendolyn Burden, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Townsend Burden; the Misses Mills, the Misses Cryder, Miss Stewart, the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rhinelander Stewart; the Misses Bryce, Miss Kountze, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Luther Kountze, and Miss Jessie Sloane, the daughter of Mr. Henry Sloane, will wait until another Winter. There is yet another Miss Morton to come out, and there are three Vanderbilt débutantes, the Misses Twombly and Miss Webb, who, on account of mourning for the late Cornelius Vanderbilt, will wait also until the close of 1900 before entering society.

Among the possibilities of next Spring is a reunion of the Vanderbilt family abroad. Mr. and Mrs. H. McK. Twombly are contemplating an early start for Europe, and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt will be in Paris in the early Spring. Then Mr. William K. Vanderbilt and Mr. and Mrs. George Vanderbilt will also stop in the gay capital. At present the George Vanderbilts are entertaining at Biltmore, and Dr. and Mrs. Seward Webb leave there to-day after a week's sojourn for Shelburne Farms, where they will pass the Christmastide.

Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton McKay Twombly will leave this city next Friday for Biltmore, N. C., where they are to spend Christmas with Mr. and Mrs. George Vanderbilt. Dr. W. Seward Webb, Mrs. Webb, and family are spending this week at Biltmore, but owing to their own Christmas festival at Shelburne will be unable to spend the holidays with the Vanderbilts, and will return here next Tuesday and go at once to Shelburne, Vt. Mr. William K. Vanderbilt will leave Hot Springs, Ark., for this city on Sunday evening.

Mrs. George Gould will remain in town a few days longer until after the first night of the opera. Her private theatricals will take place, as announced already, at Georgian Court, Lakewood, on Thursday. Mrs. Gould was one of the guests at the Assembly ball on Thursday evening. It was really her first appearance in society this Winter, although she was at the Horse Show one afternoon.

One of the most enjoyable as well as the most brilliant entertainments ever given in New Haven took place last Tuesday evening in that city. Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Hotchkiss of 55 Hillhouse Avenue gave a ball to introduce their daughter, Miss Helen Hotchkiss, who has recently returned from an extended trip through Europe. The supper was furnished by Delmonico, and the numerous rooms in the Hotchkiss mansion, with their hundreds of American Beauty roses, were veritable conservatories. Mrs. Hotchkiss and her daughter received in the large west parlor of their old Colonial mansion. The spacious private ballroom at the north end was given over to dancing. Music was furnished by a Hungarian band from New York. Mrs. Hotchkiss wore a beautiful gown of yellow satin and white crepe, while Miss Hotchkiss's frock was of white embroidered in silver. Among the many present were President Hadley and Mrs. Hadley of Yale College, ex-President and Mrs. Dwight, Dr. and Mrs. Bacon, Prof. Fisher, Dr. and Mrs. Godfrey Dunscomb, Mrs. Henry Trowbridge, Mr. T. Hunt, Mrs. W. K. Townsend, Miss Townsend, Miss Gillett, Mr. and Mrs. Justus Hotchkiss, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Whitney, Mrs. Duer, Mr. Horace Brookes of New York, Mrs. James Trowbridge, Mrs. Ingersoll, Miss Robinson, and Mrs. Stephen Phillips. The engagement of Miss Hotchkiss and Mr. E. E. Garrison of the Yale class of '97 has just been announced.

Mr. and Mrs. Prescott Lawrence, who sailed for Europe on Wednesday, will remain away from Newport for a year or perhaps longer. Mr. Lawrence will be greatly missed from the Reading Room and the Horse Show next Summer. Work has begun on the handsome cottage for Mrs. Edith Pomeroy on Ocean Avenue, Newport, and early next Summer it will be ready for occupancy. A feature is to be the large ballroom. The Hon Sidney Webster and Mrs. Webster have closed their Newport cottage and are in New York for the Winter, with Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Fish Webster. During their absence a large force of men will make elaborate improvements to the Webster estate on Harrison Avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward T. Potter have decided to remain at their Newport cottage for the Winter. Mrs. Robert Garrett of Baltimore, who recently purchased the Travers estate on Narragansett Avenue, Newport, has decided to expend a large sum of money on her new purchase for improving and enlarging the estate. Mrs. Frank Foster, a sister of Mrs. Garrett, has begun extensive improvements to the Ledyard estate on Catherine Street, Newport, which she purchased a short while ago. The members of the Hill Colony at Newport arrange theatre parties for every performance which occurs at the opera house there, whether it is a cheap company or the Frohman attractions, two of which visited Newport during the week.

An entertainment for children will be given under the auspices of the New York Exchange for Women's Work, on the afternoon of Dec. 28, at Wallack's Theatre. Trained animals, ventriloquists, and prestidigitateurs will furnish all kinds of amusement for the little folks. A similar entertainment given during the holidays last year was a great success. The proceeds of the affair will go toward the running expenses of the exchange.

The Cinderella cotillions will hold the first dance of their fourth season at Dodworth's on Thursday evening, Dec. 28. The patronesses are Mrs. Thomas Dimond, Mrs. Horace S. Ely, Mrs. George Pryor Johnson, Mrs. David Olyphant Haynes, Mrs. James Baird, Mrs. Ebenezer Sturges Mason, Mrs. William A. Parke, Mrs. Arthur L. Root, Mrs. James K. O. Sherwood, Mrs. Charles H. Van Brunt, and Mrs. S. Charles Welsh.

It has been another gay week for both the débutante and her chaperon in Baltimore. The entertainments, however, are still more for the younger members of society, and it will not be until after the holidays that the older women will come to the front, and with their dinners and luncheons ignore the young maidens. On Monday, as there was no cotillion, a number of people gave box parties, either followed by suppers or preceded by dinners. The Ross Winans had a small party at the Academy. Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Brown were among their guests. The Robinsons always go Mondays when there is no cotillion, and Mrs. Robinson had quite a party with her, principally her daughters, single and married. Afterward they gave a small supper at their house, on Park Avenue. Their guests then were Mrs. Van Bibber, Miss Mary Winter Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Ramsay Barry, and Mr. Winchester. Mr. and Mrs. Ral Paar are at last going to start on their wedding trip, and will go to California soon for a visit of several weeks.

The death of Mrs. Gilmor Meredith in Baltimore, following that of her husband so soon, is very sad, and quite breaks up the old Meredith home, Miss Emma Meredith being the only one of the family now remaining. The Merediths are relatives of the New York Howlands, and also of Mrs. Grinnell in New York. Mr. and Mrs. Francis M. Jencks are not going out this Winter, on account of the death of their youngest child this past Summer. They are, however, again at their home, on Mount Vernon Place, after an absence of several months in New York State. A marriage in January of interest to many people will be that of Mr. Johnson Poe and Miss Sadie Cromwell of Frostburg, Md. Mr. Poe, like all his brothers, was a great football player, and is also a Princeton graduate.

Mrs. David Stewart of Baltimore is now in Rome with her sister, Mme. Pangirus Bey. Later on Mr. Stewart will join her, and they will visit Count and Countess Ida Conturbia, at their place at Milan. Harry Lehr is spending more time than usual in Baltimore this Winter. Mrs. Lehr and Miss Frances Lehr are at home to their friends informally on Sunday afternoons. A number of women now take Sunday afternoons as their reception hours. Among others then found at home are Mrs. Wilson Patterson, the Misses Robinson, Mrs. Ross Whistler, Miss Mary Winter Davis, Miss Boone, Mrs. McDowell, and the Misses Lee.

Sunday afternoon teas at the Baltimore Country Club are a favorite mode of entertaining there this season. The Misses Boone will give one this Sunday afternoon in honor of Miss Agnes Repplier, the writer. Mrs. I. Ridgeway Trimble gave the first of a series of at homes on Tuesday afternoon. Mrs. Trimble was Miss Margaret Jones of New York, and married Dr. Trimble here a year ago. She is much liked in Baltimore society, and has been entertained a great deal since her marriage. Another New York woman popular in Baltimore society is Mrs. W. R. K. Taylor (née Miss Sarah Hard.) Last year Mr. and Mrs. Taylor spent in New York, but have finally decided to make this city their home, and have bought an attractive house on Charles Street, which they will occupy before long.

The most notable social event in Baltimore this past week was the Clinton Paines entertainment at Lehman's Hall on Thursday in honor of their débutante daughter, Miss Mabel Paine. First there was a reception for all the members of society, old and young, quiet and conservative. This lasted from 9 until 11. At 11 came the younger set, girls, men, and married people for the cotillion and supper. Everybody was there at one or the other of the entertainments, and the affair was a great success. Mrs. Paine was Miss McCreary.

There are two New York girls in Baltimore this week—Miss Eleanor Anderson, who is visiting Miss Jean Clark and who has been at many entertainments, and Miss Colt, who is visiting Miss Marie Louise Schermerhorn. Miss Schermerhorn's family on her father's side are New Yorkers, but have lived here for quite a while. Mrs. Howard Munnikhuysen will give a large reception on New Year's, and later in January will give a ball for Miss Lily Munnikhuysen, her débutante daughter. The James Garys intend to give a domino ball on the 4th of January. Mr. and Mrs. Gustave Lurman have taken an apartment in Baltimore this season. Their daughters, the Misses Frances and Katherine Lurman, have returned recently from Jersey City, where they have been visiting their sister, Mrs. George Blow.

Most of the Tuxedoites spent the week in town, but the beautiful weather of yesterday brought many back to pass Sunday at the clubs. Mr. and Mrs. P. Lorillard, Jr., gave a large dinner at their cottage Sunday evening last in honor of Miss Cora Randolph and her fiancé, Mr. Richard Trimble. Mrs. F. O. French and her daughter, who have been spending a few weeks at Tuxedo with Amos T. French, sailed for Europe on Tuesday.

After the holidays the headquarters of the Tuxedoites will be at the new Winter clubhouse. The main clubhouse will be closed and thoroughly repaired, and many improvements will be made. E. H. Miles of England, champion tennis player of the world, is laying out the new courts at the Tennis Club preparatory to the opening on New Year's Day. Mrs. Nicholas Fish is having erected at the north entrance of Tuxedo Park a library and public bath, to be dedicated to the memory of her son, Hamilton Fish, Jr., who was killed at Santiago. A marble slab has been received from a sculptor in New York, and placed in the building, with the inscription, "In Loving Memory of Hamilton Fish, Jr., Sergeant U. S. Vol. Cavalry, Killed in Battle June 24, 1898." The building is of brick, 20 by 30 feet.

A BUSY DAY IN SOCIETY.

Mr. John D. Crimmins gave a coming-out reception yesterday at his residence, 40 East Sixty-eighth Street, for his daughter, Miss Mary Crimmins. Mrs. Lalor, aunt of the débutante, and her sister, Mrs. Albert Gould Jennings, received with her. Miss Crimmins wore an unusually pretty gown of white crêpe de chine. The floral decorations were elaborate and extremely beautiful. In one room American Beauty roses were used, in another delicate pink bridesmaid roses, and in another exquisite orchids, while delicate sprays of rare Southern blooms, ordered from the South by Hanft Brothers especially for this occasion, gave a unique touch to the decorations. The music rendered was unusually fine. The reception was very largely attended.

At the coming-out reception yesterday of Miss Edith Carpender, daughter of Mr. William Carpender of 16 East Fortieth Street, there assisted the débutante in receiving, besides Miss Catherine C. Crosby, the Misses Mary Wagstaff, Ethel Du Bois, Harriet C. Delafield, Amy G. Olyphant, Louise Gallatin, Mathilde Leverich of Corona, L. I., Clara R. Bradford, and Anna K. Carpender of New Brunswick, N. J. Miss Carpender's gown was of white silk, with satin stripes, and was trimmed with lace and chiffon. Her flowers were pink roses.

Mrs. Spencer Aldrich of 271 West Seventy-second Street gave at her residence yesterday a coming-out reception for her daughter, Miss Louise Aldrich. The Misses Meissner, Eleanor Duffield, Helen Peabody, Grace Lee Smidt, Helen Cornelia Merrill, and Miss Jeffords of Philadelphia received with Miss Aldrich. The débutante's gown was of white net over white liberty satin elaborately trimmed with scroll work of satin ribbons, chiffon, and fringe. Her flowers were pink roses. Mrs. Aldrich was in black net over satin, with chiffon trimmings and jet garniture.

Mrs. Henry Colt Mortimer of 54 West Twenty-first Street gave the second of two coming-out receptions for her daughter, Miss Mary Mortimer, yesterday afternoon. The first took place on Friday. Miss Mortimer was assisted by Miss Ballou of Providence, R. I., and Miss Dora Chew of Orange, N. J. The débutante's gown was of white mousseline de soie and chiffon. Mrs. Mortimer wore a gown of black lace over black satin. The reception was followed by a small dinner.

Mr. and Mrs. John H. Screven gave yesterday at their residence, 40 West Thirty-ninth Street, a coming-out reception for their granddaughter, Miss Ellen W. Turnbull. Miss Turnbull's mother, Mrs. Robert J. Turnbull, being in mourning, her grandparents gave the reception. Miss Turnbull wore white crêpe de chine, with cream lace trimmings; her flowers were pink roses. Her aunt, Mrs. Lorillard, was in gray cloth, with turquois blue, and Mrs. Screven wore a handsome black costume. The young women who assisted in receiving were the Misses Sarah Fuller, Josephine Williams, Ethel Davies, Edith Thompson, Miss Penrose of Philadelphia, Miss Alice Colgate of Flushing, Miss Josephine Ogden, and the Misses Vernam.

Mrs. David McClure of 22 West Forty-ninth Street gave a coming-out reception yesterday for her daughter, Miss Katharine McClure. Those who assisted in receiving were the Misses Ella de Peyster, Miss Daisy McClure, Miss Edna Loew, Miss Lulu Grace, Miss Grace Hoag, and Miss Madge Niles. The débutante wore a gown of white chiffon, trimmed with Chantilly lace and spangled with silver. Miss Daisy McClure wore a gown of white guipure cloth over white silk, and Mrs. McClure's costume was pale blue crêpe de chine, with trimmings of white lace, and her ornaments were diamonds and pearls. The reception, which was a large one, was followed by a dinner of twenty-six covers.

Miss Elsie Schefer, who was given yesterday a coming-out tea by her mother, Mrs. Carl Schefer, of 40 West Thirty-seventh Street, was assisted in receiving by the Misses Trowbridge, Edwards, Beatrice Bonner, Marguerite Chapin, Edith Kohlsaat, Charlotte Hegeman, Mathilde Van Rensselaer, Amy Ellis, and her sister, Miss Schefer.

Mrs. Thomas Powell Fowler of 39 East Sixty-eighth Street gave yesterday a coming-out reception for her daughter, Miss Isabel Wilson Fowler. There assisted Miss Fowler in receiving the Misses Emily Hoagland, Edith Talcott, Marguerite Quackenbush, Aurelia Roe, Elsie Todd, and Miss De La Vergne. Miss Fowler's costume was white point d'esprit over white satin. Her sister, Miss Ruth Fowler, wore white lace over pink, and Mrs. Fowler's gown was black lace over green.

Another of yesterday's coming-out teas was that of Mrs. William A. Jenner of 125 East Sixtieth Street, given for her daughter, Miss Anna J. Jenner. The débutante was assisted in receiving by her sisters, Miss Jenner and Miss Sara Jenner, and the Misses Gertrude von Briesen, Anne Biddle McIlvaine, Mildred Dix, Isabel Curtis, Florence Cragin, and Miss Mead. The débutante wore a simple gown of white chiffon over white silk. Miss Jenner wore a white taffeta silk, trimmed with tulle and black velvet. Miss Sara Jenner was in a pearl-gray crêpe de chine, with trimmings of black velvet and lace, and Mrs. Jenner wore a gown of pale gray bengaline, with cream lace.

At the tea given by Mrs. Laura Riddle Green of 80 Madison Avenue for her daughter, Miss Laura T. Green, the Misses Mary Field, Eleanor Green, Lucy Froment, Eleanor Phelps, Daisy Stedman, and Alice Davis assisted in receiving. The reception was followed by a dinner for the débutantes only, and later by a dance for about sixty. On Monday evening there will be a second dance for the same number of the débutante's friends. Miss Green wore a princess gown of white panne velvet with touches of white lace; her flowers were pink roses. Mrs. Green was gowned in pink brocade.

A large dinner was given last evening by Mr. and Mrs. David McClure at their residence, 22 West Forty-ninth Street, for their débutante daughter, Miss Katharine F. McClure. Among those present were Miss Daisy McClure, Miss Ella de Peyster, Miss Grace, Miss Charlotte Whiting, Miss Cecil Boardman, Miss Emily Trowbridge, Miss Niles, Miss Loew, and Miss Hoag; the Messrs. J. Philip Benkard, Stephen Pell, Lawrence Atterbury, Harry Cleveland, J. P. Grace, Lawrence Elliman, the Hon. C. Hanbury Tracey, Reginald Thompson, and Alfred Maclay. The dinner was followed by a small dance.

The Knickerbocker dances are to be held at Delmonico's on Jan. 5 and 25, Feb. 13 and March 8, respectively. The Friday evening Assembly dances, which were also to be held at Delmonico's, have been merged into the Knickerbocker, and the patronesses of this last series have become associate patronesses of the Knickerbocker. The Knickerbocker patronesses began sending out invitations after Thanksgiving, and on Dec. 1 had received 150 acceptances. These dances are to be held in the large ballroom. A new feature is that tables are to be reserved for those who care to play whist or hearts. There are many young married people as well as maidens and men among the subscribers. The patronesses are Mesdames Henry Clarke Coe, George Browne Hurd, Charles S. Jenkins, James Russell, Henry Bramble Wilson, Albert Effingham Lawrence, Jahial Parmly, George Wallace Jarman, Frank E. Barker, and Edward Davis Jones. The associate patronesses are Mesdames Wendell S. Phillips, John Van Nostrand, Richard B. Leake, James F. Secor, Jr., Manning K. Eyre, James G. Wentz, and Edgar L. Marston.

Mrs. Francis Schroeder of 816 Madison Avenue gave a reception yesterday afternoon at her residence for her daughter, Mrs. Charles H. Stout, formerly Miss Henrietta Schroeder, who was married last year.

SOCIETY NOTES.

Miss Blum of 5 East Seventy-third Street will be at home on Wednesdays in February.

Mrs. Charles Gulden, Mrs. Alfred M. Snedeker, Miss Gulden, and Miss Margaret Gulden received yesterday afternoon at 15 East Eighty-third Street.

The engagement is announced of Mr. Joseph W. Strauss and Miss Jennie R. Stern. They will receive at 153 East Seventy-fourth Street on Sunday, Dec. 24.

Mrs. Gustave M. Minzesheimer, who has recently returned from her wedding tour, has moved into her apartments, 1,215 Madison Avenue, and will be at home to her friends Fridays in December.

Grace Church chantry on Thursday evening last was crowded at the wedding of Miss Mary Townsend of Staten Island and Mr. Isaac Everson Winslow of London, England. The groom is a native of Brooklyn; was educated at the Polytechnic Institute, and took up electrical traction as a profession. Mr. and Mrs. Winslow sailed for England yesterday on the Lucania to occupy their home in London.

Mrs. Henry Bramble Wilson of 37 West Eighty-sixth Street gave a large reception yesterday afternoon, at which the engagement of her daughter, Miss Ella Willard Wilson, to Mr. Paul Comstock, of Richmond, Ind., was announced. Mrs. Wilson was assisted in receiving by her daughters, Mrs. Reid Fell and the Misses Wilson, Miss Edna Smith, Miss Mabel Potter, Miss Helen Palmer, Miss Gertrude Chase, Miss Florence Wilson, Miss Katharine North, Miss May Rogers, Miss Ray Russell, Miss Stella Somers, Miss Edna Schuyler, Miss Mabel Croll, and Mrs. J. De Linet Maguire.

Recent letters from London tell of the unusual success there—social and musical—of Mr. Louis A. Von Gaertner, well known in New York and Bar Harbor. He has been visiting or dining with Lord and Lady Suffield, Mrs. Derek Keppel, Lady Musgrave, Miss Elizabeth Green, Lord and Lady Ernest Hamilton, the Henry M. Stanleys, the Tennants, Lady Randolph Churchill, and her sisters, Mrs. Jack Leslie, and Mrs. Moreton Frewen. He was lately made a member of the new Bath Club, having been proposed by the Duke of Abercorn, and seconded by Mr. Willie Grenfell of Taplen Court.

FASHIONS FOR MEN.

The Latest Things in Bathrobes, Dressing Gowns, Lounge Coats, Overcoats and Mufflers.

The set rules and unbreakable laws upon men's dress make the slight diversion that is allowed in bathrobes, room jackets, &c., all the more interesting. This season the bath robes are prettier than ever. There is a chocolate shade of elderdown, reversible with blue, that is particularly good. The edges are bound with brown satin ribbon. The cut and style are about the same as last year. A broad collar finishes the neck. Two pockets and a cord with tassels at the end are the only addition to an otherwise perfectly plain, loose garment. Some of the checker-board effects are also smart.

A handsome dressing gown was brought from Russia not long ago by a well-known man to be utilized for reading when the wee small hours found him still up and the temperature of the house had become chilly. The lining is of well-matched baby leopard skins, as is the deep collar and Russian cuffs, while the outside is positively barbaric in its gorgeousness. A pale olive green background is covered with large disks and figures of yellow, white, green, and crimson silk that form a bewildering mass of color. The length and cut are that of a regular bathrobe. A heavy silk cord and tassel, combining the different colors, belts in the waist and holds the robe snugly about the figure.

A new idea which is being adopted by some of the fashionable tailors is to have buttons on the sleeves of lounge coats, and linked instead of buttoned. The advantage is that the linen cuff, which naturally fastens in the same way, fits better than when the coat cuff is confined in the old-fashioned way.

Fur-lined coats are finding their way about as the mercury drops. There is little difference in them from those of other years. Perhaps they are not quite so long, and a decided preference is shown for Persian lamb collars and cuffs, although seal is gaining in favor. Paddock and kennel coats are waning in favor. The Raglan is accepted in preference to the Inverness for evening wear. The Chesterfield is being cut more to the figure, and a smart effect can be had by having the coat made of treble mill cheviot.

There are many silk mufflers from which to select. The best are of solid color, in basket weaves, or heavy silks, perhaps with a narrow or thread stripe of black silk. These scarfs, which are known as neckerchiefs, entirely cross the shirt front, and can be bought in a number of the best shops. Very soft cashmere kerchiefs or scarfs are also good form, as well as comfortable, and less expensive than the silk.

NATIONAL GUARD NOTES.

The annual convention of the National Guard Association of New York will be held in Albany on Jan. 24 next, and promises to be of exceptional interest. There are a number of amendments to the Military Code to be offered. One amendment is that the laborers in armories located in cities be allowed $2.50 per day instead of $2, as at present. They have a great deal of work to do, and are on duty a great many hours, and the pay they receive at present is insufficient. Another amendment is that troops and batteries be allowed $500 per year more for horse hire than they are now receiving. The present allowance is inadequate, and to meet the demands of the service the members have to draw upon their own pockets to defray the expense. There will also be an amendment relating to the appointment of staff officers, and it will be recommended that an officer can be appointed on a staff who has had one year's experience in the military service at any time. As the clause in the code now reads, an officer must have had one year's experience "immediately" preceding his appointment. This word frequently prevents the appointment of very desirable officers and, it is held, should be eliminated.

The old rumor that Camp Black on Long Island was to be used as a drill ground for the National Guard in place of the Peekskill Camp has been revived the past week, and it was stated that General Headquarters had practically decided to abandon Peekskill. Major Gen. Roe says there is nothing in the rumor, and that no such proposition is being considered.

The bill which Major Gen. Butterfield intends to introduce in Congress, which in brief makes the National Guard a reserve regular army and puts it directly in control of the War Department, is held by officers of the Guard who are conversant with the needs and the best interests of the force to be an impracticable scheme. As one prominent officer put it: "You cannot get young men who have to work for a living to enlist in any force which would require them to leave their work from two to three weeks at a time, or longer, for drilling purposes under direction of the War Department. It is hard enough now to get citizen soldiers to give up one week every two years for camp. Then, again, suppose Congress were to appropriate two or three million dollars per annum for a National militia force, it wouldn't allow the men more than $6 or $7 a year, and it would be a very poor and unreliable element that would enlist for such a recompense. You cannot make soldiers to act as a reserve regular army by two or three weeks' drill per year. The best plan, in the opinion of practical officers who have made a study of the matter is that the status of the National Guard should first be defined. The Guard is a valuable force to the Government as well as to the State. In case of great emergency the President should be empowered to order it into service while volunteers are organizing, and doubtless many valuable officers could be selected from its ranks. If desired for the United States service, however, these officers say, there should be no volunteering by organizations, but the President should order such as he desires into the service.

Capt. J. N. Hegeman of Gen. Smith's staff has returned from a very successful and enjoyable hunting trip in the West, which he made with Major Gen. Miles, Major Black, Surgeon Daly, United States Army; Col. W. F. Cody, (Buffalo Bill,) Lieut. Jacobus, Second Battery, and others. The party bagged considerable game, including antelope and deer, and Capt. Hegeman brings home among his trophies a splendid specimen of the bald eagle. The Captain also says that on one ride out in the timber reserve in Wyoming he received a copy of THE NEW YORK TIMES, brought to him by Jesse Nelson, the mail carrier, who had journeyed 125 miles from Red Lodge. "I can assure you, THE TIMES was a very welcome visitor, and was greatly in demand by the entire party," said the Captain.

The members of the Twenty-second Regiment and its friends are looking forward with considerable anticipation to the review of the regiment to be held at the armory next Thursday night, at which Gov. Roosevelt will be the reviewing officer. He will be accompanied by his staff and a large number of prominent military men will be among the guests. Following the review there will be a reception. This will be the first appearance of the Twenty-second in an armory ceremony since its muster out of the volunteer service and an excellent military display is looked forward to. Capt. Bell will have the Chinese Consul and his suite as his guests during the review. Company F will hold an entertainment in January next. Whether it will be a stag or a dance will be decided later. Company K has unanimously elected Second Lieut. Walter E. Harding First Lieutenant. He is very highly spoken of, and has been a member of the regiment for four years. Quartermaster Sergt. McElroy of Company D has applied for his discharge after eight years' service, and his comrades are endeavoring to persuade him to remain with them for eight years longer. Company K had a very enjoyable stag at an outside resort last Thursday. Company D has postponed its dance until after the holidays. In the same company Lieut. Schonberg, recently elected, has received his commission, and Privates H. B. Lewis, E. L. Knight, and Donald Campbell have been promoted Corporals. Sergt. J. M. Wilson has won the Bell medal for 1900 for superior shooting on the armory range.

Brig. Gen. George Moore Smith will review the Seventy-first Regiment at its armory next Tuesday night. This will be the first appearance of Col. William D. Bates in command of the Seventy-first since he has been commissioned Colonel. Judging from the preliminary drill of the regiment last Tuesday night the ceremonies of the evening will be very interesting. The regimental band under Prof. Fanciulli will furnish the music. There will be dancing after the military ceremony. Immediately after the review medals for long and faithful service given by the State will be presented to the following members of the regiment: Twenty Years' Service—Sergt. Major Joseph J. Adgate, non-commissioned staff; Private William J. Burt, Company K; Fifteen Years'—Capt. Anthony J. Bleecker, Company G; Capt. John W. Dowling, staff; Capt. John H. Whittle, Company A; Second Lieut. William C. Garthwaite, Company F; Battalion Quartermaster Sergt. John H. Beatty, non-commissioned staff; Ten Years'—Capt. William R. Hill, Company E; Capt. Arthur Lester Robertson, Company C; First Lieut. Herbert H. True, Company L; Second Lieut. Frederick H. Weyman, Company B; First Sergt. George B. Young, Company I; First Sergt. William F. Weiss, Company A; Sergt. Oscar Bruckheimer, Company C; Sergt. Arthur L. Canterbury, Hospital Corps; Sergt. Charles H. Ryer, Company C; Sergt. James E. Carroll, Company B; Sergt. James C. Rodgers, Company C; Corp. Edward Doty, Company D; Corp. William M. Merriam, Company C; Private Paul C. Masterstieg, Company A; Private John E. Jefferson, Hospital Corps; Private David Broder, Company I; Private George S. Andrews, Company E. Col. Bates, in an order assuming command of the regiment, says that in so doing he is fully aware of the great responsibilities that devolve upon a commanding officer of a regiment, and appreciates the high honor that has been conferred upon him in being the unanimous choice of the officers of this regiment for its Colonel, and that it will be his constant endeavor to promote and advance the best interests and prosperity of the regiment.

The election of a Lieutenant Colonel and Major of the Seventy-first Regiment, shortly to be held, is exciting considerable speculation as to who the lucky men will be. The Captains who are next in the line of promotion are J. H. Wells, W. H. Linson, and W. L. Hazen, and it is thought that all three of them may appear in the field as candidates. It is also said to be possible that some outside candidate may be chosen by the committee. The committee of Captains appointed to report upon the candidates are Capts A. J. Bleeker, L. W. McLeod, A. L. Robertson, W. R. Hill, E. B. Bruch, A. S. Williams, and D. L. Hough.

Brig. Gen. Smith of the Fifth Brigade intends to take a leave as soon as he can get away, and he hopes this will be before the new year. The General, who will be accompanied by his family, may visit among other places Puerto Rico and Mexico.

The recent lecture on rifle practice to the officers and men of the Eighth Regiment by Col. N. B. Thurston of Gen. Roe's staff proved so interesting and instructive that he will probably repeat it before several other organizations. The only trouble is that the Colonel has received so many invitations that he hardly knows how he can accept them all.

So rapid has been the work of the Department of Rifle Practice under the direction of Col. Thurston that all the State marksman's badges won by members of the Guard the past season will be distributed by Jan. 15 next. Another fact worthy of note is that all organizations in the Guard, including the artillery, practiced rifle firing at outdoor ranges.

Col. Jarvis of the Eighth Regiment has decided to parade his command at the armory for review on or about Dec. 28. Company C will give a ball at Turn Hall, Eighty-fifth Street and Lexington Avenue, to-morrow night. The rifle range of the regiment has been open for nearly a month. Improvements are being made, and under the supervision of Major William H. Romer, the I. S. A. P., and his assistant, Capt. George L. Baker, some excellent practice scores have already been made.

Surgeon Emmet of the Sixty-ninth Regiment has been appointed a member of the Fifth Brigade Examining Board.

Major Gen. Daniel Butterfield will review the Twelfth Regiment at its armory on Thursday evening, Dec. 28, and a dance will follow the military exercises. The veteran organization of the Twelfth will be present on the occasion. Shooting in the armory range is interesting the members of the regiment, and some excellent scores are being made. Company C has been doing very good work, and up to last Monday night had qualified twenty-three marksmen and three sharpshooters. Sergt. W. S. Lamb has qualified as an expert.

Col. Alexis C. Smith of the Twenty-third Regiment, who has announced his intention of resigning, will hand in his resignation at a meeting of the Board of Officers on Jan. 8. Col. Smith, in announcing his projected retirement, desired to give his command ample notice in order to avoid confusion, and so that the administration of the regiment would not be impaired. Col. Smith has been a member of the Twenty-third for close on twenty-four years and is a highly esteemed and capable officer. It is uncertain who will succeed him.

Col. Austen, since assuming command of the Thirteenth Regiment, has lost no time in mapping out work for his officers and men, and in a lengthy order announces dates for various drills and other details of instruction and duties incumbent on members. The regiment is ordered to assemble in dress uniform for review and parade on Wednesday evening, Dec. 27. Except for the review ordered

ECHOES FROM THE LINKS

Golf in the South Showing Up with More Activity.

TROUBLE ON STATEN ISLAND

Cricket Club May Move Permanently to Fox Hills — Temperance Women Against Sunday Play in Chicago.

Indications that the golf fever is running more to the South are becoming clearly apparent every week. The excellent turn-out on the Atlantic City links during the last three days shows that the golfing fraternity is willing to travel, provided there is a guarantee of good and well-managed sport. As its initial open tournament the Atlantic City Country Club put forth its ablest efforts, and the result was highly satisfactory to the host and those entertained. Herbert M. Harriman, the amateur champion, was not present, but the former champion, Findlay Douglas, was in the lists, fresh from his victory at Lakewood, and, as was expected, he qualified among the first set, although W. H. Davis of the Lakewood Club won the gold medal for the lowest qualifying score. The season, thus ably opened, at Atlantic City will be continued with activity throughout the Winter, and a number of events will be given.

On the far Southern links at Aiken, S. C., and Florida, golfers are appearing in larger numbers. At the country club at Jacksonville a championship tournament has been in progress, some of the well-known Southern golfers trying for honors being C. B. Cory, B. H. Barnett, Isaac Brereton, W. M. Bostwick, Jr., and M. G. Macdonald. This Jacksonville course is the largest and one of the best in the State. The old nine holes have been enlarged for the present season to a playing distance of 2,600 yards, nearly 500 yards longer than last year. Oscar Bunn, the professional, holds the record for the old course at 75 strokes. A mixed foursome match played last week had eighteen competitors, and Mr. and Mrs. M. G. Macdonald won, beating the second pair by one stroke.

Coming home to our local links, while there has been nothing startling of a competitive character, there have been several internal club questions of more than ordinary moment. These have chiefly been confined to the Staten Island Cricket and Harbor Hill Golf Clubs. The latter has not yet entirely recovered from the complication of having its own member, J. A. Janin, Jr., win the championship of the island, an event which the Directors refused to sanction for various reasons, one being because it was played on Sunday on the Fox Hills links. A meeting of the board was held last week to determine how the club would meet this peculiar difficulty, but evidently the troubles are not wholly eradicated, for the only news given was, "nothing done."

The proposed change of its entire club plant from Livingston, the long-settled home of the Cricket Club, to the headquarters at Fox Hills has given the members something of lively interest to talk about. The new golf links and house at Fox Hills have practically drained the Livingston Clubhouse of its former activity, many faces being seen no more in their old accustomed haunts. The club hardly feels able to maintain two establishments, and, in view of the recent fire in the Cricket Clubhouse, a considerable sum of money would have to be spent to put the place in first-class condition, if the club intended to remain there. The Fox Hills property offers ample room for tennis and a cricket field, and the entire club will probably be removed there at an early date. The change illustrates very sharply the immense success that golf has given many clubs, and it is golf that is really leading the entire Cricket Club to move to new quarters. The name Staten Island Cricket and Baseball Club seems almost a misnomer in view of the bad second these sports are to golf.

With an open Christmas on local links, a few club handicaps will be in order. The Nassau Country Club of Glen Cove has already announced Christmas events for Classes A, B, and C. That all-Winter competitions will be encouraged is seen from the presentation of three cups by Leonard J. Busby for December, January, and February events. Plans are under way to make Winter features of hockey, skating, and curling, and a Shooting Committee has just been organized of Howard W. Maxwell, Horatio M. Adams, Donald J. Geddes, and W. Burling Cocks.

The old St. Andrew's Club held its annual meeting last week at Delmonico's, and re-elected J. B. Thomas, President, and the other officers as follows: Vice President—R. H. Robertson; Secretary—Harry Holbrook, Jr.; Treasurer—W. E. Hodgman; Captain—John Reid, Jr.

In Philadelphia the season practically came to a close with the completion of two important championship tournaments. One was for the women's team championship of the Quaker City. The Merion and Philadelphia Country Club teams were tied for this honor, and the deciding game was held on the neutral links of the Huntington Valley Country Club. Merion won by 19 holes to 8, her team being a strong one, consisting of Miss Francis C. Griscom, Miss Elsie F. Cassatt, Mrs. R. H. Barlow, Miss McNeely, Miss K. K. S. Cassatt, and Mrs. J. B. Farnum. Miss Edith Burt was captain of the Country Club team, and her contest with Miss Griscom was one of the most spirited matches in the game, the latter winning by one hole. This is the second year that the Merion Club has held the championship of the Women's Golf Association of Philadelphia.

The other big event was F. H. Bohlen's victory of the individual championship of the Philadelphia Country Club. Bohlen about a month ago won the championship of all Philadelphia. In the final round for his club honor he met H. M. Forrest, and they had one of the hottest games of the season. Thirty-six holes were played, Bohlen led by 1 at the end of the first 18 and won the match on the thirty-sixth green by that narrow margin.

While the annual statistics of a golf club may not add much importance to the annals of the game, such figures are interesting to the members, and serve to keep interest alive in the club's career. Some clubs at the end of each season prepare a comprehensive list showing just how many matches have been played and the best scores made during the season. The Brae Burn Club, near Boston, is one of the latest to add its statistics to the general list, and a very interesting golf history it shows. The club played 18 games of a total number of 1,836 holes, winning 10 with 952 holes and losing 8 with 884 holes. W. B. Merrill won more games than any other member, and Charles J. Travelli, the new club champion, came second. Herbert C. Perkins made the best gross score during the year, 85 strokes, the bogey being 90; but the latter figure was only beaten twice, and both times by Perkins. Mrs. W. M. Phelps won the women's championship.

The Yountakah Country Club, near Nutley, which has begun its golfing career in a very successful manner, has recently secured a license for the club's house, and the additional and warming conveniences that are now offered are found to be very beneficial toward the encouragement of Winter golf. Winter golf, as every devotee of the sport well knows, is played as much within the narrow confines of the club's café as it is upon frozen and partially snowclad links. Sometimes it has even happened that the time spent over friendly but nevertheless heated discussions over "What I did and what you didn't do" is greatly in excess over the real game in the open air. The golfer, however, has justified himself as appearing on the links in Winter, and he is charged with a few new experiences to dole out at forthcoming dinners. The Yountakah course will be kept open throughout the season, and the course has been well crowded during the recent Saturdays.

The Brookline Country Club, near Boston, has closed its golf course for the Winter, and the annual meeting held last week at the Parker House was one of the most satisfactory in the club's history. Golf was responsible for a large part of the liquidation of the eighteen-thousand-dollar debt. Francis W. Lee was re-elected Treasurer, and the Executive Committee for the new year consists of Arthur W. Stedman, George E. Cabot, Sewall H. Fessenden, and B. S. Blanchard. G. H. Windeler was Secretary of the Golf Committee, and he has been almost swamped with compliments from his golfing friends and admirers. The new eighteen-hole course has been very popular, and has stimulated golf activity to a larger degree than ever before.

The Elkridge Golf Club of Baltimore, which was organized almost year ago by some of the golfing members of the famous Elkridge Kennels, has just closed a very successful season, but will keep its course open with temporary greens all Winter. Encouraged by its success the Golf Committee is arranging a more elaborate plan for next year. Nearly 100 members who actually play the game are on the club list. T. Courtney Jenkins, the sixteen-year-old Baltimorean, who defeated Findlay Douglas last Spring, was beaten on handicap allowance in the final Elkridge tournament by Donnell Swann. The latter was allowed five strokes, and he beat Jenkins by 3 up and 1 to play. N. W. Williams took the Consolation Cup.

Secretary Robert B. Kerr of the United States Golf Association was somewhat surprised to read the other day, chiefly in out-of-town papers, the full programme of next year's National championships. Some golf prophet, he stated, smiling, had evidently attempted to forestall the action of the delegates to the annual meeting in February, when the localities for the big games will probably be chosen. It is "probably," because last year the entire matter was shifted off to the Executive Committee, but indications point to a return of selection by the delegates themselves. To return to the prophetic utterances, Garden City is set down for the amateur championship, the Chicago Golf Club for the open, and Myopia for the women's event, the latter being announced as follows:

"It is on the card to award the women's championship to the Myopia Hunt and Country Club of Boston, but if the association desires to make a popular change in the women's they will hold it during the month of June instead of October, when the Myopia course would have even greater difficulties to overcome than confronted the Bala people this year, when the Fall grass, that is so prevalent there after the early part of September, is even more of a curse around Boston and is the bane of all golfers."

As an official Secretary Kerr, of course, has "nothing to say," but it is quite likely that the amateur event for Garden City is not a surprise. Naturally, a good deal depends upon the new hotel, for that is relied upon to furnish the much-needed accommodations.

The Sunday golf question still continues to be a disturbing subject in many localities. "It is rather strange," remarked a golfer, "that the Sunday feature in the game has come up now, when the season's sport has run its course, and the inducements to play on Sunday are not as alluring as was the case in milder weather."

It is a trifle curious, that's a fact, yet paragraphs continue to appear in many papers throughout the country showing that several clubs are passing through the agonies of whether "to play or not to play" on the Sabbath. The Women's Christian Temperance Union of Chicago has addressed the officers of the Chicago Golf Club, beseeching them to close their links on Sunday, for its moral effect, and also as a preventive toward leading sundry caddies into temptation, who for paltry financial gain are willing to make various Sunday schools suffer through lack of their attendance. It is said that this action by the Chicago body may be taken up on a broader scale by the Women's Christian Temperance Union in a crusade against Sunday golf throughout the country.

In New Haven a pastor, aided by a committee from his congregation, has made a protest against Sunday play on the links of the New Haven Country Club at Whitneyville. The Congregational Church of that place is the one that has taken up the cudgels. The club has agreed to stop play on Sunday morning, but in reply stated that each member would have to decide the matter for himself in the afternoon. Judge Loomis of the Connecticut Supreme Court, in a letter to the church officials on the subject, said, among other things:

"Where there are numbers of players and a regular contest, it seems to me the better opinion is that it would amount to sport, and as such punishable under the statute."

At Hempstead some of the pastors have protested against the depopulation of the Sunday schools by the boys, who prefer to caddy on the Garden City and Meadow Brook links.

The Ridley Park Golf Club of Chester, Penn., has closed such a prosperous season that plans are now under way to build a new clubhouse before the games of 1900 begin. The membership is close to 100. H. F. Kenney is the President, and Miss Helen I. Kenney is Secretary.

College golf continues to grow in different localities. The University of Wisconsin recently made arrangements to lay out a new course at Madison for next season. The club has seventy members, including many members of the Faculty, and a series of games with Western colleges is being arranged for next year. The Pennsylvania State College has just organized a club, with Prof. Leete as President. Thirty members start the club, most of whom have been playing the game over a year. A nine-hole course on the college property will be laid out for use next Spring, and, besides several college games, team matches will probably be played with the University of Pennsylvania and other clubs.

English golfdom has been thrown into considerable perturbation recently over the announcement that Lieut. F. G. Tait of the famous "Black Watch" Highlanders was among the wounded in the recent disastrous battle in South Africa. Tait has been for several years one of the most popular and strongest golfers in Great Britain, and lost the amateur championship last year by a narrow margin to John Ball, Jr. Tait has won many big events, and on the links has long been considered as good as any other man. The dispatches did not state how severely the golfing soldier had been wounded, but his friends are hoping for the best, and trust that he will not be incapacitated from taking part in many future tournaments.

AMONG THE OARSMEN.

The Nassau Boat Club will celebrate Christmas with an entertainment and reception at its Winter quarters, in West One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street.

Dr. J. F. Buckley, who was recently elected President of the Wyanoke Boat Club for the fifth successive term, and who is also Secretary of the Harlem Regatta Association, has been presented with a handsome silver loving cup by the members of the club in appreciation of his untiring efforts and success in managing the affairs of the club, which has been very prosperous throughout his term of office.

There are still several scullers who appear in the Harlem River daily when the weather permits and take several mile spins in shells and gigs. They are clad in heavy woolen sweaters, and declare the exercise is enjoyable and invigorating.

About twenty-five members of the Union Boat Club are contestants in a handball tournament which is in progress at the boathouse, where a spacious court has been built on the second floor. Several prizes are offered by the club, and the contest is a very lively one. There is also a tournament in progress at the Metropolitan Rowing Club's boathouse.

The Friendship Boat Club, which is one of the oldest clubs on the Harlem River, will probably remove its boathouse from "Scullers' Row" to One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Street and the Harlem River early next Spring. A committee of club members has been appointed to look for a new site, as the ground in the rear of where the house now stands, at One Hundred and Thirty-second Street and Park Avenue, is being filled in.

Rumohr, the Canadian sculler, who won the association single scull race at the National regatta of 1899, has been elected a member of the Harlem Rowing Club. Rumohr will remove to this city on March 1, and next season will represent the Harlem Rowing Club in senior singles and doubles. In the latter events he will have J. E. Nagle as partner. It is the opinion of many rowing experts that Rumohr is the only amateur oarsman in the United States who can give Ten Eyck a race that would prove interesting.

The Harlem Navy Bowling League, composed of the various rowing clubs along the Harlem River, has been fully organized, and the tournament will begin on the alleys at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street and Third Avenue, on Jan. 29, and end on March 1. There are seven clubs represented in the tournament, and $130 has been appropriated for five team prizes and four individual prizes.

Repairs and improvements are being made to the Atalanta Boat Clubhouse that will cost about $300. The club is in a prosperous condition and the membership increasing instead of falling off, as it usually does during the Winter months.

The Crescent Rowing Club has announced its intention of joining the ranks of the Harlem River Regatta Association at its annual meeting. The Crescent Rowing Club is the only club on the river that is not a member of the association.

John Smith, the boat builder, is building a new double racing gig for the Nassau Boat Club. The boat will be built very light and upon lines that will insure speed.

The Harlem River Regatta Association has agreed not to hold its annual regatta for 1900 on Decoration Day. This action was taken for the reason that for several years past the Passaic Regatta Association and Harlem Regatta Association have been holding their regattas on the same day. This was very detrimental to both events, as it was impossible for oarsmen to compete in both regattas, so that either one or the other event suffered. The 1901 date will be at the option of the Harlem Regatta Association.

James Pilkington, the veteran oarsman, who was appointed last Spring as Chairman of the committee to devise ways and means to bring the National Regatta of 1900 to this city, is working hard, and will call a meeting of the committee in a few days. He says that an investigation of the speedway course on the Harlem River showed that it excelled any in the country, and that four crews would be able to row abreast in full view of the whole course. The National Regatta has not been held in this city for twenty-seven years. It is necessary to raise about $1,300 in order to defray the expenses of the regatta, but that, it is believed, could be done easily, there being thirteen clubs along the Harlem River alone.

Candidates for Yale Crews.

The candidates for the freshmen crew at Yale have received orders from Capt. Fred Allen of the 'Varsity crew to be ready to begin work on Jan. 13. Capt. Allen has decided to have the candidates for the 'Varsity crew begin rowing on Jan. 23. There are about 110 candidates for the 'Varsity and class crews this year. The men are urged to keep up a good standing in their recitations during the coming term, and also to be careful about marks, so that there may be no difficulty in regard to examinations when the crews go to New London in the Spring.

THE COLUMBIA'S TRIP ABROAD.

Should She Cross the Atlantic, the Yacht Will Meet Valkyrie III. and Shamrock and Perhaps Meteor.

The rumor that the victorious single-sticker Columbia was to sail for the Mediterranean yesterday caused something of a flurry in yachting circles, but those who know simply laughed at the report. A prominent member of the New York Yacht Club said that the Columbia was still at City Island, and was covered over with a shed in order to protect her from the inclement weather in case she did not cross the Atlantic before Spring.

"When the Columbia was built," he continued, "it was the intention of Commodore Morgan and his associates to send her across the ocean to compete with the best of the foreign yachts for whatever prizes were available. This, of course, included a race for the Cape May Cup, which was won by the Genesta, and has remained on the other side ever since. It is a fact that the Columbia could not give speedy boats, of which Duc d'Abruzzi's Bona is an example, their time allowance under the girth rule which prevails in English waters. The French rule, which is in vogue in the Mediterranean, is a modification of the girth rule, and would handicap deep boats such as Columbia and Shamrock so badly that they would hardly stand any chance of winning.

"Mr. Iselin, the only man who can state positively whether or not the Columbia is going abroad, is in Europe now. He will doubtless consult with Sir Thomas Lipton and other yachtsmen in reference to Columbia's racing on the other side. She will surely go over if Mr. Iselin can make arrangements for a series of races under the sail area and load water line formula of measurement, such as governs the races for the America's Cup. Should he fail in perfecting such arrangements, it is probable that the victor in the late series against Shamrock will remain in her snug berth on City Island until next Summer."

A prominent British yachtsman in a recent letter to the yachting editor of THE NEW YORK TIMES says that should Columbia cross the Atlantic, the Valkyrie III. will be purchased and placed in commission, the Shamrock will be refitted, Emperor William's Meteor will probably remain in British waters, and Watson's two new cutters will make up a class that will be unprecedented in yachting history.

The possibility of Columbia going to England has been the topic of considerable discussion as to the chances of the American yacht compared to the fliers of the British fleet. Many experts have taken the stand that Valkyrie III. would have made a better showing against Columbia than did the Irish cutter, and there are some few who profess to believe that she would have won. Their contention is that Valkyrie is the best boat in going to windward in light airs that has ever been built, and on at least three of the days when neither Columbia nor Shamrock could finish the race within the stipulated time Valkyrie would have been able to cover the distance. This contention is of course purely from an English point of view, but unless Columbia crosses the Atlantic and conclusively proves her ability to defeat Valkyrie they will be entitled to their opinions.

Apart from the big class, which without Columbia will be of minor importance, there will be plenty of good sport on the Clyde and around the British coast. The sixty-five-foot class gives promise of splendid sport. Fife has designed two new boats for it that are already in frame and planked up, and negotiations for one or two more are in progress. Of the boat in the class that are already built, Fife has designed two, Watson one, and Arthur Payne one. These boats are all modern racers, and have been designed within the past two years.

The Mediterranean season will not be quite so satisfactory from the viewpoint of a racing yachtsman. Sir Thomas Lipton has decided not to fit out Shamrock for the Riviera, and Charles Day Rose announces that the Distant Shore will not be placed in commission until just before the Clyde races, so that the magnificent prizes that are annually offered for the Mediterranean season will be at the mercy of the second raters. A number of American steam yachts will as usual cross for the Riviera season, and even if Columbia is not seen, the burgee of the New York Yacht Club will be in evidence from some of the most magnificent yachts afloat.

NEW RULES FOR KNOCKABOUTS.

In Preparation by the Yacht Racing Association of Long Island Sound.

The Executive Committee of the Yacht Racing Association of Long Island Sound is hard at work compiling a set of rules for the government of the knockabout classes during the coming Summer. The members will endeavor to present a report that is identical with that made last week by the special committee appointed by the Knockabout Association of Boston. The changes are important and sweeping, but are believed to be in line with the aim of the association to secure a safe and seaworthy, as well as speedy, type of boat, at the same time allowing designers a little more liberty in making variations of the existing type.

The removal of absolute restrictions on ballast in force under the existing rule is the most important alteration. In its place a given amount of weight and displacement is recommended, allowing the designer to divide the proportion of ballast to displacement in a manner that he may deem most advantageous in developing speed. By retaining the present restrictions on construction and minimum beam, a lightly ballasted boat or one of flimsy construction is made impossible as much as it is under the existing rule. The practical effect will be to secure as good a boat as at present, at the same time permitting a boat of greater beam than the minimum required to carry less ballast than the narrower ones.

With the absolute restriction, now in vogue, to a minimum of 3,500 pounds of outside ballast for keel boats and 3,000 pounds for the centreboard type, the designers who have been prominent in the class have generally evolved a yacht with the least possible beam as the one giving the least displacement. With an actual displacement restriction in force, liberty is given to try a beamier boat with less ballast than was formerly required.

The Boston committee has recommended that each boat must weigh at least 5,900 pounds, with all racing gear on board. The Executive Committee of the Sound Association will not recommend this clause, for the reason that it would be impracticable for yachtsmen along the Sound to have their craft weighed. This obstacle is a formidable one, but it is a known fact that the Herreshoffs weigh every one of their products up to thirty-five feet.

No change is proposed in the sail area of 600 square feet for raceabouts and 500 square feet for knockabouts, except that the actual area of the jib is measured instead of the forward triangle. It is also proposed to do away with the restrictions as applied to the cabin house, while still retaining the water-tight cockpit or its alternative, two water-tight bulkheads. The knockabout must still be a keel boat without a bowsprit.

In making the various recommendations the committee will advise the admission of the boats already built without alterations from their present form, if they conform to the other restrictions except actual displacement.

AS TO ONE-DESIGN YACHTS.

Growing Opinion that a Chance Should Be Given to Young Designers.

Yachtsmen in the vicinity of New York have begun to tire of the strictly one-design classes, which, while so far as offering pleasure to their owners have filled the requirements, have as racing classes done very little toward the advancement of yacht designing. This objection does not hold good in the restricted classes, where the designer must keep within certain measurements in order to have the craft eligible to race in a certain class, for in that case the designer is permitted a certain amount of leeway in form and at times in construction that will permit the more talented to build a faster craft, which is for the ultimate benefit of the sport.

In the one-design boats the best sailed boat will always win, and the result of the races show the ability of the sailor and not the excellence of model or design. Furthermore, as their is no competition, owing to the general type of craft embodying only the ideas of one individual, there can be but little development.

This statement, made by one of the best known yachtsmen in this city, holds good in every size of craft. In the sixty-five-footers now building at Bristol there will be but a slight difference in general model from that of Columbia, and while they will be fast boats, there is little doubt that some of the younger designers, if given an opportunity to build to the same restrictions, would turn out a craft that would finish well up among the best sailed of the fleet.

It is a fact well known to racing yachtsmen that Herreshoff has been more successful against Watson and Fife than he has against such men as Gardner, Crowninshield, Crane, Hanley, and others in this country, a comparison that shows plainly in the smaller classes in which the younger men have had an opportunity.

"Opportunity has much to do with success," said a well-known yachtsman, "and if our young men in the ranks of professional naval architecture are not given a chance, development stops to a great degree, and one-design yachts do not develop the science beyond the ideas evolved in a single brain."

NEW CLASS OF RACERS FOR THE SOUND.

Thirty-Foot Sloops to Figure in Contests During the Season.

The particular class of yachts around which interest will centre on Long Island Sound next season will be thirty-foot sloop class, and several new boats will compete in the various races during the season. In addition to the new craft, several of the crack thirty-foot catboats that have won prizes along the Sound during the past two years will be transformed into sloops and will be extensively raced.

The Yacht Racing Association will have the thirty-footers as a regular class, and a number of clubs, including the Indian Harbor and Bridgeport Yacht Clubs, have signified their intention of promoting the new class, which will, to great degree, take the place of the one-design thirty-footers. The class promises to give as much sport as the twenty-one-foot knockabouts have in the past.

The Bridgeport Yacht Club will also make an attempt to revive interest in the half-rater class that was introduced some years ago by the Sewanhaka-Corinthian Yacht Club, and for which its international challenge cup was first offered. The Bridgeport Club will also continue to boom dory racing, twenty-five of these tiny craft being enrolled in that organization.

YACHTS AND YACHTSMEN.

A model of Charles R. Flint's new steam yacht, now in process of construction at Ayre's yard, at Upper Nyack, will be one of the exhibits in the Paris Exposition. The craft, which was designed by Charles D. Mosher of this city, will, its projectors say, be the most speedy vessel in the world. She is confidently expected to steam at a rate of more than fifty miles an hour, and to show that this speed is more than the dream of an enthusiast, it can be said that Mosher has already developed a rate of forty miles an hour with E. Burgess Warren's Ellide and has also designed such flyers as the Feiseen, Norwood, Viner, and Buzz. The model was made by Gustav Grann.

Crowninshield is at work on designs of a fast cruising launch, forty-five feet over all, for J. B. Cornwall of Rochester. She will be equipped with a twenty horse power gas engine.

Clinton H. Crane of this city has designed a twenty-five-footer and a twenty-one-footer that will be raced in the knockabout classes on Long Island Sound next season. The names of the owners are withheld for the present, and the plans have been forwarded to Hawley, at South Boston, who will build the boats.

Efforts are being made by the leading clubs along Long Island Sound to promote interest in a new class of racing yawls for the coming season. The craft are to be 43 feet racing length, with a restricted sail spread, but with no other limitations on the ingenuity of designers.

The Indian Harbor Yacht Club has raised its annual dues from $15 to $25—the new scale to take effect from the annual meeting of the club. A well-known member of the club said yesterday that the Indian Harbor Club gave a greater equivalent for the amount of dues than any other club in the country. This statement is partly true, as far as a well-appointed clubhouse and safe anchorage apply to the needs of yachtsmen, and when the new yachting club is organized in this city the comfort of the members of all clubs will be considered, and without doubt many members of the Greenwich organization will avail themselves of its conveniences.

E. M. MacLellan, Secretary of the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club, announces the following appointments by the Board of Governors: Chairman of the Regatta Committee—Edward M. MacLellan; Chairman of the House Committee—Clay M. Greene. Commodore Hazen L. Hoyt announces William G. Newman as Fleet Captain, and E. M. MacLellan and Robert Jacob as delegates to the Yacht Racing Association of Long Island Sound. The annual report of the Secretary exhibits a membership as follows: Honorary, 4; life, 17; non-resident, 4, and active, 85, a total of 110. The club fleet contains seven steamers, eight launches, three schooners, three yawls, three cuttrs, fifteen sloops, six knockabouts, ten catboats, and six sailing dories. The Treasurer's report shows a balance in bank of $43.79, and the House Committee's report is a favorable document. The following applications for membership have been received to date: Albert P. Thayer, Stock Exchange, New York, proposed by E. M. MacLellan; Joseph F. Wheelock, the Lambs, New York, proposed by Hazen L. Hoyt; George Bowles, Harold Stevenson, Percy Baxter, Port Washington, and A. Jones, Port Washington, proposed by G. A. Corry.

A member of the Larchmont Yacht Club said yesterday that Commodore Clarence Postley has signified his intention of racing his schooner Colonia next season in every race to which she is eligible, the same as he has done ever since he purchased the yacht and altered her to a centreboard craft. The steam yacht from which Commodore Postley's flag will float was purchased largely for the accommodation of Mrs. Postley, who did not care to put up with the inconveniences that necessarily are in vogue on a racing yacht. It is also probable, despite the rumor of a few days ago, that the nomination as chief flag officer of the club will again be tendered to Commodore Postley. Edward S. Hatch, the present Vice Commodore, will also be one of the flag officers, but Rear Commodore Philip T. Dodge will decline the renomination, owing to the fact that he intends to spend the greater part of the year in Europe. Commodore Dodge will not build a schooner, as was reported some time ago.

Several of the silver prizes won by the late James Ashbury have just been sold in London. The trophy won by the Cambria in her race with Dauntless across the ocean in 1870 was purchased for £76, and that won by her in the Royal Victoria Yacht Club regatta in 1868 went for £53. Other cups were sold at much lower figures.

"The opening of a more direct passage from New York Bay to the sea by way of the East Channel, which is now under way, will work a certain change in yachting about New York," says the current issue of Forest and Stream, "but another scheme has just been proposed, which, if carried out, will have a still greater effect. The idea is to build a tide water ship canal between Jamaica Bay, on the sea side of Coney Island, and Flushing Bay, on the Long Island Sound, just clear of Hell Gate. The ground being low between the two points, with the earth of a sort which is easily excavated, and with this earth available for filling at the ends and along the route, the plan presents no serious difficulties. If carried out, with a harbor at each end through the deepening of Jamaica and Flushing Bays, it will open an immense area of water front for commercial purposes. So far as yachting is concerned, such a canal would offer a short, direct, and easy passage between the sea and the Sound in place of the present way through Hell Gate and the East River, narrow, crooked, with strong tides, and at all times greatly overcrowded."

At Poillon's yard, South Brooklyn, a schooner is being constructed for Mr. Max Agassiz of Newport. The new boat, which is from the board of J. Beavor Webb, is of wood, 90 feet over all and 70 feet on the water line. She will be completed early in April.

The New York Yacht Club has negotiated for a loan of $240,000 at 4½ per cent. on its new property, in West Forty-fourth Street. This plot of ground, which cost $148,000, was presented to the club by Commodore J. Pierpont Morgan. The Equitable Life Assurance Society is the mortgagee.

GOSSIP OF THE CYCLERS.

Question Whether the L. A. W. Will Relinquish Its Control of Racing Revived—Hardy Women Riders.

The absorbing topic among the advocates of cycling throughout the country is whether or not the League of American Wheelmen will relinquish its control of racing at the annual meeting of the league, which will be held next February. About this time a year ago the same agitation took place. The league did not vote to give up its control of racing, but since then the anti-racing faction has been strengthened and prominent cycling officials maintain that a change will take place at the coming meeting. Conway W. Sams, one of the leaders in cycling, declared against racing last year, and was asked to accept the nomination for President on an anti-racing platform. He refused to run against Thomas Keenan, Jr., who was elected. An effort was made again this year, and for a time it looked as though he would accept the nomination, but now that President Keenan has practically declared himself a candidate for re-election, Mr. Sams will not run.

Otto Dorner, Chairman of the Highway Improvement Committee of the league, is now being spoken of as a possible candidate, and he will probably be the choice of the Far Western division to oppose Keenan. Mr. Dorner for a number of years has rendered valuable services as the head of the Good Roads Committee, and would receive the support of the New York, Ohio, and Maryland divisions on an anti-racing ticket.

The proportion of women to be seen on the roads at this season of the year is larger than any other previous season. The wheelwomen who once became converted to the idea of riding every day throughout the year, weather permitting, are quite as enthusiastic as the men. On week days especially, when the men are at business, the women constitute about three-fourths of those on the road. Many of them are confirmed cold-weather riders, and will be found on the road even when the thermometer is below the freezing point. For cold-weather riding a heavy skirt and long-top riding shoes, serviceable woolen gloves, a soft hat, and a thick coat or jersey constitute the favorite apparel. A new style of sweater is favored by many. This allows of a lighter coat to be worn.

At the annual election of the Greater New York Wheelmen the following officers were elected: President—O. M. Reed; Vice Presidents—Henry Kugeler, John Hartjen, and W. H. Stewart; Treasurer—Frank R. Smith; Secretaries—Charles Tovin and B. Fowler; Major—I. Roberts; Captain—E. A. Franke.

One of the latest devices in the coaster brake, which enables the rider to stop pedaling on down grades, or at any time when a sufficient degree of speed has been attained, the wheel continuing to coast along while the feet are held stationary on the pedals at any convenient position, is so arranged that a brake spoon acts upon the rear tire. A slight backward motion of the pedal from any position throws back the oscillator, attached to the rear hub, and draws the brake spoon against the tire with force easily graduated and controlled according to the needs of the situation. Upon relieving the backward pressure on the pedals, the wheel coasts on with freedom, or the forward pedaling may be resumed.

A feature of a 1000 tire is a strip of fabric running the entire circumference of the tire, the object being to protect the inner tube from the friction of the walls of the rims, and also to act as an extra precaution in the protection of the valve stem.

GOSSIP OF THE HORSEMEN.

Marcus Daly has purchased of Bowerman Brothers, Lexington, Ky., a three-year-old filly by Clay King, dam Alice Leyburn, by Baron Wilkes, second dam Mamie. Alice Leyburn was owned by Mr. Daly, and was lost at sea while being shipped to England. Mr. Daly has a decided fancy for the Clay King blood. He has also purchased of Peter Duryea, Patchen Wilkes Stock Farm, near Lexington, a mare by Dictator, dam by Patchen Wilkes. Last week Mr. Daly bought Bow Bells and Rosy Morn from May Overton, Lexington, for $15,000. Since then he has offered Overton $8,000 for a two-year-old stallion by Bow Bells, dam Rosy Morn. The offer was refused.

Frank J. Gould has purchased a handsome bay saddle gelding from C. L. Bailey, and takes daily riding on him in Central Park. Before Mr. Gould bought this saddle horse he usually rode his polo pony. This pony has jumped 6 feet 2 inches, and is regarded by many competent judges as the handsomest and best in New York.

Ex-Mayor Hugh J. Grant and Mrs. Grant are very fond of horseback riding, and can be seen in Central Park almost every fine day. Mrs. Grant usually rides in the morning, and Mr. Grant in the afternoon.

Gen. Thomas T. Eckert has recently brought on from Springhurst Stock Farm, Lexington, Ky., a splendid high school bay gelding, and will now be one of the regular riders in the Park.

C. H. Pierce, one of the oldest riders in New York, can frequently be seen in the morning driving in the Park or on the Speedway behind a high-stepping brown cob. In the afternoon Mr. Pierce rides at Durlands. His favorite mount is a bay Canadian mare. John A. McCall is out early in Central Park on fine mornings. He usually rides a Kentucky-bred chestnut gelding. Col. Franklin Bartlett and James H. Hyde are devotees of the saddle horse, and seldom let a bright day pass without taking a ride. Richard Halsted has three mounts, a chestnut gelding, a bay gelding, and a chestnut mare. Mr. Halsted manages to give each one a good deal of exercise.

ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL.

This Scotch and English Game Said to be Growing in Favor.

It has been said that every sport or pastime, no matter what its popularity on its native heath, finds a place in the category of American games. Thus the English cricket, the Scotch golf, the Irish hurling, and the Canadian lacrosse all have their followers in this country, while the national or chief pastimes of other places are not forgotten. Of recent years the Scotch and English game of Association football has been creeping into popularity, and although it has had many things to contend with, it has obtained a firm foothold here, and promises to become some day one of the leading Winter pastimes of the United States.

In the New England States the game is now the chief Winter amusement. The fact that its introducers and principal votaries are workingmen, whose time is so limited that games on the Sabbath have been indulged in, militated not a little against its popularity with those of more leisure, but the formation of teams by Harvard University and other prominent athletic associations has succeeded in killing the prejudice, and now the highest class of amateur sportsmen indulge in the pastime. The game has gained many devotees in all the chief athletic centres of the country, and Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Pittsburg, and Detroit have each several clubs.

Wherever the game has been played it has served as a great attraction to the spectators, and in England crowds of thirty and forty thousand are not infrequent at the principal games. Governing bodies for the game in this country have not made very strenuous efforts for the promotion of its popularity. There was an American Association, but its value, if any, was confined to one district. What it needs is a series of inter-city games, and an annual international contest for the championship would serve as a drawing card. The infrequency of accidents and the stringent rules against foul and rough play is an important argument in favor of the Association against Rugby rules. The universities and public schools in England rejoiced when they saw the onward march of Association football. Fewer broken limbs signaled the advance of the new game, and when a football match passed off without accident relief was depicted on the faces of the principals, whose charges had frequently been sent home badly injured.

Bowling Notes.

A meeting of the Interborough Bowling League, recently organized, will be held this afternoon at Pump's Tournament Hall, 624 East One Hundred and Forty-third Street, to arrange for a tournament. The competition will be limited to twenty-one clubs. At to-day's meeting applications are expected from the best clubs in Greater New York. The following clubs have already decided to enter a team: Corinthian, Orchard, Audubon, Claremont, Chippewa, Pontiac Wheelmen, Morris Wheelmen, and Hooker.

The arrangements for a match between Charles Starr and Albert Silver for a purse of $1,000 are nearly completed. Three series of games will be played, each series on different alleys. Each series will be best six out of eleven games, and will count as one game, the winner of two of these series receiving the purse. The alleys and dates on which the games will be rolled have not yet been decided upon.

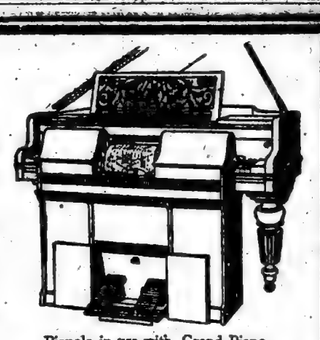
The tournaments that draw the biggest crowds are the Life Insurance and Archdiocesan Leagues at Starr's Tournament Hall. When the latter bowl games it is almost impossible to find standing room after the series begins. There is always a good attendance of women at the games of the Life Insurance League.

THE PIANOLA



Pianola in use with Grand Piano.
Price, $250.

is a piano player by means of which any one can play the piano.

No technical knowledge whatever is required on the part of the performer. It is a significant fact that the Pianola is the only piano-player which has been endorsed by musicians.

Unlimited Repertoire	The Pianola brings into use thousands of pianos which are now lying idle. It makes every member of the family a player and master of a repertoire which includes the musical classics both ancient and modern, the latest popular airs, and an endless variety of both song and dance music.
Technic	The Pianola supplies technic, the mechanical obstacle which has heretofore debarred the novice from musical expression and which has been acquired only at the expense of unlimited application by the great musicians.
Touch	The sixty-five fingers of the Pianola strike the sixty-five keys of the piano by means of a pneumatic, according to the technic of the composition, the elasticity of the air producing a pliant, yielding, and remarkably sympathetic attack that is almost identical with that of the human fingers.
Expression	Expression,—that which alone makes a performance musical and gives life and variety to playing, is entirely subject to the will of the performer. He may vary the touch, as a writer in "The Musical Courier" says, "From the feathery touch of a Joseffy to the lion's touch of Rubinstein." In other words the Pianola, through semi-automatic methods, makes possible an individualized result.

Our instruments are gladly shown to the merely curious as well as to intending purchasers. If unable to call, send for catalogue.

AFRICAN RAILWAY PLANS

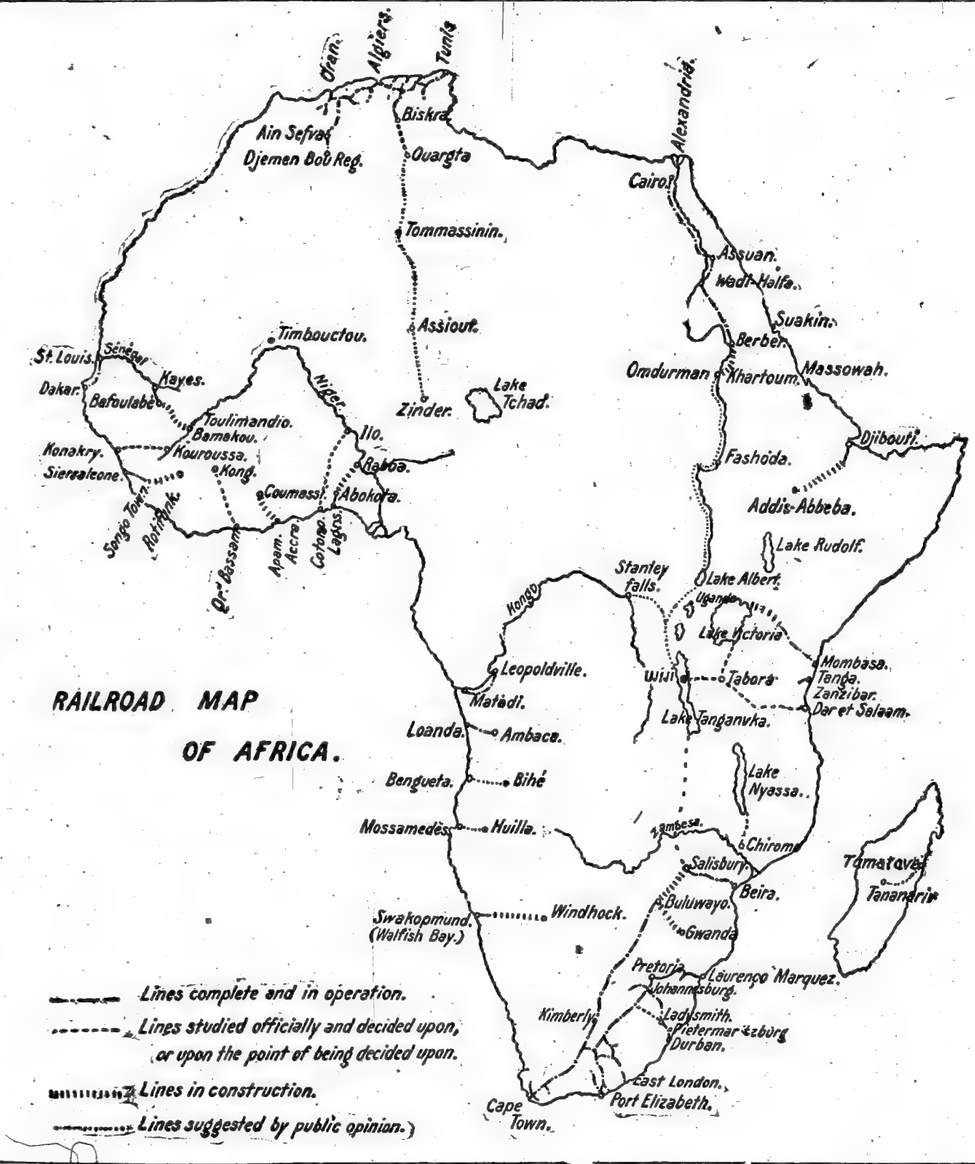
Schemes for the Development of the Dark Continent.

LINES BUILT AND PROJECTED

Consul Skinner Suggests that There Is a Field for American Iron Men to Keep an Eye On.

As a sort of offset to the proposed Cape to Cairo railway project of the English, the French people are now agitating for a trans-Saharan line, which shall enable them to reach the hinterland of their possessions in Southwestern Africa, and the rich Lake Tchad region.

Apropos of this agitation United States Consul Skinner, at Marseilles, has sent to the Bureau of Foreign Commerce of the State Department an abstract of a report made by the Marseilles Chamber of Commerce, which shows the exact railway situation in Africa, the accompanying map showing railroads actually constructed, those which have been studied officially and have been practically decided upon, roads under construction, and those suggested by public opinion, these latter being notably the English Cape to Cairo plan and the French trans-Saharan scheme. Under this latter head, but omitted from the map as schemes of the far too remote future, are the suggested roads from Suakin, on the Red Sea, to Berber; from Lake Schad to Fashoda; from Loanda, in Portuguese West Africa, to Lake Tanganyika, and from Walfish Bay across German Southwest Africa to Buluwayo.



Says Consul Skinner: "The Marseilles Chamber of Commerce, in its report to the Minister of Commerce, says: 'The question whether the railways will pay is not to be considered.' It declares that France having laid hands upon points 1,200 and 1,800 miles from the sea, must establish a connection or lose the fruit of its labor. While reiterating that the doubtful element of future profit must not hinder actual work, the intimation is held out that a profitable traffic can be built up. The Belgian Kongo region is cited as an example. The railway from Stanley Pool to the sea, 400 kilometers (249 miles) long, was fully completed in May, 1898, and 100 kilometers (62 miles) were in operation as early as 1896. The total capital and bonds amount to 65,000,000 francs ($12,545,000,) and the present monthly receipts are 1,000,000 francs ($193,000.) The commercial movement has increased from 17,650,000 francs ($3,406,450) in this colony in 1893 to 50,500,000 francs) $9,746,500 in 1898. The principal business is in caoutchouc, a product that is firm in price and even advancing, while the general trend of prices of other products is downward. It is contended that the French colonies in Africa are veritable mines of rubber, and need only means of transportation to bring about highly prosperous conditions."

As a reason for his report, the Consul writes: "The interest in railway building cannot fail to impress the American observer as pointing to a long continuance in the demand for iron and steel, and serves also as a lesson upon the best method of settling our newly acquired spheres of influence. What has been already done, and what is projected in Africa, may be gleaned from the following:

Districts.	Railway Completed. Miles.	Building, Surveyed, and Definitely Projected. Miles.
Tunis-Algeria	2,361	690
Senegal-Soudan	276	224
French Guinea	...	342

*Cape Colony	4,350	...
Uganda	288	644
Madagascar	...	249
Total	7,937	4,920

*Cairo to Cape project not included in this table.

In another portion of its report to the Minister of Commerce the Marseilles Chamber of Commerce says: "This year we have to mention profound modifications in the power and expansion of the five great nations which direct the world—that is, England, Russia, the United States of America, Germany, and France. These five seek everywhere to make their influence supreme. The present year will be marked by the entrance of the United States as a colonial power which wishes its part in the division of the world. France pursues its African march from the Atlantic to the Red Sea, and rubs against the British project of connecting Cairo and the Cape. The great fact which holds attention is the effort being made to exploit these possessions without delay by the construction of railways."

The Brooklyn Opera Society.

The Brooklyn Opera Society will give a performance of the "Bohemian Girl" at the Amphion Theatre, Brooklyn, Tuesday evening. The cast includes Edward P. Waterbury, Joseph L. Bensel, Allan S. Booth, William S. Caywood, Harry Hunt, Miss Mabel Lowell Mackenzie, Mrs. Ella G. Mitchell, and Mrs. Herbert E. Hawes. Prof. Carl Veath will act as conductor.

IN FOREIGN LANDS.

HAS GREAT BRITAIN ACKNOWLEDGED THE SOVEREIGNTY OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN REPUBLICS?—European diplomatic circles have been thrown into a flutter of excitement by the statement published in the Russian Official Messenger saying that the British Chargé d'Affaires in St. Petersburg had officially informed the Russian Government that Great Britain "is in a state of war with the South African Republics." The expression "state of war" is interpreted both in St. Petersburg and in Paris to mean that by its use Great Britain formally and distinctly acknowledges the independence of the South African Republic and the Orange Free State. The Novoye Vremya, the most influential Russian organ, whose utterances are often semi-official announcements of the policy of the Government, says:

"No communication of this kind has hitherto been made by the British Cabinet to the Government of any other Continental power. In British political circles it has been stoutly maintained that the armed struggle between Great Britain and the Transvaal and the Orange Republic was by no means a war in the ordinary acceptation of the word, but merely the quelling of a revolt of the Boers, who had risen in arms against the Government, under whose paramountcy they were deemed to live. The communication made by the British Chargé d'Affaires puts an end to all these views. Great Britain has recognized that she 'is in a state of war' with the Transvaal and Orange Republics, and has thereby acknowledged the independence of both the South African republics. * * * Henceforth, no European Cabinet has the slightest motive for abstaining from treating with 'the South African republics' in the strict sense which this expression has in international law."

Le Figaro of Paris devotes an editorial article to the subject, in the course of which M. Valfrey, the foreign editor, says that neutrals have nothing to say in the matter unless, indeed, "the Government" has been overthrown by the rebels. M. Valfrey points out that this fact clearly explains Europe's reserve in the affair, as whatever the form in which mediation was offered Great Britain was justified in regarding it almost as an act of hostility. If, however, adds the foreign editor of Le Figaro, the two South African republics are formally recognized by Great Britain as belligerents, then the good offices of third parties in the direction of mediation and even of arbitration, under the conditions foreseen by The Hague act, could no longer be regarded as an infringement of neutrality or of British sovereignty.

A FORECAST AS TO THE FUTURE OF SOUTH AFRICA.—The Journal of Economics, published in Vienna, pretends to have authoritative information upon which it bases an elaborate article dealing with the future of South Africa "when England has successfully ended the war." The writer anticipates that the country will be reorganized as a confederation on the Canadian model, with extensive autonomy for each of the responsible local Governments. A lucid description of the main features of the new State is then given, which, the writer points out, will be nearly equal in area to all Europe, excluding Russia, while its extent will be thirteen times that of the United Kingdom, and six and one half times that of Austria-Hungary and Bosnia.

The Journal of Economics then sums up by observing that this federation which Great Britain is now creating will prove a second India for the mother country, providing a new and inexhaustible market for its industrial products. Within a quarter of a century the natives, whose sole occupation was war and plunder but a few years ago, will be converted into farmers like the numerous other races upon whom Great Britain has imposed the Pax Britannica. The present war, concludes the writer, is regrettable for the destruction which it causes, "but, with the thunder of the cannon, new laws come into existence, and the foundations of a new civilization are being laid in the Dark Continent. In a word, England is now engaged in making world history on the grandest scale."

MOVEMENT IN LONDON TO SAVE THE TUDOR HOUSE.—The London County Council has had its attention called to the deplorable condition of the historic Tudor House, at Bromley-by-Bow, and a popular movement is on foot to have the Council preserve the mansion and convert it either into a university settlement or a museum. In either case it will be necessary to restore the interior which, it is said, can be accomplished at a cost of less than £1,500. The press of London has been induced to take hold of the matter, and it is believed that the Council will be in favor of having the building at once placed in proper hands.

The Tudor House has been untenanted for several years, and no attempt has been made to keep it in a state fit for habitation. All the windows on every face of the building have been riddled by the gamins of the district. The interior is in a similar state of ruin. The once beautiful and elaborately decorated woodwork has rotted, and the plaster has fallen from the walls and ceilings. The house stands near the centre of about two acres of ground, which for several years has been utilized by the people of the district as a recreation park. This Autumn some improvements were made on it for the benefit of the public; the old boundary wall was demolished, and is being superseded by ornamental iron railings, through which there will be three gateways—one in St. Leonard Street and two in Grey's Road. A bandstand was recently erected in the centre of the grounds, and an open-air gymnasium is now being fitted up for boys and girls.

DEATH OF THE COMPANION OF THE EX-EMPRESS EUGENIE.—The Paris papers, with the exception of Le Gaulois, devote but little space to the announcement of the death of a woman who was well known in Paris during the last days of the Second Empire, and who, until her death, shared the exile and confidence of the widow of Napoleon III. The woman was Mme. Lebreton, sister of the late Gen. Bourbaki. She died at Farnborough, England. For more than ten years, up to the time of her death, Mme. Lebreton had been intrusted with the superintendence of the charitable works of Eugénie, to whom she was much attached. She was chosen reader to the Empress in 1867, when her brother was in command of the Imperial Guard. When the Empress escaped from Paris she was accompanied to England by Mme. Lebreton, and the latter may be said to have never left the side of the imperial widow until death intervened. Le Gaulois says that the loss of Mme. Lebreton will undoubtedly be a great blow to the ex-Empress, who had no one who served her so faithfully, or who could mourn with her in sympathy over the sorrows and sufferings of her troubled life.

BRITISH AND UNITED STATES TROOPS AT MALTA.—The fact that every United States troopship that passes through the Mediterranean stops at Malta, where the soldiers are allowed to land and mingle with the British garrison there, is arousing much comment at Marseilles, where the papers publish letters from their Maltese correspondents. It is announced that on Nov. 20 the United States transport Thomas, from New York, having on board the Forty-seventh Regiment, United States Volunteers, under the command of Col. Walter Howe, reached the island. The force, which consisted of fifty officers, 1,400 men, and fifteen nurses, was invited to land. The regiment, it is said, escorted by the band of the Royal Warwickshire Regiment, which is now on its way to South Africa, gave an exhibition drill on the Floriana parade ground. In the evening the officers were entertained by their British hosts, and toasts were exchange for the success of the respective campaigns.

Col. Howe's men are described as giants in physique—"strong, deep-chested, well-grown men, who look none the worse for their voyage and confinement on board ship."

THE NEW GOVERNOR OF BOMBAY.—Queen Victoria has just approved the appointment of Sir Henry Stafford Northcote to be Governor of Bombay. He will succeed Lord Sandhurst on the expiration of the latter's tenure of office in February. Sir Stafford has resigned his membership in the House of Commons, where he has represented Exeter since 1880. He was created a Baronet in 1887, and is the second son of the late Earl of Iddesleigh. He was educated at Eton and at Merton College, Oxford. Soon after graduation he entered the Foreign Office. He accompanied the Marquis of Ripon on the mission to arrange the Alabama treaty of 1871, and became Secretary to the British Claims Commission.

When Lord Salisbury went to Constantinople as Ambassador Extraordinary in 1876, Mr. Northcote went with him as his private secretary. He was also secretary to his father. Among his other appointments was that of Acting Third Secretary in the Diplomatic Service. He was made G. B. in 1890. In 1885 he became Financial Secretary to the War Office, which position he retained until the reorganization of the office two years later. Of all the Indian appointments the Governor of Bombay is considered in importance second only to that of the Viceroy of India, particularly at this time when famine and plague are ravaging the territory.

TRAVELS WITH AN ALARM CLOCK

Device of Sleepy Passenger on Elevated Road Saves Him Many Cigars.

Elevated railroad conductors and guards are disposed to frown upon an innovation recently introduced by one of their regular night passengers to Harlem, for should the practice become general they will be deprived of lots of cigars, which they have come to look upon as a legitimate perquisite from late travelers of somnolent tendency, who want to be waked up in time to get off at their proper stations. In fact, some of the railroad men have been known to accept quarters and half dollars from men in dress suits and of flippant manner, though in most cases they consider themselves superior to cash tips.

The passenger in question is a night worker; that is to say, he goes home every morning at about 4 o'clock, boarding his train far down town. He always carries an old leather satchel filled with papers, and this satchel, placed on a car window sill, makes him an excellent pillow. The friendly railroaders have always tried to see to it that he was not carried beyond, and he was seldom overlooked in the rush of business which sometimes occurs even at that hour, because when this little service was necessary it was always repaid with a smoke offering. The conductor looking in at him at the station just before his destination a few nights ago saw that he was slumbering soundly, and started toward him, but just at that moment there came from the old satchel under the sleeper's head a fierce buzzing sound, as though the satchel was stuffed with a thousand active hornets which had suddenly awakened and were making desperate efforts to sting their way out through the leather. The traveler awoke with a jump, of course, placed the satchel, still buzzing, on the seat beside him, and calmly buttoned his overcoat. Then he passed out with a smiling "Good night," but there was no cigar that morning.

He had simply concluded that it would pay him to carry an alarm clock to and fro between his lodgings and his office, packed away in the middle of his old bag of papers, and now he says that for comfort and convenience a double lower berth on a Manhattan Elevated car is just as good as a half section on a trunk line sleeper.

City Club Dinner.

A dinner will be given at the City Club to-morrow night, at which the question of ballot reform will be discussed. State Senator Nathaniel A. Elsberg of the Fifteenth District will be one of the speakers.

SUPREMACY IN IRON TRADE

Carnegie Company in Full Control of the Situation.

TERMS OF ROCKEFELLER DEAL

H. C. Frick's Position—Why the Attempt to Consolidate the Carnegie Interests Was Abandoned.

Special to The New York Times.

DULUTH, Minn., Dec. 16.—In view of many conflicting stories now published as to wars that are scheduled to come off between iron ore and steelmaking interests, especially since the resignation of H. C. Frick from the Carnegie Steel Company, a few facts may be interesting.

Eight years ago H. W. Oliver of the Oliver & Snyder steel interests at Pittsburg leased a large mine on the Mesaba Range, near here. Mr. Carnegie, then as now, the head of the greatest steelmaking concern of the world, was not inclined to go into the mining business, but a short time later he changed his mind on Mr. Oliver's representations. Mr. Carnegie was finally convinced that the Mesaba Range was so enormous that no future discoveries could ever shake the safety of investments in its mines, and the tempting offers made by the Oliver interests, who found themselves sorely in need of funds to carry on the development of the properties they had secured, resulted in the organization of the Oliver Mining Company, in which the Carnegie Steel Company took a five-sixths interest, and the Oliver & Snyder Steel Company the remainder. The new company backed by unlimited funds at once began the purchase of mines and mineral lands, and soon extended its scope beyond the Mesaba Range over five Lake Superior ranges, picking up at low prices the very choicest mines and lands. It was practically alone in this business for two years, and so had the field to itself, thus having opportunity to gain the best at prices that now seem very small.

When the Oliver Company took the Mountain Iron Mine of the Mesaba Range under lease from John D. Rockefeller, it agreed with Mr. Rockefeller that it would ship its ore from that and other specified mines over his road and in his ships, to a minimum annual amount of 1,200,000 tons, and this contract brought into being the Bessemer Steamship Company, a Rockefeller concern, now the third largest steamship organization on the face of the globe. Certain other agreements passed between the two interests relative to their business, important among which was a clause that Mr. Rockefeller should not become a competitor of the Carnegie Steel Company in the manufacture of steel. Though at the time this agreement was made the Rockefeller interests had in mind the erection of a vast steelmaking plant, and had actually proceeded so far as to purchase a site for it, this agreement has been closely adhered to, and neither Mr Rockefeller nor his money have become associated in the making of steel, except in the way of loans on good security.

Then the wave of combination passed over the country, led by the association into the Federal Steel Company of the varied interests of the Minnesota Iron Company, the Duluth and Iron Range Road, and the Illinois Steel Company, these three forming an association similar to what Messrs. Rockefeller and Carnegie would form were they joined. The National Steel, the American Tin Plate, two closely allied concerns; the American Steel Hoop, also associated with the two last mentioned, and the American Steel and Wire, were organized. Part of these concerns, with the Carnegie Steel Company and the Federal Steel, could have combined into one a great part of the steel billet, rail, beam, and general trade of America.

Mr. Frick broached to his chief the idea of such a giant combination, but Mr. Carnegie did not like it. His company, he thought, needed no such alliances. It was still Mr. Carnegie's hope to continue it as the giant steel-making firm of the world, and he did not want to lose individuality in any combination. Further, he doubted the effect on the American people of any such organization as his daring colleague proposed. But he gave his associates, headed by Frick, an option on his interests in the Carnegie Steel Company, announced that the remainder of his life was to be spent in philanthropy, and went to Scotland.

W. H. Moore of Chicago, who had been instrumental in forming some of the preceding combinations in steel took the actual handling of the formidable and tremendous deal, publicly announcing that subscriptions would be taken in various cities for the new Carnegie Steel Company, and did actually receive some such. A charter was obtained in New Jersey, with such a capital that the public became alarmed, and the project lagged. Then Judge Moore was suddenly abandoned by his associates. That any such scheme was in mind was denied by authority, and the whole matter was dropped. Mr. Carnegie returned to the United States, the option was canceled on its expiration, the forfeit taken by Mr. Carnegie, and a reorganization effected in the Carnegie Steel Company. This let out those who had been most active in the negotiations. Mr. Frick became a "consulting partner," according to the official statement, "the same as Mr. Carnegie and others." Mr. Carnegie then announced that the Carnegie Steel Company had "just begun to grow," a unique way of saying to those who might be considering the question of opposition that they had better watch out.

When the National Steel Company was formed the Oliver & Snyder interests were taken by it, including the steel plants and ore rights. So that Mr. Oliver's power in the Oliver Iron Mining Company is reduced to a minimum, the ore divisions in that concern being five-sixths Carnegie and one-sixth National Steel.

Now it is reported in the newspapers that Frick and Rockefeller are going into steelmaking in competition with Carnegie. They cannot unless the Rockefeller contract with Carnegie is abrogated, and Mr. Rockefeller does not care to do this. It is also stated, in the same connection, that Frick, Mellon, Rockefeller, and Oliver control the Mesaba. That is also a mistake. So far as any one interest can control the Mesaba, that one is the Carnegie Steel Company. Practically all the Mesaba's ore in sight is held by this company, the Federal Steel, the Rockefeller interests, the American Steel and Wire, and certain Ohio Valley steelmaking interests. Of these various holdings that of the Carnegie Company is so far in the lead as to be rivaled by none. And it is constantly strengthening its position by buying mines, not only on the Mesaba, but on all other ranges as well.

There are two links in the chain from raw ore to finished steel that the Carnegie Company has not possessed, these being lake tonnage and rail transportation from the mines to Lake Superior. A great fleet of ships is now under construction for the company, and a charter for a railway in Northern Minnesota has been obtained. The company has what no competitor controls so far—a modern high-grade railway from Lake Erie to its furnaces. As one answer to the talk of competition, this road is now being double-tracked.

In any fight for supremacy in the iron trade of America carried on west of tidewater the five Lake Superior ranges are the key to the situation. No steelmaker today, thanks to Mr. Carnegie and Mr. Oliver, can hope for success unless he controls ore in quantity. The whole matter resolves itself into this question, How much ore can be had by any new rival at such a price as will permit competition with concerns that have already secured enough to last them generations? The big mines of Lake Superior that are not to-day in the control of one or the other of the present steelmaking combinations, aside from the Rockefeller holdings, can be counted on the fingers.

Mr. Frick has a location in the West for a large steel plant, and is likely to erect great mills and furnaces. But it can be set down as a fact that Rockefeller is not with him, and that the Carnegie company's relative position is not affected by whatever is likely to result. Its stores of ore in the ground have been selected with the requirements for every class of steel making in mind. It has Bessemer ores to a larger extent than any rival, has vast stores of ores suitable for making open-hearth steel, a quality that, as soon as the present excess demand is over, may push Bessemer from its position, and has whatever is necessary to make any steel under the best and most economical mixtures. It would be impossible for any new rival to come into the market and secure without the expenditure of larger sums than are readily available any such ores as are in the hands of the present great companies.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS

Handkerchiefs for Everybody.

We've been so busy selling Handkerchiefs there has been no time to arrange a display of them. You seem to know where the best bargains are to be had. That accounts for the stupendous trade at our counters. Fluttering decorations do not compensate for exorbitant prices. The bulk of our Handkerchief stock came from our own factory at Belfast. No other American retail store can claim such a source of supply. It kills the middleman's profit and guarantees you the largest value for your money.

Over sixty distinct kinds of Men's All-linen Hemstitched Handkerchiefs, half dozen in box, 72c., $1.19 and $2.49.

Women's Fine Embroidered All-linen Handkerchiefs, 24c., 47c., 69c., 99c., and so on by easy rises up to $2.09.

Women's Fancy Embroidered Hemstitched Handkerchiefs, half dozen in box, 54c., 82c., and $1.07 per box.

Women's All-linen Handkerchiefs, nicely embroidered initials, half dozen in box, $1.24.

Diamonds and Other Jewelry.

We rearranged and readjusted our Jewelry Department to meet the demands of the period. The reorganization included doubling the usual space and salesforce. Our preparations were wise. Go there and you'll understand why. Buyers are thick all the time. We consummated a trade that permits us to sell Diamonds at one-third less than the prices that prevailed before the recent rise:

Diamond Solitaire Rings, $16.49 to $209.24.

Diamond Brooches, $12.49 to $598.24.

Solid Gold Rings, over five hundred varieties to select from, $1.34 to $9.99.

THE BRITISH DEFEATS.

Our London correspondent gives evidence which is cumulative of that which has reached us from other sources of what he calls the "passion of rage, disappointment, and, I might almost say, fear," which has swept over England.

No wonder. Three defeats in one week, and three defeats at widely separated and critical points, are enough to account for a far more effusive demonstration than the London street crowd, to say nothing of the English people, has been making. Upon the right, the left, and the centre of the British invasion there have been distinct and decisive repulses. Kimberley is in very obvious danger on one side. Ladysmith is in equally imminent danger on the other. And all while the British forces have scarcely at any point reached the outworks of the great natural fortress which the Transvaal constitutes.

The feeling which these reverses have aroused in England is a grim and bitter determination to "see it through." The feeling which they ought to arouse in this country is a sympathy with the British in their trouble which should at once outrun and neutralize any feeling of sympathy we may have entertained and felt ourselves justified in entertaining on the other side.

The thing, in a word, has become too serious to allow of our giving free rein to our sentimental sympathies. Many Britons and still more Americans have been disgusted with the manner in which the British negotiations have been carried on. They have seemed to discern an intention to substitute might for right on the British side, to make the will of the stronger "stand for a reason." Such patriotic Britons as JOHN MORLEY and FREDERIC HARRISON and JAMES BRYCE have shown themselves ashamed as well as disgusted. We do not deny that it behooved them to be so, and that it is most unfortunate for Great Britain that, at such a crisis in her history as this has turned out to be, her destinies should have been intrusted to Mr. JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN. And yet patriotic Englishmen may exclaim, in the language of the real Poet Laureate, though even Mr. KIPLING himself would doubtless disclaim and might reverse such an application of his words:

Yea, though we sinned and our rulers went from righteousness,
Deep in all dishonor though we stained our garment's hem;
Though we stumbled and we strayed
O be ye not dismayed;
We were led by evil counselors; the Lord shall deal with them.

We repeat that the thing has become too serious to allow us to give rein to our sympathy with the Boers, either as the "under dog" or as a people who may, in some sense, be regarded as struggling, if not against actual oppression, against imperative and arbitrary demands which no people with a spark of spirit could fail to resent and resist. But what confronts us to-day is the question whether it would be better or worse for the world that the British nation should cease to play the chief part which it has so gloriously sustained in the leadership of political and industrial civilization, in the commercial development of the world.

To that question has it come; and to that question we do not see how any intelligent and considerate man can be in doubt what answer it behooves him to return. Least of all can there be any doubt what answer an intelligent and patriotic American ought to return. We ourselves have been subjected to the same hatred which the Continent that calls itself "Europe" has lavished upon Great Britain, and for the same reasons. As to some nations, or, rather, some Governments, we have been too free. As to all, we have been too successful. Our motives, all of us know, have been misconstrued and misrepresented, when we went to war to do a job of housecleaning in Cuba, just as Great Britain has really gone to war, no matter how much the diplomacy of Mr. CHAMBERLAIN may have succeeded in disguising her motives, to do a job of housecleaning in the Transvaal. As a result of the war which was thus forced upon us we have been forced into the way of empire, forced to "take up the white man's burden." Our one worthy exemplar in this task has been the British Empire. She is the one power in the world which can show us, which has shown us, how to make a success of colonies and dependencies and distant possessions. It is she, more than ourselves, which is entitled to the praise which our own poet LOWELL arrogated for us:

She of the open hearth and open door.

Every one of us who has thought about the subject knows that it is only upon British principles that we can hope to make a success of the possessions which have fallen to our lot. The unsuccess of Great Britain in South Africa has encouraged all her enemies to lift up their voices against her. The yelp of the moribund nations is heard as well as the growl of the Governments of the nations that are "waiting to be born" and in which the people have as yet no voice, as well as the voices of the people who are so politically backward that they are willing to be enslaved. Every one of them is willing and waiting to do her a mischief, now that she has been led into a political and military blunder. Now is the time when a clear voice should be heard from this side of the Atlantic, a clear but by no means an official voice, proclaiming that the people of the United States know that Great Britain is fighting their battles in the modern world and making known an unquestioning belief that the predominance of the English-speaking race in the world is even better assured for the twentieth century than it is recognized at the end of the nineteenth.

ARE WE DEGENERATE?

In a number of the eulogies pronounced during the past week on the character and services of WASHINGTON there has been a note of despondency at the assumed contrast between the spirit of the people in those days and in ours. The feeling is more or less bitterly and emphatically expressed that it would no longer be possible for a leader so lofty in his purpose and so pure and unselfish in his conduct to get the following that WASHINGTON got both in military and in civil life.

We shall not undertake to say whether a crisis such as WASHINGTON met would find the Nation provided with a like leader, but we are confident that such a leader might readily secure more general and more faithful support than WASHINGTON really enjoyed. Fortunately, perhaps, the darker side of a time like that of WASHINGTON fades from history, and especially is it true that the shining virtues of so noble a character cast a kind of glory on those associated with him that they are not in themselves capable of producing.

Any one who will take the trouble to read even cursorily the letters of Washington himself will discover that he found plenty of cause in some of the men on whom he was dependent for discouragement and disgust, and, had that been possible to his stout heart, for despair. It was from the camp at Cambridge in 1775, when the first ardor of the struggle was not yet lost, that he uttered the angry cry: "There are men among us so basely sordid as to counteract all our exertions for the sake of a little gain." And a few months later, when he was endeavoring to carry out a partial reorganization of the army, and at the same time to maintain the precarious position from which he sought to force the evacuation of Boston, he wrote in confidence to a member of the Congress: "Such a dearth of public spirit and such want of virtue, such stock jobbing and fertility in all the low arts to obtain advantage of one kind and another in this change of military arrangement, I never saw before, and pray GOD's mercy I may never be witness to again. I tremble at the prospect."

These are not isolated and exceptional expressions. Like ones are to be found not only all through the correspondence of the Revolution, but in that of the period of his Presidency. Every student of the history of that time knows the outrageous abuse to which he was subjected by his political opponents, especially as the close of his second term drew near. Much of this was due, of course, to the passions aroused by the war, and particularly to the lingering animosity toward England, with the ideas and institutions of which he was suspected of being in too strong sympathy. But even this suspicion was grossly unjust, and the persecution of WASHINGTON—it was nothing less—was a proof of a level of public intelligence beyond all question lower than prevails now.

Though WASHINGTON himself was as pure as snow, there were measures of his administration that cannot be exceeded to-day in the corruption to which they gave rise. For these HAMILTON—to whom the Nation owes a great debt—was chiefly responsible. While his own motives in them are not questioned, he made no secret of his expectation that the newly founded Federal Government might be strengthened by attaching to it selfish and unscrupulous men through ties of practical corruption. The history of his tactics in securing his ends in the State of New York would make the most daring schemes of Tammany seem timid. They were only surpassed by those of the opposition, with which the great JEFFERSON was identified.

We shall not be accused of wishing to excuse the evils or the vices of the present by comparing them with like or worse vices and evils in the time of our forefathers. But surely such comparison does not justify despair. What our fathers did to escape the consequences of then existing mischiefs we can the more readily do if we recognize the facts as they were and as they are. It would be a pity if we could not learn something from their experience. We believe that on the whole the American nation has advanced, even when measured by the standard of the time of WASHINGTON, and we are confident that it will continue to advance. We are a very different people from that which held the scattered stations on the eastern slope of the Alleghanies, and the problems with which we have to deal are very different. We do not believe that they are more baffling or that the nation will be found less able to solve them. As the Americans of the close of the eighteenth century were welded into a strong young State on the anvil of war, and as the Americans of the middle of the nineteenth century fought out among themselves the tremendous question of slavery and became the most united and vigorous of modern nations, so, we are sure, they will, under the beneficent influence of their essentially free institutions, work out with steadfast progress the tasks the future may impose.

"ATTACHES" AND SPIES.

Undoubtedly there is something very gallant and chivalric, and thus attractive, about the character of the German Emperor. The resemblance which has been found by psychological inquirers between him and the present Governor of New York is more than merely fanciful. We can fancy "Governor WILHELM" doing most of the things that Governor ROOSEVELT has been doing and "Kaiser TEDDY" doing most of the things that Kaiser WILHELM has been doing.

It required no particular perceptiveness to discover that services were demanded of a Military Attaché at a foreign Court, in the condition which the "Attaché" business has been assuming, which could not decently be required of an officer and a gentleman. This journal pointed out that fact long before the Dreyfus case attained its malodorous vogue. But it is one thing to perceive such a fact as this and quite another to give effect to one's perceptions, when one is in a position of official and still more of "imperial" responsibility. This latter is what the Kaiser has been doing. It is a consideration of the Dreyfus case which has impelled him to this conclusion. Having reached it he proceeds to put it into action by recalling his Military Attaché at Paris, the capital where the scandal arose, and by giving out that "a German officer ought not to be expected to furnish to his home Government information inconsistent with a nice sense of honor."

There can be no doubt that he is in the right. A Military Attaché is either an ornamental and rather superfluous appendage to an embassy or else he is a person whose desire is to find out what the Government to which he is accredited desires to conceal. The military information which he can get without trouble is not the information he is valued for getting, since it is open to whoever chooses to ask for it. It is the information that is withheld from him that he is expected to obtain. This means that he is the head of a bureau of spies, and that it is his business to bribe men to betray their country, if in no other way he can get at their official secrets. Espionage is a necessity in time of war, and the spy, as well as the employer of spies, may be a patriot and a man of honor. But in time of peace, and between nations ostensibly friendly, it is a dirty business, in which officers and gentlemen should not be required to engage. The proposition is plain enough, but it is more than doubtful whether any other monarch in Europe than the German Kaiser would make the practical application of it. He is to be respected accordingly, and his action may very likely lead to a revision of the whole code of diplomatic ethics relating to the appointment and functions of Military Attachés.

POPULAR INSANITY IN THE ROBERTS CASE.

Those sad men who make mental pathology the subject of life study have given some attention to the phenomenon of imitative or suggested action among men in crowds, where an idea possessing a few minds spreads throughout the mass until it possesses all minds, quite independent of any conscious exercise of the reasoning faculty. Politicians and stump speakers have often observed the phenomenon without understanding its nature. Writers of political histories recognize its effects but rarely note its inception and progress. Yet the behavior of crowds under the influence of suggestion is a subject that cannot be ignored by the careful analyst of the working of government by the people. Sir HENRY MAINE comes very near a true conception of this force in the following passage from his "Popular Government":

> In our day a movement appears to have very distinctly set in toward unmodified democracy, the government of a great multitude of men striving to take the bulk of their own public affairs into their own hands. Such a government can only decide the questions submitted to it as the old courts of justice decided them, by applauding somebody who speaks to it. The ruling multitude will only form an opinion by following the opinion of somebody—it may be a great party leader—it may be a small local politician—it may be of an organized association—it may be of an impersonal newspaper. * * * Crowds of men can be got to assent to general statements, clothed in striking language, but unverified and perhaps incapable of verification; and thus there is formed a sort of sham and pretence of public opinion. There has been a loose acquiescence in a vague proposition, and then the people, whose voice is the voice of GOD, is assumed to have spoken.

The insanity of the American people over the polygamist ROBERTS is a typical case. It is a fine pathological specimen. We hope that no anti-Roberts man or woman will be offended by our use of the word insanity. It is the right word. Insanity is a condition where the subject is removed from the control of right reason, and it may result either from organic or functional disease. It is a function here that is at fault. Wholesome and salutary respect for law has been overslaughed by a hysterical manifestation of a moral sentiment. Knowing and feeling that the polygamous relation is immoral and revolting, the people have insisted that their Representatives in Congress should keep ROBERTS out of the seat to which he was lawfully elected, and from which, until he had taken the oath, he could not be excluded without violence to the Constitution. They put a question of private morals above a question of public law.

The clear principle of law is that Mr. ROBERTS, satisfying the Constitutional requirement of eligibility and holding a valid certificate of election, was entitled to take the oath of office and his seat. That is or should be evident to every competent student of the precedents and the provisions of the Constitution. Then and not till then the House could properly begin an inquiry into his qualifications to sit and act as a member of Congress. Then, his disqualification being duly established, he could be lawfully excluded. That is the law of the Roberts case.

The people showed that they cared nothing about the law. Their moral loathing of this polygamist made them indifferent to the Constitution, of which they are commonly most reverent. They signed by millions a petition for his exclusion. Here was a beautiful example of insanity by suggestion, the insanity of crowds—beautiful, we mean in the pathological sense; for from the point of view of the student and defender of popular institutions it is seriously disquieting. It is a grave matter for the people in a democracy to lose their sense of proportion and perpetrate a greater evil in seeking to cure a less. Having lived in the polygamous relation, Mr. ROBERTS was sinful according to prevailing ethical standards; and he was unquestionably a lawbreaker. But these minor evils are certainly corrigible by the orderly process of law. The major evil of a violation of the Constitution and the creation of a dangerous precedent is without complete remedy and constitutes a continuing danger. The clamor of the people has forced their Representatives to put the less above the greater. That was unsound judgment, that was popular insanity.

The recent remarkable gust of anger at Admiral DEWEY was another illustration of the misjudgment of the crowd under suggestion. Like a flock of sheep following its leader, the mass, under the sway of the imitative impulse, began with one accord to abuse the Admiral whom a few days earlier it had covered with adulation. Then, under the guidance of the few who had not lost their heads, it returned to sanity and made voluble amends for its error.

The newspapers have many sins. But may it not be set to their credit that there be some among them that, in times of popular madness, when reason has fled from the crowd and a false public opinion has been created and is in danger of becoming effective, give good counsel to the people, expose error, and point out the true path? The deterrent force of the press upon such occasions of unwholesome excitement is manifestly of value in restoring the normal condition of the political organism.

THE CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY.

There is one good work in this city that is entitled to especial consideration at this time, peculiarly consecrated to the happiness of children. It is the Children's Aid Society.

Since its organization under the wise and faithful guidance of the lamented CHARLES LORING BRACE its work has steadily extended with constantly greater demands on its resources and on the energy and zeal of those engaged in it. Its usefulness has kept pace with the extension of its field so far as the contributions to its funds would permit. Its principle of action is the same and the results are as rich as ever.

The one object of the society, as its name indicates, is to aid the children who need help not merely in support, but far more in education and in surrounding them with the influences of a pure home and enabling them to become decent, self-sustaining, and self-respecting members of the community. When we recall the conditions in which the lot of thousands of the children of the city is cast, the forces that unite to condemn them to a life of want, of suffering, or of only too probable vice, the value of such aid must seem incalculable. It has been shown to be so in hundreds of cases.

There can be no gift more completely in accord with the spirit of the Christmas time than a contribution to the Children's Aid Society.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—In succeeding to the office held by Gen. BROOKE, Gen. WOOD has attained the position toward which the natural course of events has for a year been tending to carry him. At Havana and in control of all Cuba he can do no better work than he did at Santiago, but he will do more of it, and the beneficial effects of his energetic and judicious rule will be felt all over the island instead of in a single corner of it. His predecessor need feel no humiliation at finding himself recalled. The administration of Gen. BROOKE has been criticised with some severity and perhaps with some justice, but it has been a good one on the whole, and he will leave Cuba in a vastly better condition than it was when he assumed control there, a fact which shows plainly enough that his grave mistakes have not been numerous. He goes with the excellence of his intentions unquestioned either in Cuba or the United States, and even the irritable and suspicious politicians of Havana have found more fault with him in small matters of civil government than in large ones. Thanks to him, Gen. WOOD will take up the problems of reconstruction with no scandals of any sort to redeem and no well-justified or deeply seated prejudices to overcome. To assert that he will make as complete and brilliant a success in the broad field as in the narrow one would be unsafe, for he must now depend, not on his demonstrated ability to do things well himself, but on a much rarer talent, which he may or may not possess, that of securing faithful and intelligent services from many subordinates. But though certainty is lacking, confidence is abundant, that the pro-consular power will be well exercised by the new Governor. He will be cordially received in Havana by all except the little group of irreconcilables, and they can only subject him to a few petty annoyances. President MCKINLEY and Cuba alike are to be congratulated on this appointment, and Gen. WOOD begins his work under particularly favorable auspices. Americans no less than Cubans will profit from the glory he is expected to earn.

—For New Yorkers, as for other dwellers in cities, absence of rain or snow and moderate temperature are the only requisites of pleasant weather, and to us, therefore, the Winter so far has been extremely enjoyable. At this time of year, however, there is peril in a too constant succession of clear days, and already reports that show the nature of the danger are beginning to come in from the suburbs. Out there people do not regard rain simply as a maker of mud and inconvenience. They appreciate its close connection with the water supply, and for weeks past have been watching with apprehension the steady lowering of the water level in the reservoirs. In the Summer that would not excite any attention, but now it is decidedly serious. If freezing weather comes and finds the ground dry and streams almost forgetting to run, a lot of inconvenience and some little real suffering are sure to follow. New York itself can stand a considerable siege, but some of its near neighbors are already close to the end of their aqueous resources. And a modern house, especially one in the suburbs, becomes uninhabitable with terrible promptness when its water supply fails. Slight notice has been taken recently of the Weather Bureau's frequent prophecies of rain that did not materialize, because city folks are more than willing to overlook the substitution of a bright day for a storm, while they are irritable enough when the prophet errs in the other direction. It is well to remember, however, that our present joys may be expensive, and that the only good weather is seasonable weather. What is badly needed just now is an old-fashioned downpour lasting the better part of a week.

—Perusal of the dispatches from South Africa tends to render daily more and more pertinent the question, Why is it that England finds no use there for the very recently and very clearly demonstrated talents of Gen. KITCHENER? There have been rumors that he, like our Gen. WOOD, is viewed with a jealous dislike by less successful officers; but in a state of affairs so serious, not to say desperate, as they are now in Cape Colony and Natal, one would not expect this feeling to be effective much longer. KITCHENER has a habit of doing what he starts out to do, and so far as known he does not depend upon the friends of his enemy for guidance in the enemy's country.

—It appears to be a cause of quiet but very sincere joy in several parts of the country that the Franklin Syndicate ran its amazingly successful course right here in the metropolis instead of somewhere else. The assumption is, we gather, that if the fraudulent scheme had been worked in a small city or the rural districts, New Yorkers would have smiled in a way wearisome to all beholders, and would have hinted more or less openly at the ease with which the population of the American hinterland can be deluded. Well, there may be something in this theory, and certainly the metropolis is not in a position to resent the sarcastic sympathy now turned in its direction. Still, our friends should remember that Brooklyn is not exactly New York, whatever the charter may say, and they should also remember that a large, and perhaps the much greater part of the profits of the Franklin Syndicate came to it by mail from considerable distances.

—Our remarkable Board of Health has at last made up its powerful mind on the coffee question, and people are probably even more surprised than pleased to find that the decision reached after such long and unnecessary delay is in moderately close accord with common sense. There is proverbial authority for believing that all is well that ends well, but the fact remains that heavy pecuniary losses have been inflicted upon a number of importers and shipping men, the coffee market has been seriously disturbed, and an important branch of the city's trade has been imperiled simply because our Board of Health is composed of politicians instead of scientists. Their report shows no evidence of knowledge that the precautions ordered are adequate, and, such as they are, they might as easily have been devised two weeks ago as now. It is lamentably easy to establish a strict quarantine against a place, but it is extremely difficult to enforce one against a disease. To do so is always the first thought of an incompetent official, the last of those who are abreast of the times.

—Among the speeches made at the recent International Commercial Congress in Philadelphia was one by Mr. COOLIDGE S. ROBERTS, the delegate from Buenos Ayres, and in the course of his remarks he opposed with vigor the theory that "trade follows the flag." After stating that the number of American firms doing business in the Argentine has been steadily decreasing for many years, Mr. ROBERTS said: "A reason often given why the United States does not increase its business with the countries of South America is because of lack of lines of steamships carrying the American flag, but this reasoning is fallacious, because wherever there is freight to be had there the steamers flying the flags of different countries are to be found competing. From personal observation, I know that there is no difficulty in securing room at all times for merchandise, whether outward or homeward, at reasonable rates." The advocates of subsidized ships will regard this as heresy of the worst kind, but they will talk a long while before they prove that there is profitable business for more steamers than now seek cargoes at Buenos Ayres or other South American ports. It was Mr. ROBERTS's opinion that the way to get Argentine trade was to adopt better methods of introducing our wares and to be more careful to offer the Argentinos what they want.

—Severely as the tempers of patriotic Americans are tried by the oratory and the literature of the anti-imperialist coterie, our cousins in England have their greater worries increased by utterances even more nearly treasonable than anything we have to endure. Take, for instance, the following pretty specimen from The Dublin Herald: "Ladysmith has fallen! Such is the thrilling bit of news which has reached us from a reliable Continental source this morning. If it is proved to be true, and that the Irish brigade contributed to so dire a British reverse, the hearts of Irishmen the wide world over will thrill with a keen delight they have not experienced in our time before. 'GOD send it is true!' will be the fervent prayer in many an Irish homestead to-day. For if it is indeed the case that this important strategic point has come into the hands of the brave Boers, it marks the beginning of the end, not alone of British prestige, but of the whole robber system that has for so long plundered and dominated so large a portion of the globe." It is indeed a free country where the publication of matter like that does not increase the jail population.

—Americans who yearn for evidence that they come of noble forebears need not apply for it to Mr. EDWARD WILSON JAMES, though he has made a thorough study of Colonial genealogies and knows a lot about them. In the preface to his "Lower Norfolk County Antiquary" Mr. JAMES announces that he will not reply to people who write to him for information in regard to their aristocratic ancestors, partly because he hasn't the time for extra work, and partly because in a vast majority of cases he would be obliged to disappoint the hopes of his correspondents by denying even the possibility that they are descended from the quality. "The mere fact," he says, "that one bears a distinguished name is no evidence of connection with a distinguished family. Great numbers of men, soldiers, sailors, and members of the theatrical profession in particular, for various reasons change their names, and thousands of foundlings are picked up in the streets of cities every year and are frequently given the names of the most influential men in the country. In addition to this, in former ages, the bondsmen and tenants on the large estates in England largely took the names of the estates and thus acquired the names of the owners of the estates, just as the negroes after the war of secession took the names of their owners." Then come still more painful details: "A large majority of the people who came to America down to about 1820 were too poor to pay their way, and were sold here, or consigned to people for whom they worked out their indebtedness thus acquired. Of the convicts who were sent to the colonies little need be said. The overwhelming majority were undoubtedly men, and it is highly improbable that many of the women were of the kind to become the mothers of families, and it is therefore improbable that they to any extent perpetuated themselves. If an American should find himself the descendant of an indentured servant, he need not blush, for he will find himself in illustrious company."

THE ARCH ORIGINAL.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Every one must serve his time at every trade
Save censure; critics alone are ready-made.

The above lines from a great poet, we would like to call to the attention of Mr. Teunis Van Duzer, who writes a letter to THE NEW YORK TIMES of Nov. 28.

Of course, no one in praising the arch, or wishing it to be made permanent in Madison Square, intended any disrespect to Gen. Worth. I do not know that it has even been suggested by any one but Mr. Teunis Van Duzer that the proximity of the arch to the Worth Monument was a detriment to the appreciation of the latter.

However, we will take him on his own estimation of the moral statement that "the arch's artistic value does not warrant the sacrifice of spoiling the Worth Monument." May we not truthfully reply that the artistic value of the Worth Monument does not warrant its preservation in its present site, to the detriment of any better monument equally worthy that may be fittingly placed in that part of Madison Square?

The general effect of a city is far more important than the localizing of the memory to a hero in some particular place which may have had no particular association with him.

The insignificance of the Worth Monument will be more and more accentuated as the buildings in the immediate vicinity become more and more lofty, as they are sure to do.

The statement that the Romans derived their artistic inspiration from things purely Roman shows that Mr. Van Duzer is not a close student of history, for there never was a people who plagiarized as much and even stole as many monuments from other peoples as the Romans did. The Greeks themselves borrowed their artistic types and forms from people more ancient than they, and recreated them their own by modification and development.

No people have been able to cut loose from the traditions of the past in building up a new present, whether it be in religion, in art, in literature, in science, or in law. Each age of civilization, like each individual man, is the sum of all its antecedents.

If Mr. Van Duzer is sua generis greater than the sum of all his antecedents, the sculptors of the arch would be only too glad to do him homage if he will design an arch that shall be purely American in all its parts, and better than has ever been done before—that shall be expressive of our people with all their love of liberty, individuality, business ability, talent for big commercial enterprises, and ward politics—"instead of stooping to copy," as they did in their monument put up in the hurry of six weeks. He condemns it from top to bottom, but let him design one anew, and take six months about it.

No one supposed this present arch was to be reproduced for the permanent structure, but if this can be done by our sculptors in six weeks as a temporary structure, I think we can safely trust them to do a permanent one in the fullness of time, unless Mr. Van Duzer proves his superior ability in the interim.

BARBARA FRIETCHIE'S FLAG.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Recent correspondence with my uncle, Franklin Reno of Chicago, who was on the staff of my father, Gen. Reno, during the civil war, has developed some facts apropos of Barbara Frietchie's Union flag, which may interest the readers of THE TIMES.

My uncle states that Gen. Reno and his troops, on their way through Frederick, Md., passed the house of Barbara Frietchie just previous to the battle of South Mountain, Sept. 14, 1862, and she saluted them with a Union flag. Gen. Reno halted his command, got off his horse, and walked up the steps to where she stood, and shook hands with her, the troops and the people in the vicinity began to cheer, and Barbara Frietchie was quite overcome by the ovation. She made a little speech and presented a flag to Gen. Reno. This flag he placed in his box, and after his death on the battlefield a few hours later, my uncle took the flag from the box and sent it North with his body. My uncle adds that father was somewhat affected by the interview with Barbara Frietchie, and that as he rode away he said to my uncle, "Whom does she remind you of?" My uncle replied, "Mother," and father nodded his head in the affirmative.

The small flag which was sent North with my father's body is still in our possession, and I think there can be no question that it is the one which Barbara Frietchie presented to him.

POLITICS OF THE DAY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It seems to me that a striking feature of the politics of the day (I am speaking more particularly of local as distinguished from National politics) is the absence of co-operation between the practical and the theoretical politicians—between those who practice without theorizing and those who theorize without practicing.

The practical politicians conceive a measure usually adapted to further their own private, selfish ends, and, often without any further excuse for championing it, bring their whole force to bear upon its promotion. The theoretical politicians get wind of the movement, obtain a grasp more or less comprehensive of the motives which prompt its purveyors, look into the history of the matter—study the subject from a disinterested standpoint—and give their conclusions to the public in letters and editorials in our various newspapers and journals. While they are calling the wicked practical politicians to account and pointing at their entire disregard for the public good, the latter are smiling in their sleeves and going their own sweet way.

Take the recent agitation over the Constabulary bill. A writer in one of our weekly papers says the promoters of the bill seem absolutely ignorant of the history of the matter. He refers to a scheme of police control which has been successfully carried into effect in Europe. Now, does any one believe that, should this remark fall under the eye of the practical politician, he would take advantage of it?

I am merely stating a remarkable condition of things, Mr. Editor. I do not attempt to offer a solution of this problem of non-co-operation. Nor do I even maintain that any solution is possible, though I sincerely trust, as all good citizens must, that co-operation may at some time in the near future become the order of the day.

CHRISTIAN DUTY OF LAYMEN.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of Monday I read a full account of a meeting held on the previous day at Carnegie Hall for the promotion of Christian Science, and addressed by an ex-Judge from Chicago. While I have no sympathy with the followers of Mrs. Eddy, I could but feel that in arranging for such a meeting and putting forward an ex-Judge to address it, they were setting an example that might well be followed by the various religious denominations of the metropolis. Mr. Moody has often insisted upon the duty of laymen to speak from the platforms of theatres and public halls upon religious topics, in services arranged to attract those who do not frequent regular places of worship. Surely the time is ready for such non-professional Christian effort.

If we should take the lists in the churches that are commonly called evangelical, we should find the names of large numbers of Judges, lawyers, doctors, teachers, and other professional men. These men are the prop and support of all good causes within their denominations so far as their means and business gifts are concerned, but how few of them enter with zest into the distinctively religious activities for which the churches exist.

Perhaps such men fail to appreciate the wide hearing that they might have from many who do not care to listen to the preaching of ministers. To such persons clergymen seem to me "talking shop" when they are presenting religious duties and privileges. If all of the prominent laymen in this town would turn their thought, business sagacity, and power of speech into simple, direct expressions of their own faith in God and in His revelation to men both by the Scriptures and in Jesus Christ, the spiritual revival, which all agree to be desirable, would be accomplished. It might also bring back to their original mission some among the ministers whose thoughts and utterance have been given far too much to the proclamation of negations.

AN OLD NEW YORK COUPLE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A few days ago an account of a very aged couple at Norwalk, Conn., appeared in your paper. They were married in 1831, and were thought to be the oldest couple in the United States.

In my native town, Smyrna, Chenango, N. Y., is an older couple, but they have not been married quite as long. They are Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Stanbrow. Gardner Stanbrow was born Nov. 1, 1808, and his wife, Deadama, Dec. 6, 1808. They were married Aug. 29, 1832, so they have lived together over sixty-seven years.

As far as health and mind are concerned, both appear as well as fifty years ago. They still attend church, read the papers, and take interest in the news, and are active in work about the house.

Trains from Yonkers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the interest of long-suffering commuters, permit me to call attention to a particularly stupid piece of mismanagement on the part of the New York Central. I live in Yonkers, and this evening desired to take a train for the West. I found there were trains for New York as follows: One at 7:03 and one at 7:20 P. M., arriving in New York fifteen minutes apart, and that no train left Yonkers after 7:20 until 8:38, or an hour and eighteen minutes later—too late for me to make my connection. Both the 7:03 and 7:20 are locals, the first from Croton and the second from Yonkers. The consolidation of those trains would serve both points equally well, as the objective point is New York City. In this event the Yonkers train could leave at 7:30 or 7:45, thus reducing the long interval of one hour and eighteen minutes. There may be some occult reason for this arrangement, but I fail to see where the company could be out anything by making this change—certainly the public would be benefited.

PHILADELPHIA'S HOTELS.

From The Philadelphia North America.

No city in the country is more capable of entertaining the delegates and visitors to the National Republican Convention than Philadelphia. No city ever handled an encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, which always involves a vast concourse of people, more competently than this city.

Here are nineteen of the best-equipped hotels in the United States, able to accommodate with comfort 5,500 persons, besides innumerable boarding and lodging houses in the heart of the city.

Visitors to the recent Grand Army of the Republic Encampment gave unanimous testimony to the ability of Philadelphia as a host. The entire array of some 40,000 veterans, soldiers, and visitors to the encampment was cared for without the slightest inconvenience. Where necessary, hotels provided additional accommodations by utilizing cots in parlors and drawing rooms.

Arrangements for accommodations for the convention week next June will probably begin in a few days. In fact, it was stated at the Walton and Lafayette that instructions had been received from Washington from prominent Senators for reservations of the best apartments for the week.

The capacity of the various houses in the central section is as follows:

Walton	900	Lorraine	200
Lafayette	700	Donner's	150
Continental	700	Bellevue	150
Bingham	450	Stratford	150
Aldine	300	Flanders	150
Hanover	300	Stenton	100

Flighty Woman.

"Mrs. Bruggs, you have more faults than I ever dreamed of in any woman."

"Well, Mr. Bruggs, you have plenty of faults yourself."

"There you go again—always changing the subject when I try to talk to you."—Chicago Record.

Real Mean.

Janet, (indignant)—What do you think? Will Slowgo told me last night if he had half a chance he would kiss me.

Kitty, (sympathetically)—That was real mean of him, wasn't it, when he knew he had a whole chance and you couldn't divide it?—Detroit Free Press.

Readjustment.

Employer—I'm afraid I cannot accede to your request for an increase of salary; but I'll tell you what I will do. I'll reduce the other clerk's pay down to what you get.

Clerk—Oh, thank you, sir. You are very good. It will be just as satisfactory, just as satisfactory.—Boston Transcript.

Repudiates the Responsibility.

"It's strange," he said, "how easy it is for a pretty girl to make a fool of a man."

"Oh, I don't think I would put it just that way," she replied, "but I will admit that it's strange how easy it is for a man to make a fool of himself over a pretty girl. Fools, you know, are usually self-made."—Chicago Post.

"THE PRIESTESS OF HUMANITY."
—LECKY.

In my hands I hold your future of unprofitable days,
All the crafts that ye profess are at my call,
Your impartial, grave historian now has learned to speak my praise,
Your great artist yields to my imperious thrall.

When your wolfish passions leap and bear all formal barriers down,
When your days of ninety-three run crimson red,
I am then the living symbol of your Reason that ye crown
With a blood-red cap of License on my head.

When in days again grown formal, ye would seek to cloak your shame
Lest its nakedness offend Decorum's god,
To grim want, to cant's injustice, not to me impute the blame
If I flaunt it wide and blazon it abroad.

Who am I? What ye have made me. An unthinking child—half grown—
Flung by fate upon a world of dreary lust:
In God's sooth, I take my vengeance, scattering wide what ye have sown,
And I hate you while I gnaw my dying crust.

Was it man or God, foreseeing such offenses needs must be,
Launched His woe upon the man by whom they came?
—It were better with a millstone ye were cast into the sea
Than My little ones, through you, should come to shame.

Man or God, your greatest Human, with a single eye to read
The true pathos of this world's sad Magdalen:
That the strong should spoil the feeble, should exploit the weaker's need,
Is the law of apes and tigers—not of men.

While with manly, kindly pity He our frailties weak could see,
How He scourged with living flame your fancied great;
Not the outcast, but the spoiler, the devouring Pharisee
Woke the lightnings of His wrath, and scorn, and hate.

Lafayette: The Boy Beloved of Washington.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES
By EDWARD CARY.
Author of "Life of George William Curtis."

LAFAYETTE was a lad of barely twenty when he met Washington at Philadelphia in September, 1777. According to his own account he must have been an impetuous as well as an obstinate youth, with more than the usual boy's tendency to ambitious dreaming, but with a talent for winning affection. He related in his mature years that he was disciplined at school for an essay in which he described "a perfect horse as one that at the sight of the whip would throw his rider." After the fashion of his time, he was married at the age of sixteen and he and his wife were passionate lovers their lives long. His uncle, the Marshal de Noailles, sought for him a place in the household of one of the royal princes, but the life of the court suited him not at all, and by a disrespectful allusion to the person of his future patron he managed to defeat that project and joined the regiment in which he had a commission.

He was only eighteen when, being in garrison at Metz, he first learned from the Duke of Gloucester, at the table of the Count de Broglie, his commander, the news of the American Declaration of Independence. He was greatly excited by the story of the struggle, but it is curiously indicative of a certain shrewdness in his make-up that at the moment his first resolution was formed to seek service in the American army, he reasoned also that "if Great Britain should win back her colonies it was all up with the French Antilles, with the French possessions in Africa and Asia, with their mercantile marine, and consequently with their navy, and finally with their political existence." He confided his purpose to the Count de Broglie, who utterly refused to countenance it. "I saw your uncle die in the Italian war," he said, "and was by the side of your dying father at the battle of Minden. I cannot aid in the ruin of the sole remaining branch of the family." But the lad was not to be dissuaded. After innumerable obstacles had been gotten over, he finally fitted out a vessel at his own expense, and eluding the order of arrest that had been issued for him, he set sail for America in company with the Baron de Kalb, and reached Philadelphia in safety.

His reception in the ante-room of the Congress would have chilled a temper less ardent and unselfish. The chamber thronged with foreign officers, seeking commissions far too freely promised by Deane at Paris. Lafayette sharply separated himself from this crowd by addressing to Congress a note in which he declared: "My sacrifices give me the right to demand two favors: one is that I may serve at my own expense, the other that I may enter the service as a volunteer." Congress promptly replied by voting him a commission as Major General, leaving the question of command to Washington. The General invited him to join his military family and received him with "perfect courtesy and friendliness." This was the beginning of one of the most famous, as it is certainly one of the most charming friendships of our history. It was the privilege of Lafayette at the outset to be able to show at once his courage and his possession of unusual military qualities. On the luckless battlefield of Brandywine, where the army was almost crushed and where the retreat was practically a rout, Lafayette was badly wounded in attempting to rally the troops, and despite his wound directed the stand finally made at the bridge of Chester which enabled the army to take a defensible position and saved it from complete disaster. When Washington sent to him his own surgeon, his request was: "Care for him as you would for my son, for I love him as one."

Lafayette had arrived at a time when the fortunes of the States were at a low ebb. Philadelphia was lost, and Washington, with only 5,000 ill-clad, half-starved men, was compelled to go into Winter quarters at Valley Forge. Lafayette rejoined the army on its retreat to this place and rendered excellent service in command of the Virginia riflemen composing the rear guard. Already Washington had learned to confide in his prudence and vigilance as well as in his energy, and during the long and cruel Winter he found the young Frenchman as patient and cheerful under hardship as he was eager in fighting. The foreign officers, the best of whom were a sore trial to Washington because of the jealousy they excited among the Americans, and their tendency to insist on their own claims to precedence based on their experience, were largely held in check by the influence of Lafayette, who in all things showed and required the most absolute respect for the authority and for the wishes of the General.

With the new year came a fresh trial of his fidelity. Gates, who had returned from the North, where he had been sent to gather the fruits of the victory over Burgoyne which Schuyler had assured, was engaged in the cabal to which Conway gave his name. They imagined the scheme of an expedition into Canada under the independent command of Lafayette, taking him from Washington's side and tempting his ambition to join in the conspiracy to belittle and finally displace the General. Lafayette refused the command unless he could remain under the direct orders of Washington. The conditions could not well be refused, and Lafayette set out for the North after consulting in the fullest manner with Washington. Neither of them had any confidence in the feasibility of the expedition, and when the means provided were found to be utterly insufficient, despite the utmost energy in pushing preparations, the Marquis, with the full approval of Washington, returned to the latter's camp. "I am now bound to your fate," he wrote in his quaint English, "and I shall follow it and sustain it, as well by my sword as by all the means in my power." And he wrote to Baron Steuben: "Permit me to express the pleasure your visit to General Washington gives me. That great man can have no enemies but those of his country. No worthy mind can resist the attraction of such qualities as his. I believe that I know him as well as any one can. His honesty, his candor, his lofty intelligence, his virtue in the broadest sense of the word, are above all praise."

After the French treaty had been successfully negotiated by Franklin and Deane the British abandoned Philadelphia, and it became the object of Washington to harass them as much as possible on their march to New York and to seek all chances for favorable attack. The advance was entrusted to Lafayette with a detachment of picked troops. At the last moment he yielded the command to Lee, who claimed it as due to his seniority in the service, though he had opposed the movement, and had at first declined to command. Lafayette, with characteristic generosity, yielded to the request. At Monmouth Court House Lee, in substantial disobedience of orders, withdrew from the advantageous position taken by Lafayette and began a retreat that would have proved disastrous had not Washington, summoned in hot haste by Lafayette, arrived in time to re-form the lines and change defeat to partial victory. Lafayette's account of the day is filled with enthusiastic praise of Washington. "In this affair," he writes, "badly begun but well finished, Gen. Washington seemed to seize fortune at a glance, and his nobility, his grace, his presence of mind were never better displayed. Never was he grander in battle. His presence checked the retreat, his disposition of the troops determined the victory. His fine bearing in the saddle, his calm bravery, his spirited expression, heightened by the feelings aroused by the events of the morning, aroused the greatest enthusiasm." That night, and far into the morning, the Marquis and the General, "lying on the same cloak," discussed the conduct of Lee, who was court-martialed, suspended from his rank, and shortly left the army, as Lafayette remarks, "unregretted."

When Admiral d'Estaing arrived on our coasts Lafayette was dispatched by Washington with such troops as could be spared to coöperate in an attack upon the British at Newport. The expedition failed through a number of accidents and there was bitter disappointment and resentment toward the French commander. The occasion was noteworthy mainly for the successful efforts of Lafayette to maintain the honor of his country's representative and at the same time restore harmony between the French and American officers. He went so far as to call Gen. Sullivan to personal account for an offensive allusion to the French in a general order, and obtained an apology. About the same time, much against the advice of both Washington and d'Estaing, he challenged Lord Carlisle, one of the British Commissioners sent to offer terms to the States, for an insult to the French nation. Lord Carlisle very properly declared that he was responsible only to his King and his country for his official words, but the young man's eagerness to fight for the good name of France, foolish as it was, counted for much in the warmth of his reception when he return to that country, as he did early in 1779.

It was a remarkable career that Lafayette had run in the thirteen months that he had been in the service of the Republic. He was only twenty-one when he set sail for his native land, but he bore with him testimonials from Washington, from Congress, from the cool and wary Gerard, the French envoy, and from the veteran d'Estaing, not merely as to his zeal and fidelity, but as to his military talents and to the soundness and clearness of his judgment and the breadth of his views, that might well be the envy of a man grown gray in public affairs. He devoted all his energies while in France to securing the dispatch of a fleet and army to aid in the American cause. From the first he insisted on what was finally granted, that the forces should at all times, when acting together, be under the command of Washington, and he deliberately chose to retain his own commission in the American Army. No wonder that when Washington received the news of his arrival at Boston tears of joy stood in his eyes.

The succor that Lafayette announced was sorely needed, for it is not to be denied that the patriot cause was languishing to the point of exhaustion. Nearly a year was spent, with varying fortune, before the stroke that determined the final victory became possible. In the preparation for this stroke the services of Lafayette were of the highest value, were indeed indispensable. Early in 1781 he was sent by Washington with a small but picked force, to be strengthened as much as possible by the militia, to defend Virginia against the movement of Cornwallis to seize it. Substantially the rate of the Republic hung upon his success. The loss of Virginia would have brought the loss of all the States to the South. Cornwallis was the ablest General the British had sent to America. Lafayette described him as "cool and active, a formidable combination of qualities in a foe." He had a well disciplined and well equipped force, and was strong in well mounted cavalry. He had burned his tents and all the baggage he could spare, that he might move with the greatest swiftness. Lafayette did the same. He was inferior in numbers, and was compelled to rely upon strategy pure and simple. The campaign, as Lafayette wrote to his wife, was a series of races, in which he managed to get in a little ahead, and of efforts to avoid fighting while seeming eager to fight. As the militia, including a considerable number of young Virginia gentlemen with excellent horses, joined Lafayette, he became strong enough to press Cornwallis with great activity but with the utmost caution toward the coast at Yorktown, where the British hoped for reinforcements by sea. At this moment a fortunate accident occurred. A letter from Washington informing Lafayette of his belief that the next project would be an attack on the British at New York was captured, while a letter from Lafayette to Washington informed him that Cornwallis was in a position where he could be hemmed in with the coöperation of a fleet. This plan was already among the possibilities contemplated by Washington.

The world knows the history of that plan, and its brilliant success. It is not so generally realized that it was the skill, energy, and cool courage of Lafayette in his desperate struggle to baffle the veteran Cornwallis and to corner him with inferior force, that made this decisive success practicable. So far as one cause can be assigned to great and complex events, it is not too much to say that the independence of America was due to the young Frenchman who sought it so generously and fought and worked for it with such noble constancy. Save Washington alone there is none of the gallant soldiers of freedom in that memorable war who deserves a higher or more secure place in the system and love of the American people. EDWARD CARY.

The Future of Fur-bearing Animals

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES
By Leon Platky,
Editor of "Cloaks and Furs."

The latter part of the eighteenth century is generally conceded to be the turning point which marks the expansion of the world's fur trade. Russian, English, and American trading companies then opened up vast territories to commerce and spread civilization throughout the Far Northern regions. Most important in this development, because affording to the pioneers both food and clothing, was the wealth of fur-bearing animals found in endless number and varieties unknown until then in what proved to be the world's preserves of such animals. The surplus peltry obtained by barter or otherwise, on account of its high intrinsic value and facility with which it was brought into the markets of the world, besides giving new furs and a wider scope to the world's fur trade, became a powerful incentive to explorers and settlers to invade an otherwise barren and inhospitable country.

Thus we hear of voyagers who explored the most inhospitable regions far to the north, which now, after many years, disclose a vast stock of gold and an inestimable wealth of other minerals. Regions which, in default of other incentives, would have forever remained a blank on the map, were made accessible and productive for the brotherhood of nations by their production of furs and skins.

Progress, while opening up vast tracts of land, on which countless numbers of animals have roamed since times immemorial without let or hindrance from man, while benefiting mankind, has successively and—alas successfully—crushed out of existence countless millions of valuable fur-bearing animals that now exist but in tradition. The hosts of ferae naturae of forest, stream, and field, to which cultivated fields or cleared forests betray the presence of their arch enemy, man, have been hunted and driven, step by step, to less frequented regions, where, for a while at least, they are enabled to escape the hunter's rifle and the trapper's pitfalls.

Interested statements of the impending extinction of species of fur-bearing animals are invariably brought before the public at times when fashion most heartily declares herself in their favor and as invariably result in a considerable appreciation of the market value of the furs in question. While these statements should be taken cum grano salis, they are in many instances but too true. They come, indeed, much nearer to the actual truth than a casual investigation of reported records of the international public sales, with their seemingly inexhaustible supply, would make it appear. The fact that, year after year, according to the briskness of the fur business, large numbers are offered at these sales of skins of certain species of which we are informed but a handful remains in existence does not by any means disprove the fact of their gradual disappearance.

At what a sacrifice are these skins obtained? How rarely will prime skins compose the collection of any single hunter, trapper, or collector? And how long will it be before many species of our most desirable fur-bearing animals will become extinct through the rapacity and lack of foresight of those most directly interested? The unprecedented prices realized, for instance, at the last London public sale, no later than the fifteenth of the present month, for Alaska sealskins which will establish their value in this country in their finished state at between sixty and one hundred dollars for a single skin are ominous for the seals. "The scarcer the animal the higher its price" is an old maxim that has settled the existence of entire families of the animal kingdom.

The season of 1899-1900, while a profitable one for the fur trade throughout the entire world, has, owing to the enormous prices paid for skins, and owing to the continued high incentive values established even now, cut deeply and lastingly into the fur reserve and stock of the world. The unprecedentedly large quantities consumed and now collected in response to the urgent demand speak louder than words of the fearful slaughter for which a day of reckoning must and will come. And what has the fur trade done to guard itself against an ultimate decline of the industry in view of an ever-increasing demand and a steadily decreasing stock and reserve of fur-bearing animals? Have the traders been content to kill the goose that laid the golden egg and to work upon the maxim of "After us the Deluge"? or have they, perhaps, opened other sources from which to draw? A number of sources, indeed, will remain permanently open and certain species are in no danger of extinction. Thus an important supply of fur-bearing animals will ever be assured from those animals for which the dread or presence of man has not the same effect as on those that he relentlessly hunts to extirpation. Centuries of proximity to human habitation, and the protection of "close seasons" seem to have robbed such ferae naturae as the fox, squirrel, raccoon, hare, marten, opossum, &c., of that fear that has driven the wild cat, the lynx, the bears, and the wolves, as well as other ferocious beasts, from their lairs and haunts and cleared from their presence entire continents. In countries that have been for centuries in the highest state of cultivation such animals as the marmot, muskrat, wombat, skunk, mink, and marten are found, in small numbers, it is true, yet in their aggregate forming a sure and fairly large source on which the fur trade may always rely. Another large, but, as far as its duration is concerned, less certain reserve of fur skins is found in the tracts of virgin lands on the American, Asian, and African continents. The inaccessibility of these regions, as in the arctic regions, assures to the world for many years to come a large supply of some of the most valuable and valued peltries known to the trade.

It is not in the chimerical artificial raising or farming of wild fur-bearing animals that the modern furrier expects to find relief. It is rather his own ingenuity that may stand him in good stead when the dreaded moment may arrive. He may not by that time need to dread it any longer. In the meantime the dealer supplies what is asked from him and furnishes to Dame Fashion, regardless of consequences, whatever her dictates exact. Working in concert the fur dyer and furrier have improved nature by employing the skins of domestic animals, the supply of which is inexhaustible, in so artistic or beautiful a manner that their value in the finished garment closely approaches and in many instances even surpasses the value of the rare wild fur-bearing animal. Thus of domestic fur-bearing animals we have the lambkins of Persia, Astrakhan and the Crimea, which furnish us with so-called baby-lamb, Persian lamb, Astrakhan and Krimmer skins. From Chinese farms we obtain the beautiful Thibet skins, mouffon, goat and dog skins. Holland furnishes vast quantities of cat, geese and swan skins. From Sweden we obtain the skins of the eider duck and other attractive skins employed in the fur trade, while France and Belgium, under the most varied nomenclature, furnish to the world millions upon millions of rabbit skins. The meek rabbit, not he of the warren, but he of the farmyard, of which annually millions are consumed by the frugal peasantry of France, Holland, Belgium, and Germany, leaves, after his short space of life is closed, a really handsome pelt. Although to the uninitiated the statement may seem strange, it is the skin of the rabbit that in larger quantities than any other fur and in larger amounts in actual dollars and cents, forms the most important part of the fur business of modern times. While it has been justly stated that from a muskrat anything in the way of a fur article, from a plain button to a sealskin sacque, could be produced, the rabbit skin lends itself to imitating almost if not entirely every furskin with the exception of the rougher or full furred sort. Owners of noble furs, such as Alaska seals, Kamchatka otter, ermine, sables, noble foxes, chinchillas, and real martens are likely, according to the present outlook for these prices than those for which they could be furs, to possess them at more reasonable replaced. LEON PLATKY.

Some Wage Earners and a Smith.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES
By KATE SANBORN,
Author of "The Wit of Women," &c.

LAST week was particularly full of good things for me. One day I drove from Wellesley to Watertown to call on Harriet Hosmer. She is with relatives in her old home—the house where she was born and where she did her first modeling. Recently reading in Miss Whiting's record of Kate Field's life of Miss Hosmer as a universal favorite in Rome, a dearly loved friend of the Brownings, and associated with the literary and artistic coterie there, a living part of that memorable group, most of whom are gone, I longed to look in her eyes, to shake her hand, to listen to her conversation. Every one knows of her achievements as a sculptor; her "Zenobia" and "Beatrice Cenci" are fine.

After waiting a few minutes, into the room tripped a merry-faced, bright-eyed little lady, all animation and cordiality as she said; "It is your fault that I am a little slow in coming down, for I was engrossed in one of your own books, too much interested to remember to dress."

The question asked soon brought a flow of delightful recollections of Charlotte Cushman, Frances Power Cobbe, Grace Greenwood, Kate Field, and the Brownings. "Yes," she said, "I dined with them all one Winter; they were lovely friends." She asked if we would like to see some autograph letters of theirs. One which seemed specially characteristic of Robert Browning was written on the thinnest of paper in the finest hand, difficult to decipher. And on the flap of the envelope was a long message from his wife. Each letter was addressed to "My Dearest Hattie," and ended "Yours most affectionately." There was one most comical impromptu sent to her by Browning from some country house, where there was a house party. They were greatly grieved at her failure to appear, and each name was twisted into a rhyme at end of the line. Sir Roderick Murchison, for instance, was run in thus:

As welcome as to cow is fodder-rick
Would be your presence to Sir Roderick.

"Frowning" mated Browning. Miss Hosmer promised to give us a book of reminiscences, and this letter, which has never been printed, will then appear in full.

A poor pun started another vein. "You must hear some of Miss Cobbe's puns," said Miss Hosmer, and they were so daringly, glaringly bad as to be very good. When lame from a sprain, she was announced by a pompous butler at a reception as "Miss Cobble." "No. Miss Hobble," was her instant correction. She weighs nearly 300, and one day, complaining of a pain in the small of her back, her brother exclaimed, "O Frances, where is the small of your back?"

Miss Hosmer regards Grace Greenwood (Miss Lippincott) as one of the best raconteurs and wittiest women she has known. She was with her at some museum where an immense antique drinking cup was exhibited, large enough for a sitz bath. "A goblet for a Titan," said Harriet. "And the one who drained it would be a tight un," said Grace.

She thought the best thing ever said about seasickness was from Kate Field, who, after a tempestuous trip, said; "Lemonade is the only satisfactory drink on a sea voyage; it tastes as well coming up as going down."

By the way, every one of the women mentioned was a wage-earner, and gloried in it.

The following afternoon was given to a reception at the Women's Press Club of Boston. There sat 300 cultivated, brilliant women, all journalistic wage-earners and many of them the sole support of several others. Mrs. Howe, more than eighty years of age, but with no signs of failing powers, introduced the guest of honor, Stevenson's stepdaughter, (another wage-earner,) who charmed us all with her womanly presence and musical voice as she told us just what we most wanted to hear—bits of the everyday home life of R. L. S.

On Wednesday Calvé gave us her marvelous interpretation of Marguerite in "Faust," thrilling and warming a Boston audience to a miraculous degree.

Coming home, my heart swelled with pride for women. I hear that one Smith of some Western university said the other day that "the world would be better off if every woman wage-earner were to lose her job at once." By crowding into the labor market they have a cheap Chinese-labor effect on the wage rate, and their competition makes it less likely that a man will be able to support a wife. And the old, old story about woman's proper sphere.

"Does that stir a fever in your ink bottle?" slyly inquires my friend, the editor. Not the least rise of temperature is noticeable. I have always been interested in the Smiths who have distinguished themselves. It was a Smith who discovered the secret cipher in which Pepys wrote his diary. A Smith and a John Smith gave us the first American book, and Smiths have done good work in every walk of life. It remained for this sociological Smith at the very close of the century to write himself down as a phenomenon, neither worthy of study nor an attack, as far behind the times as one who should deplore the railroads with their faithful fliers and sigh for the lumbering stage coach and tedious canal boat.

It is evident that if men had gladly and generously supported all the superfluous women (their wives occasionally numbered in) no woman would need to be a wage-earner. Only sheer dire necessity has forced females into competitive exertion for their daily bread. If this were to stop, many men would be left adrift. I giggle by myself over a few instances that come to enforce this truth.

A loving, trusting, home-making little woman was told by her husband after six weeks of married life, that it was a disgrace for any woman to accept money from a man; she must make her own hay. This astounding announcement was written. She accepted the situation; bore and reared seven children; fed, clothed, educated all; cared for this specimen when his health and mind failed; paid his funeral expenses; wore the conventional mourning garb of a widow; provided a proper monument, and has never posed as a martyr or heroine. She is known the world over to-day, universally loved and respected.

Another, a strikingly handsome creature, had the same experience, and three daughters to support. She developed a special gift, and has made a tremendous pecuniary and social success; was invited in England to appear before royalty. She told me with a merry laugh that her husband did once give a theatre ticket to the oldest girl and a celluloid comb to the twins!

A brave sister in delicate health is now supporting a lazy brother who failed in business, while he sits at home, dreaming of the possibility of lightening woman's labor by the invention of an automatic machine for washing milk bottles!

Stalwart, bearded men pressing into women's proper occupations, force women out and upward. We see them behind counters selling ribbons, exhibiting and descanting on lingerie; they crimp hair, wait on table, make dresses, cook and do all so well. What is left for their sisters but to advance?

Most appreciatives tributes are now paid by men of the true type to women wage-earners, and the new phase of affairs is cordially accepted. The kindness and substantial encouragement given by men is the brightest side of this question. A few will always remain hopelessly tied to the hitching post of by-gones. Such insist that women cannot work without losing their personal charms; that women cannot invent, cannot compose music, cannot tell a rattling good story, or make an extempore speech; that they never possess wit or humor; that all they are fit to do is to stay close at home and be happy!

My grandmother told me that years ago a woman who came in to work for a day inquired for my mother and heard that she had gone to Boston. With a look of horrified surprise she exclaimed, "Poor creetur!" If Prof. Smith is logical, he must eject the woman wage earner from his home—the cook who provides nourishment for his great brain, the waitress who sees it is attractively served, the maid who every morning picks up his shirt and stockings and sets his room to rights.

I met a young lawyer on the steamer during my Alaska trip who wanted to rouse me to expression and asked me if I didn't agree that women were mere cattle. I replied, "I am sorry to suppose your mother was a cow, but she must have been, to produce such a calf as you." Mr. Smith's remarks are suggestive of another animal.

Let me see, how many men did Mrs. Oliphant support by her pen? Who was it who took care of Alcott's family while he conversed as a mystic oracle? "I travel in Lou's chariot," said this dreamer, serenely. But why recall a hundred other notable instances? It isn't worth while.

Here's my proposition: If every male non-wage earner, from the worthless adventurer who secures our wealthiest girl to drunken Jack, who beats his wife on washing day for not having a dinner to suit him, could be eliminated at once, the world would then indeed be better off.

KATE SANBORN, Wage Earner.

Entrance to College.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES
By Nicholas Murray Butler,
Dean of the School of Philosophy, Columbia University.

In twenty-five years the number of students in the undergraduate courses of colleges and scientific schools has increased from 573 in each 1,000,000 of population to 1,193. In the eighty-seven colleges for men, for women, and for both men and women in the Middle States and Maryland there were in 1897-8 nearly 17,000 undergraduate students. Not only scores of public high schools, but scores of private schools and academies share the responsibility of preparing these young men and women for college life and college study. The examination for entrance to college is, therefore, a matter of grave concern to a very considerable portion of the population. Beyond this, it is of high importance to the public at large that the educational system by which so many of the natural leaders of thought and opinion are trained shall be simple, flexible, democratic.

Each college is at liberty to fix and to enforce its own standards for admission. There is no ministry or central administrative authority, as in Prussia or France to prescribe a uniform scheme for college entrance to which every institution must conform. We have thus had all of the measureless gain which comes from the cultivation of individuality, and we have also experienced the undoubted evils which unrestricted idiosyncrasy develops. For a long time the evils were minute. A pretty definite and generally agreed upon amount of Latin, Greek, and mathematics formed the staple of the course preparatory to college, and the admission examination was substantially restricted to these. After a time, however, the pressure from the newer studies began to be felt. English, the modern European languages, the natural sciences, history, all, one after another, claimed and found a place in the programme of studies; but not all colleges treated them alike or in the same spirit. Some grudgingly yielded a point here and there; others, particularly the newer foundations, put the new subjects on a par with the old. An infinite variety of combinations of all these elements and of varying amounts of them being possible in one college admission scheme, an infinite variety of college admission schemes resulted. The schoolmaster with pupils at the same stage of advancement but looking forward to entering different colleges, found himself first burdened, then discouraged, then exasperated by the diversity of college admission requirements. Education became increasingly impossible for him and for his pupils, and a process of special college cramming based on old examination papers and experience with the personal and institutional peculiarities of examiners took its place. The conscientious schoolmaster did not like the situation, but he seemed powerless to prevent it. So he began forming associations of his fellows to discuss it. The various organizations of secondary school teachers and the associations of colleges and secondary schools which were formed first in New England, and then successively in the Middle States and Maryland, in the North Central States, and in the South, have given more time and attention to the problems growing out of the college admission examination than to any others.

Two important and authoritative discussions of this whole subject have lately been added to the literature of education. These are the reports prepared by authority of the National Educational Association—one, the report of the Committee of Ten on Secondary School Studies, of which President Eliot was Chairman, in 1894; the other, the report of the Committee on College Entrance Requirements, of which Assistant Superintendent Nightingale of Chicago was Chairman, in 1899. The questions involved in college entrance are, therefore, now clearly stated and reasonably well understood by the representative colleges and secondary schools. This is the necessary condition precedent to any genuine and lasting improvement in the present situation.

It seems to be generally admitted that two things are necessary in the interest both of sound secondary school work and of the colleges themselves: (1) An agreement upon a uniform statement of any requirement for admission which is made by two or more colleges, and (2) provision for a uniform administration of nominally identical requirements. The time has certainly not yet come, and I do not see that it need ever come, when public interest requires that all college admission requirements shall be identical. But the time has come, some time since, when public interest requires that the same topics when required for admission by two or more colleges should mean the same thing and be stated in the same way. For example, the requirements in Caesar, Virgil, Homer, algebra, laboratory physics, should be uniform by topic. The secondary school should be able to teach all intending college students in Virgil, Homer, or laboratory physics as one group, and should not be compelled to separate those who are going to offer a given subject at Harvard from those who purpose offering the same subject at Columbia, Princeton, Union, Williams, or Yale, because those colleges all state their requirements in one and the same subject, e. g., algebra, in a different way. Personal idiosyncrasies of college teachers, pride of authorship, and institutional traditions have combined to develop and to preserve these differences. Public interest and the interest of education itself now demand that they be done away with; and as rapidly as this demand is given frequent and emphatic public expression and the several colleges are cited to show cause why they should not agree on uniform statements of one and the same topic, progress will be made in accomplishing a reform. Publicity is the worst foe of an unreasonable educational condition.

This point gained, however, a second and equally important one remains. Vagaries of interpretation and administration may, and easily will, nullify any uniformity of statement which may be arrived at. Moreover, college entrance examinations will never, in my judgment, be satisfactory from an educational point of view until their administration is shared by representatives of the secondary schools. They, and they alone, know accurately the conditions and the practical limitations of their work. They can at once detect and point out the bearing upon secondary school teaching of any class of tests or any theoretical standard of satisfactory performance. There seems to be every reason why they should, and no reason why they should not, have a share in the formulation and administration of college entrance tests.

It was for reasons such as these that a largely attended meeting of the Association of Colleges and Preparatory Schools of the Middle States and Maryland, held at Trenton, N. J., on Dec. 1 and 2, unanimously adopted a series of resolutions calling for the establishment of a Joint College Admission Examination Board, on which the secondary schools shall have representatives. Steps have already been taken by a group of colleges in the Middle States to put the necessary administrative machinery in operation, and it is not impossible that a beginning may be made with the new plan in June, 1900.

The functions of the Joint College Admission Examination Board are to be two, the aim of the first of which is certain to be accomplished speedily through the operation of the second. These functions are: (1) To bring about, as rapidly as may be, an agreement upon a uniform statement as to each subject required by two or more colleges for admission; (2) to prepare, or to cause to be prepared, an annual series of college admission examination papers, to hold examinations in June of each year at convenient points throughout the Middle States and Maryland, and to issue certificates based upon the results of such examinations which shall be accepted, for what they cover, by the several colleges in lieu of the existing separate and diverse admission examinations. While this board will originate in the Middle States and Maryland, it is hoped that it will in time have a national institution, and include the co-operation of colleges in every section of the United States.

The initiative in the formation of such a board must, of course, be taken by the colleges. The next step will be to call upon the Executive Committee of the Association of Colleges and Preparatory Schools of the Middle States and Maryland, in accordance with the Trenton resolutions, to name the representatives of secondary schools to serve upon the board until Dec. 1, 1900. The board may then organize and proceed to prepare papers and arrange examinations for June, 1900.

In order to obtain the maximum of advantage from this plan of institutional co-operation, it will be important, I think, to make the following administrative regulations, among others:

1. No college admission test shall be adopted unless it has been favorably passed upon by a representative of the colleges and by a representative of the secondary schools.

2. No answer-paper or other performance by a candidate shall be rejected save by the concurrent judgment of at least two examiners.

3. Rejected answer-papers shall be returned to the Principal of the school from which the candidate comes, both for his information and to enable him to ask a revision of the unfavorable judgment, if he so desires.

4. The actual examiners under the jurisdiction of the Joint College Admission Examination Board shall include secondary school teachers as well as college teachers.

Secondary school teachers are justified in hailing the establishment of this board as a new emancipation proclamation. If this plan is wisely and broadly administered, in a truly educational and not in a pedantic way, it will confer untold benefits alike upon colleges, secondary schools, pupils, and the public. Rational Dress for Women.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES
By H. K. BUSH-BROWN.
Member of the Sculpture Society.

TO THE LADIES of the Rainy Day Club: When I had the honor of addressing you, I supposed it to be just a friendly talk, so it was something of a surprise to find reporters there and extracts from my address in the papers. Their garbled accounts distorted the meaning of my words, which were not intended in a malicious spirit of ridicule, as has been made to appear.

I, therefore, take the liberty of making my address public, that our friends who were not present may understand that I am not "as devil as I am black."

You may be pleased to know that the next evening I encountered one of my own sex who took me seriously to task, and defended the present mode from every point. As a last resort, he said, "This slavery to custom is part of human nature and cannot be changed, however much you talk; it always has been and always will be. In the very centre of Africa the wild natives have just the same subservience to fashion, and would no more deviate from it than the men and women of New York."

To this I replied, "Where, then, is all this much-boasted civilization, where this accumulated influence of nineteen hundred years of the teachings of Christ, if we are, in these respects, no better than our savage ancestors, or our benighted brethren in the heart of Darkest Africa? The life and character of Christ were the very soul and embodiment of the unconventional." While I admit it seems like pouring water on a duck's back to protest against the sins which are common to all of us, it may yet be worth while to put things in their true light, even though I am made to appear ridiculous in the attempt.

I am aware it is man's place to be in the background in this kaleidoscopic realm of woman, to be, in fact, not only of a monotone in hue to contrast with her scintillations, but also to create the power that generates the motions.

In retiring to my proper shadowy position in the rear, let me advise the Rainy Day Club to change their entertainment committee.

Her mistake, the mistake of the entertainment committee, was in taking them seriously. They are not a reform club, but an entertainment society, of which there are many of similar name. They serve an excellent purpose, and are the substitutes of this generation for the sewing circles and reading circles of our mothers.

Hoping I may be forgiven for the reluctant acceptance of the invitation to address you on some topic of art, I am, respectfully yours, H. K. BUSH-BROWN.
107 East Twenty-seventh Street, New York, Dec. 13, 1899.

THE ADDRESS.

Ladies of the Rainy Day Club: When the entertainment committee asked me to address the ladies of this club, I was overwhelmed by the honor conferred on me, and am very sure she has judged badly in using her persuasive entreaty with me, as you will soon be aware.

Of course I wanted to know what the Rainy Day Club was, and being informed it was for the purpose of advocating the use of short skirts on rainy days, it seemed possible that here was a motive that might excuse a few words on the topic of "Art in Women's Dress."

The very title of the club is suggestive of many things and indicates that the women are, even here, the shy and timid angels whom we men love with a whole heart and could scarcely wish to change even in this, for herein is involved one of their great charms. Yet, I must point out that the club title announces that here is an idea without a conviction, a movement at reform without courage.

In spirit of the appropriateness, I ask if it is good to have short skirts in the rain, is it suitable, cleanly, wholesome, or attractive to sweep the streets with your dresses in fine weather? Certainly the ungraceful efforts at holding them up does not justify the custom.

Have you ever tried to reason it to a logical conclusion why women all follow the same fashion in the form or cut of their dresses? You do not, of course, think it necessary to the harmonies of life that your dresses should all be of the same color, because this last logical step would have long ago put you all in grays like the Quakers, or in blacks like the women of holy orders, or in some gayer hues. No, it cannot be for love of the fashion to have all forms in dress cut by the same pattern, for you surely do not think that every passing style, like puffed sleeves, is becoming alike to the stout, the thin, the short, the tall, in all walks of life, from the most wealthy to the hardest toiling.

No, it is not that, or you never would have attained the emancipation you have in the designing of bonnets, which gives us that infinite, wonderful, I may say, beautiful variety.

No, it is because you are timid by nature, timid by education and environment, that you dare not face the criticism of the conventional in the person of your dressmaker, the fashion plate journals, and the dealers in the wares you use.

It seems to me that bonnet making has in a sense become elevated to the plane of a fine art. Why should not costume occupy the same place? I see you gasp for breath, as though each of you said to herself, "My dresses cost me more now than I can afford, or more than I wish they did, and where would we women be if this crazy fellow's ideas were put in practice?"

I think I can show you that in attaining this better result it can be done at a less cost to each one of you than the aggregate of the present expenditure of each. In the first place, you are in the hands of the enemy. These laws of fashion that are so binding on every one of you are imposed by those who have things to sell—the dealers in fabrics and made garments. They publish the fashion plates gratis, and you poor, deluded women grab at the bait as though you liked it. You obediently change the cut of your clothes at least once a year, all for the good of trade and the depletion of your own pockets. You run like sheep, all in one direction, because you do not dare to be outside the fold of fashion. And when you make a protest it is called a "Rainy Day Club," because you are only half hearted about it. If you get an idea on this subject, do have the courage to make it a conviction and the bravery to live up to it.

Now, in taking up the purely artistic side of it, I hope also to demonstrate the economical. In order to consider this, some things must be granted—first, the non-existence of fashion plates; second, the existence of dressmakers who are trained in the principles of design and the harmonies of color—in plain words, artists in the profession; third, that the cost of material is not greater for an artistic than for a fashion-made gown.

Granted that uniformity of fashion no longer exists, and it naturally follows that frequent changes in a woman's dress will no longer be required. Consequently the dress we are to make for my lady is to be just as beautiful as her means will allow or her good, modest sense will permit. It is going to be made for her and no one else in the world, and will be not only the most becoming, but expressive of her own best taste as to what is suitable for the occasions of its use. It is to be permanent, and because it is individual and a part of herself she will be proud to wear it just as long as she feels disposed. For her it will always be in the fashion.

Bold indeed must the man be who would prescribe the number of a woman's dresses, or the years of duration for them. That may be safely left to her judgment. Inasmuch as this one is to have an indefinite existence, or serve, we will say, as an evening gown for three years, she can afford to make a better one than if it is to be cast aside or remodeled every year, and still have a long credit to the account compared with the present custom.

The result of this would be that the women would all be better dressed than they are now, and at less expense in the long run. We should have, instead of sameness in form, an infinite and, I hope, beautiful variety. Dressmaking would become a respectable and elevating profession that would broaden the minds of all engaged in it, and of every woman in the land, because she would have a new ideal that is now denied her by reason of the slavery to following the fashions.

If dressmaking could be lifted to the field of art where it belongs, then would we have the abandonment, or at least a mitigation, of the present sweat shop and factory system. This would be one of the great gains.

Before leaving this I want to touch upon the moral side. It is by no mere poetical figure that the artists have represented the ideal woman with a globe in her hand, for she controls the destinies of the world. This is true in more senses than one, but in no particular more so than in this question of dress, for it involves the whole moral question of our love of display that is common to both sexes.

We want to dress as well, appear as prosperous, and be as much looked up to for these things as those whom we see about us. "I have got to do these things in order to keep up with my set" is the common attitude of the world. A dinner party by people in very moderate circumstances must provide all one could command in the best hotel.

All this sort of thing is an evidence that we are striving to be more than we really are. This is commendable in the moral and intellectual, perhaps, but not in the material side of life.

The rush and pressure of life in our modern civilization are so great that we are carried forward, all of us, we know not how, and we do not quite see the true relation of things. National peace and prosperity beget extravagance, display, selfishness, love of ease and luxury. In turn follow enervation and a lowering of the moral tone. I am saying nothing new. Such has been the history of all countries in all ages.

On the women, dear friends, depend the destinies of this country more than on the men. The best of life is not to be found in expenditure on dress, or in the gratification of ambitions for display.

The abolition of the fashion plate would, I think, tend to more simple dressing, and would also give the women more time for other and higher things. Am I safe in saying that one-half of their time is now spent in making and remaking their costumes—changing them to suit the supposed demands of the hour?

I think the annihilation of the fashion plate might reduce this expenditure of time one-half or two-thirds, and the expenditure in money in like proportion. It would depend on the women, however. You could, no doubt, spend the time and the money more wisely, and perhaps more to your satisfaction.

The desire to be attractive in every way is natural to you, and I could not wish you to be otherwise. The men, I admit, want all these things just as much as you do. The American husbands are the most generous in the world; they want their wives and daughters to have all that they could wish for; they are willing frequently to deny themselves things they would like, but their wives and daughters never, and this is the rock that many a family bark is shipwrecked on.

Let me entreat you not to abuse this spirit of generosity. I admit the sin of extravagance is more the man's than the woman's, and not infrequently because he lives two lives in the sense that his business life and his home life are kept entirely separate. The wife is not made conversant with the general daily, monthly, yearly state of the business finances.

With an overgenerous husband and ignorance of the facts as to family resources, no wonder the family ship

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Wall Street has passed through a week of extraordinary incidents. On some days almost panic conditions have ruled; and in the list of net changes for the week only an insignificant number show advances; practically the entire stock list declined; and, virtually, the same statement describes the course of the bond market as well. Declines in bonds did not run to the extent of losses in stocks, but the list of substantial recessions is none the less a long one. The shrinkage in the market value of shares on the Stock Exchange extends far beyond one hundred millions of dollars. Throughout the week grave rumors have had circulation. Some reports have been such gross fabrications as to be their own refutation. Other disturbing representations have unfortunately been shown to have foundation. Troublesome developments have appeared in some financial centres and liquidation has been precipitated on such account. Money market rates have not much advanced, though a stiff 6 per cent. charge seems generally prevailing. Finally, gold exports have started, this development being due, however, chiefly to the financial strength of the United States, in contrast with financial weakness elsewhere in the world.

South African war news has come to be influential. For a long time the New York stock market ignored all the news, good or bad, from that quarter, estimating it as of about as much consequence as the Philippine campaign has involved for security market values here. But so extraordinary have been the developments of recent days that the New York stock market has shown quick reflection of the defeats which British arms are suffering, being in this a follower of the London market, which at times has been very seriously disturbed.

Measured from the standpoint of trade and foreign patronage, the continuance of the Boer war could not fail to provide large profits for this country in demands upon us for not only ammunitions and manufactures generally, but breadstuffs, especially. What Wall Street most looks at, however, is the effect which Boer war reverses inflict upon the British investor; and not merely setbacks in quotations, but large liquidating transactions have in recent days testified that this phase of the situation has become acute. Great Britain's drafts on South Africa for gold are, of course, stopped, and not only war demands, but other financial exigencies are so pressing at London that during the past week it became a matter of urgency to obtain gold in large quantity from some quarter. The Bank of France was and still is relied upon for substantial loans to the Bank of England, but the natural resort of Great Britain must be the United States; for here we have not only larger stores of gold, but are much better able than any other country to spare it.

On this account we have had a variety of stories representing that many millions of gold are to be sent from New York to England, one series of representations having it that these shipments were to be by a syndicate of bankers here, while other reports have quoted the United States Government as prepared to transfer millions of dollars to London as a special fund credited to Philippine war accounts. Rumors to this effect, and some too grotesque for quotation, have had much circulation; but not one responsible banking authority vouches for any of the tales to which Wall Street has been treated.

The gold export movement that has started, whether or not it proceeds much further, reflects commercial transactions merely—such shipments abroad being practically automatically brought about by sterling exchange rates which make such export transactions profitable. As to whether or not this movement will reach proportions of great consequence is altogether problematical, not one authority being willing to be quoted as making a forecast. What certainly is not in any important quarter disputed is that we have the yellow metal to spare, that shipments threaten no damage. Recognition of this fact is, indeed, so well established in Wall Street that official announcement of the first shipment found prompt sequel in an actual advance in stock market quotations.

What precipitated the stock market weakness toward the close of the week was chiefly uncertainty as to what might be the outcome of financial difficulties revealed at Boston and elsewhere. Some commercial houses of importance disclosed embarrassment and some banking institutions were put under suspicion. At Boston the Clearing House had to issue certificates wherewith to rescue one involved bank, while yesterday another bank there was unable to open its doors.

Rumors prevailing earlier in the week, corroborated by such developments, exerted depressing influence upon market values, naturally. It has become sadly clear that a tremendous overissue of industrial securities early in the year has congested capital gravely and has forced unfortunate conditions upon many underwriters. The matter of the intrinsic value of new securities has not been the issue; what has been controlling is the fact that there has been no actual market for new stocks when pressed for sale. Many—probably most—of the newly incorporated properties are making large profits, earning substantial dividends; but they are raw, untested, not yet popular—without market status; and holders whose necessities have required quick liquidation have found themselves seriously embarrassed. This has been true not in a few cases but in a long list.

Conditions of this sort, with their imposition of extraordinary losses, have not had strange sequels in reports such as have disturbed Wall Street, representing that both institutions and individuals were in trouble. Names of men of high standing and the names of institutions capitalized for millions of dollars have been freely bandied, sensational rumormongerings being carried on industriously. In some instances circumstantial evidence has seemed to point to the probability that there was not smoke without fire. "The tape talks" is a saying for long years dear to the Wall Street heart; and as day after day quotations have receded in various parts of the market Wall Street observers have become more and more unsettled in their views of what might be the mixture of fact in the fiction.

The situation in Boston has been the chief concern, however, of people best informed, and grave responsibilities have been apprehended as to some operating elements there, for Boston firms and Boston banks have been large advancers of money on copper mine stocks, Sugar Trust shares, and other skyrocketty collateral.

At the close of business yesterday there seemed to be hopes tending toward confidence, however, that the worst stage of the situation at Boston has been passed and that further sensational developments are not to be apprehended there.

Of rumors touching New York affairs there has been ample supply, and some of the newer trust companies have had their affairs and relationships much discussed; but Clearing House authority can be quoted as declaring that 90 per cent. of the disquieting rumors are altogether false.

It is, indeed, the statement of bankers of importance and with large opportunities for knowledge that the financial situation here is healthy, that grave troubles are not impending, and that after the present fit of hysteria is over Wall Street will have opportunities to see that where in some quarters there seemed to be weakness there has really been disguised strength. It is even intimated that in order to make their market ventures more profitable some interests much discussed have been simulating anxieties. This hardly seems, however, to have the sound of frankness. Wall Street has serious troubles quite enough.

Meanwhile, good times show in every business department in every part of the country. What Wall Street seems afflicted with to some extent is the theory that prosperity is a peril.

OUR ABILITY TO SUPPLY ENGLAND. WITH GOLD.

[FROM A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

For reasons that may be partly political the Bank of France does not thus far seem disposed to come to the rescue of the Bank of England in its time of financial need by offering to loan from its own abundant supply of gold to that institution. At the time of the Baring failure, in 1890, it showed a more accommodating spirit and sent £3,000,000 to London to relieve the stress. It could easily perform the same service now, and may yet do so if sufficient inducement is offered, but sentiment appears to play a part in these great transactions, and it looks as though the English bank preferred to obtain relief from some other quarter and the French institution were quite willing to have it do so.

While this is a matter of business, there is room for a choice of customers, and that may be determined by sympathy. At all events, just now the Bank of England seems to prefer to raise its price for American eagles and gold bars to asking accommodation in the way of a loan from the Bank of France, and our financiers are in an obliging mood for a profitable transaction because they see no reason for trying to keep gold in this country if it is wanted more elsewhere. Our supply was never so great as it is at present, and the only ground for objecting to the departure of a considerable sum is the fact that the coin forms part of our currency and all our money is finding profitable use at home. We have been coining gold at the rate of considerably more than $100,000,000 annually, and at the beginning of the present fiscal year the Mint had about $120,000,000 in bullion on hand. The gold in the vaults of the Treasury is approaching $300,000,000 and the banks of the country hold more than as much more. In New York alone there is $150,000,000 of gold in the banks, $105,000,000 in the Sub-Treasury, and about $60,000,000 at the Assay Office. The entire stock of gold in the country cannot fall far below $1,000,000,000. It is stated by the Director of the Mint as having been $945,798,788 at the beginning of the year 1899.

Of the world's production of gold in the preceding year, amounting to $287,000,000, the United States absorbed about $200,000,000, while the stock of European countries was not at all increased from it. In the general distribution they lost a little more than they gained. About one-fourth of the supply came from the Transvaal, but there has been a steady increase in that from Australia and from the United States, including Alaska; but, whatever the source, the lion's share has been finding its way to this country through the attraction of the "trade balance" and the facilities for investment here. In spite of the dying clamors of the disappearing silverites, the United States is destined to be the great gold country of the earth, and while it holds no single reservoir so capacious as that of the Bank of France or the Bank of Russia, it holds in the National Treasury and the vaults of its numerous financial institutions a larger supply than either of those countries.

So it comes about that it is an easy matter for us to answer the call of England for gold in her time of need, with little reference to the condition of our trade balance or the state of the exchanges. It is a time of year when the normal movement would be in this direction, for month after month we export far more merchandise than we import, and most of our balances in all our international trade are settled through London. But England's gold supply from South Africa is cut off, while she has occasion for an unusual amount for her war expenses, and the enormous volume of credit operations that are carried on between the two countries, involving securities and loans of various kinds, makes it possible to segregate the gold movement from the mass of commercial transactions. Our bankers, even those who derive no profit from the business, regard with complacency the sending of gold to England at a time when we would normally be receiving it from that quarter, because they see in it only the working of the law of demand and supply at a time when we hold the largest available supply and have no reason for withholding it from a pressing demand.

New York, Dec. 16, 1899. A. K. F.

THE BANK STATEMENT.

The bank statement issued yesterday shortly before the close of business pleased neither the bears nor the bulls. The bears expected a more unfavorable statement; the bulls thought it should have been better. As a matter of fact, however, it did not appear to be much different from what in generally well-informed banking circles was expected. The surplus reserve increased $166,300, while loans decreased $5,054,400, deposits $4,545,200, circulation $346,000, and specie $2,738,500. Legal tenders, however, increased $1,768,500—an item that seemed to surprise many.

In considering the statement it is well to bear in mind that the gold taken for export does not figure in the statement. At the same time the fact should not be lost sight of that not a little money was sent to Boston during the week; while, of course, there was a gain by reason of the return flow of money from the interior and by shipments from Canada.

Discussing the statement and the money situation generally, President Van Norden of the National Bank of North America, said:

"The statement was about as foreshadowed. Undoubtedly, the return flow of money from the interior was an appreciable factor in the statement. The banks received over $900,000 more than they sent out, and we at this bank received just about our proportion. Apparently, the return flow has well begun, and will steadily continue. In regard to gold shipments, there is nothing serious in the situation. The country is full of gold, and if we can send some to London it will improve the situation there to such an extent as to reflect favorably on our market. It is always well to bear in mind that, undoubtedly, the Secretary of the Treasury will furnish the banks with gold, in the event of necessity, by buying bonds."

This week's averages of the banks compare as follows with the same period in 1898 and 1897:

	1899.	1898.	1897.
Loans	$676,409,900	$708,555,800	$606,679,300

REASONS FOR CONFIDENCE.

Of Wall Street and business conditions, past and present, and of the outlook for the future, Mr. W. E. Connor says:

"Dun and Bradstreet's report business conditions throughout the country prosperous, increasing in volume, and wages advancing. The best-informed steel and iron men in the country—those who have made a successful business career, which is evidence of their sound judgment—are investing millions of dollars in new plants and additions to old ones. These plants cannot be in full operation for a year. Would these large expenditures be made if the managers did not see a continuance of good times in iron and steel for at least three years ahead?

"Railroad men and manufacturers throughout the country agree that their business for 1900 will exceed that of 1899.

"The silver question is dead. The Democratic Party cannot agree on any campaign issues which will unite their party. President McKinley's re-election is beyond all doubt.

"Disbursements for January dividends and interest will be the largest the country has ever known. A considerable amount of this will be reinvested in Wall Street securities. The liquidation of the past three weeks has eliminated all weak holders of securities. Wall Street to-day is on a sound foundation. There is only one unsatisfactory condition in this country—the locking up of money by the United States Treasury, which is beginning to affect the mercantile community. Our future depends largely upon the action of the Secretary of the Treasury. If he releases money, business will continue to improve; if he does not do so, there will be a restriction of trade; but it seems incredible that he should not take action soon to relieve the situation. The bankers who have advised him not to act, claiming that only Wall Street was suffering for funds, are proved to be wrong by recent events in Boston. Again, it is not well to let even Wall Street suffer. It is through Wall Street channels that nearly all the corporations must raise their funds for improvements and equipment. To check the buying of rails, cars, and other supplies by the continuance of money conditions which prevent the selling of Treasury securities by any corporation is depriving the manufacturer of orders he would otherwise receive, and is not good business judgment.

"London is our best customer for American investment securities and products. Any action taken by the country to relieve the London money market is of benefit to us. The close business relations between the two countries cannot be ignored. The earnings of our corporations must ultimately determine their market values. It is a time when judicious selection in purchase ought to soon show a handsome profit.

"The brilliant and successful campaign on the bear side which Mr. Keene has conducted put a stop to floating questionable industrials and checked the inflation of values which would have ultimately led to a serious condition of affairs."

C. P. HUNTINGTON'S VIEWS.

Discussing the report that 130,000 shares of Southern Pacific had been shipped to Europe in ten-share certificates within the last ten weeks, and referring to general matters, Mr. C. P. Huntington says:

"The report may be so. As a matter of fact, the shares are coming and going all the time, and there is no significance in the movement.

"As for business conditions, there is really nothing new to say. To-day is better than yesterday, and to-morrow will be better than to-day. We are enjoying our full share of the prosperity, and have nothing of which to complain.

"Concerning the Subsidy bill and its effect on Pacific Mail, really I am not taking any especial interest in the bill, other than the interest that every American citizen concerned in the welfare and development of his country should take. Of course, the bill would be a great benefit to this country. We are carrying only a small part of the commerce of the sea, when we should carry much more.

"I launched a boat costing something like $500,000, and by the building of it American labor was benefited. The lumber that entered into its construction was American lumber, while the iron was American iron, mined and manufactured here. So you can see what it would mean to encourage American shipbuilding."

RECORD-BREAKING BUSINESS.

In view of the fact that during the recent decline in Stock Exchange quotations, even the standard railroad stocks shared in the decline, this statement of President Maxwell of the Central Railroad of New Jersey is significant:

"Our business this month has been better than it ever was at this time in previous years. We are as busy as we possibly can be, and apparently that good state of affairs favorable circumstances to permit of its rallying in the Spring, so as to obviate plowing in and resowing. The actual closing quotations of yesterday showed slight declines in the leading wheat futures from those of Dec. 9, with maize at about even, December and May, New York, showing an advance of one-eighth. The importance of this coarse grain in our commerce and economics was fully set forth in the November statement of the Treasury Department on exports of breadstuffs, and taking into consideration its ratio of production to wheat —2,200,000,000 to 547,000,000 bushels—and its price, cash, 39¾c. to 74c., and the demands on it for glucose, smokeless powder, artificial rubber, meat production, and manufacture of prepared foods, its rank as a commodity is vastly more important than it was two or three years ago. The increase in its demand as a food staple in European countries is remarkable, and the American product is popular everywhere. A prediction that even the mammoth crop of this year will not be in excess of demand and consumption appears to be based on excellent reasons.

Of one danger to the Winter wheat Prime, in his crop summary, says:

Winter wheat was put into the ground and seeding finished about the usual time. It made fairly good growth, but in many areas lacked moisture. It is badly infested with Hessian fly in Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan. It was in these States the present season where the fly did so much injury to the crop, and there is no reason in the world why history should not repeat itself the coming season in this area. It is very hard to eradicate the Hessian fly when it once finds lodgment in the wheat fields, and the only remedy is deemed to be in a change of crop. The crop everywhere is bare of snow, but that is nothing against it at the present time. Looking at the situation as a whole conditions to-day for the growing crop are fairly favorable. Nothing to worry about, but at the same time nothing very encouraging, as the land generally lacks moisture, and it is hard to tell when the Spring opens what will be the developments connected with the Hessian fly.

The range of May wheat at Chicago yesterday was 68⅞ to 69⅜ cents, and of May corn 32⅞ to 33 cents, wider than it has been of late for the chief cereal, and narrow for maize. On the local port-market curb May wheat privileges were: Puts, 72⅝ cents; calls, 75 1-16 cents.

In their Chicago grain letter of yesterday Price McCormick & Co. said:

WHEAT—The crowd followed the crop report this morning and sold wheat rather liberally, and the British reverses in South Africa also had a disturbing and unsettling effect. Under these influences the market sold off to 68⅞ cents for May wheat, but in the late dealings all of this loss was recovered, the market advancing to 69⅜ cents, where it closed. As predicted in our yesterday's letter, the Government report indicates a crop of wheat (Winter and Spring) of 547,300,000 bushels. The condition of growing Winter wheat is 97.1, the area of 30,150,000 against 29,933,000 last year. The final estimate of the Manitoba wheat yield is 27,922,230.

Liverpool cables were ½d higher to-day. A good increase is expected in the visible supply on Monday. Northwest receipts, 355; last week, 409; last year, 849. World's shipments are estimated at 5,200,000, against 7,700,000 the previous week.

CORN—Corn is firm; there is some increase in receipts, and arrivals promise to be some freer. It is a peculiar market speculatively, inasmuch as bulls get tired and sell out only to replace their lines after falling to loose confidence in the property. Demand cash corn from feeders said to be heavy. Market will easily work higher.

McIntyre & Wardwell's New York grain letter of yesterday said:

WHEAT—The firmness of European markets and continued small deliveries by our farmers were checks on selling freely on the bearish crop report. Only a moderate decline was recorded where a much greater one was expected. The Corn Trade News, received to-day, in commenting on crops reads them favorably in all countries but India, where the prospect is "gloomy." In England a cental of wheat is the same price as a cental of oats, and more than a shilling under a cental of barley. Dear money is lessening the disposition to carry stocks. On the other hand, the low price is against farmers' deliveries. The Western markets report receipts of 555,000 bushels, against 1,049,000 bushels last year, and shipments 201,000 bushels. Clearances from Atlantic and Gulf ports, 652,000 bushels. Sales to exporters, 120,000 bushels. The Government report, issued at 4 P. M. yesterday, made the entire wheat crop of the United States 547,300,000 bushels, averaging 12.3 bushels per acre. By comparison with what was indicated in September, the report is bearish and occasion for a weaker market. In September the officially estimated acreage of all wheat was 43,750,000, and condition 70.9. On a basis of ten years previous, with average of September conditions 82.59 and yields 12.21, the indicated crop was roundly 496,000,000 bushels. Subsequent special investigations by the Department of Agriculture practically declare said acreage was 750,000 too low, and condition should have been 77.1 instead of 70.9. Regarding the Winter wheat planted this Fall the area is 30,150,000, and condition Dec. 1 97.1. This is 200,000 acres over last year, when no condition was officially expressed, but it was very high—higher than now given.

CORN—An expectation that the Government would make a report on the crop of the year was disappointed. Statistician intimates it will not be long delayed. There was a little decline that can be ascribed to several causes not connected with the supply and demand for this cereal. There was quiet in foreign markets, and moderate export sales. We heard of 80,000 bushels. The receipts of the week at this port of 891,000 bushels will not tarry here. Most of it is applicable on sales for export. Our stock is only 1,000,000 bushels, and that is small with Winter just beginning. The interior receipts of 891,000 bushels compare with 791,000 bushels last year. Shipments from interior centres, 1,182,000 bushels. Clearances from coast ports, 601,000 bushels.

MONEY AND EXCHANGE.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Dec. 16.—The market for American securities opened weak. Stocks were offered freely and prices broke badly, with declines ranging from ½ to 3⅜, the latter in St. Paul. Later there was a slight rally, but the close was weak.

Consols for money, 100⅝; consols for the account, 100⅞; Canadian, 93¾; Erie, 12; Erie first preferred, 34⅞; Illinois Central, 114; Union Pacific preferred, 75; St. Paul, 121⅜; New York Central, 132½; Pennsylvania, 66½; Reading, 9¼; Northern Pacific preferred, 75½; Atchison, 20; Louisville, 81¾; Grand Trunk, 7; Anaconda, 7⅝.

Bar silver steady at 27 5-16d per ounce. Money, 5½ per cent. Rate of discount in the open market for short and three months' bills, 6½ per cent.

Spanish fours closed at 65⅝.

The amount of bullion taken into the Bank of England on balance to-day was £77,000.

American eagles, 76s. 6d. Bar gold, 77s. 9½d.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Buenos Ayres, 129.10; Madrid, 20.65; Lisbon, 44; Rome, 6.95.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Dec. 16.—Prices opened very weak on the Bourse to-day, large selling orders of Kafirs received from London causing a heavy decline. There was a partial recovery toward the close.

Three per cent. rentes, 99f 75c ex interest. Exchange on London, 25f 38c for checks. Spanish 4s, 67.05.

BERLIN, Dec. 16.—Business on the Boerse to-day opened very depressed. The news of Gen. Buller's reverse in South Africa caused a heavy fall in Kafirs, which influenced the other sections. Before the close, however, locals rallied and Spanish 4s recovered a portion of their decline.

Exchange on London, 20 marks 53½ pfennigs for checks.

FRANKFORT, Dec. 16.—On the Boerse today international securities reflected the weakness of the London market and prices generally declined. Spanish 4s fell 1⅝.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

In yesterday's market for outside securities, the only stock that was very active was Amalgamated Copper. Most other issues were neglected, some being traded in not at all and others to the extent of only a few hundred shares. Some irregularity in prices resulted from the day's transactions, but, as a whole, the market was fairly firm. Very few of the net changes were of any importance. Indeed the market was so quiet that there was little chance for much variation in quotations. Some signs of further liquidation appeared, but only in small amount and in a limited number of issues.

AMALGAMATED COPPER opened a point off from Friday's close, the decline being due principally to the news from Boston in regard to the failures in that city. For a time Amalgamated showed a good deal of strength, and it was not until near the close that the price showed any considerable recession from the opening sale. Final sales were made at 79½, and the stock closed at 79⅝ bid, a net loss of 1⅝ points. In view of the situation, the relative steadiness of the stock was viewed with some surprise. It would seem that inside support was being given, although no plan appears to fix the stock at any particular price, as was done when the stock first received support from inside interests. Conditions prevailing in Boston which have already led to considerable embarrassment are naturally somewhat menacing to the copper group, and the relatively small decline which has occurred in Amalgamated Copper in the last two or three days can hardly be viewed as extraordinary under the circumstances. Traders did not take any very active part in the transactions in Amalgamated Copper. Houses with Boston connections were fairly large buyers of the stock yesterday, and it was said in some quarters that stock sold for that account a few days since was partly taken back yesterday. Transactions amounted to probably 3,000 shares.

NEW AMSTERDAM GAS bonds sold at the opening at 92¼ and later at 92. They closed at 91½ bid, showing no net gain for the day. They were practically not at all benefitted by the official announcement that the January interest had been provided for and would be promptly paid. It is generally supposed that the money needed to pay the January coupons has been borrowed, and in the announcement few found any reason to advance the price of the bonds. Total transactions amounted to probably less than $25,000 of the bonds. Neither the common nor the preferred stock was active, and there was practically no change in the bid for these issues.

OTIS ELEVATOR common was weak. A small amount of stock offered found a poor market and caused the price to fall off more than a point to 22¾. The stock was offered at this figure at the close.

STORAGE POWER was active to the extent of about 1,300 shares, most of which sold at 11½. Final sales were made at 11¾, and the stock closed at 11½ bid, a net gain of half a point.

NEW YORK TRANSPORTATION sold at a further fractional advance, and closed with a net gain of ¾ of a point, the final bid being 11. Top price for the day was 11½.

Closing quotations were as follows:

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Dec. 16.—Much of the talk on the Street to-day, which was calculated to excite apprehension, was groundless, but in times like these it is difficult to sift the truth from fiction. Prices tumbled very rapidly during the last hour. The United States Oil group of securities naturally fared the worst. United States Oil itself, after getting something of a lift during the early dealings, slumped to 20 just at the close, the lowest price ever quoted for this security. Standard Oil money has come into Boston and has helped over a bad crisis. The Squire failure has certainly brought losses to more than one bank, but not of sufficient size, it is believed, to seriously affect any of them besides the Broadway.

In the copper shares Montana dropped sharply from 278 to 270, Parrot from 35 to 33 on heavy selling, Osceola was down to 65, Butte sold at 48, Old Dominion was off to 20, and Arcadian sold at from 24 to 22, with the closing at 22½. The pressure to sell at times was enormous. This was particularly true of United States Oil during the last fifteen minutes.

In the general market Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, Atchison preferred, Federal Steel, and Sugar were all freely sold, and Boston Elevated dropped to 94. The closing at every point was very heavy, and the feeling, though hopeful, is still very nervous.

There was brought over from New York last night $1,000,000 in gold certificates in part payment for the purchase of the 15,000 shares of Boston and Montana stock. The balance of the money is so far represented in New York exchange. No one is talking money rates at present. There are practically no outside loans making. Banks are taking care of their customers from 6 per cent. upward, whether on call or time. At the local Clearing House this morning the rate between banks was nominally 6 per cent., but nobody was disposed to lend or borrow. New York funds sold at 30 cents discount.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 16.—Considering the demoralization which prevailed in New York and London, the local market held remarkably well to-day. There were no breaks of serious import, and nowhere was there any pressure of stock. Prices, as a rule, were either wholly unchanged, or showed small fractional losses. The only exceptions were United Gas, 158½ to 156, and Pennsylvania Railroad, 66¾ to 65½; American Asphalt, 12⅞ to 12¼, and Union Traction, 40 to 39½. Even in these issues there was good buying on the decline.

The Electric Light case, in which an effort was made to break the contract between the city and the Philadelphia Electric Company, was decided in favor of the company to-day, but it had no effect upon the stock.

The market was fairly steady at the close at these bid and asked prices:

GOLD EXPORTS AND EXCHANGE.

The Lucania took to Europe yesterday on London account $2,450,000 in American gold coin. The increase from $1,700,000, the amount decided on on Friday evening, was due to Baring-Magoun increasing their shipment from $500,000 to $1,000,000 and to a shipment of $250,000 by Muller, Schall & Co. The first gold shipment east of the season is therefore:

Barring, Magoun & Co	$1,000,000
August Belmont & Co.	500,000
Kuhn, Loeb & Co.	700,000
Muller, Schall & Co.	250,000
Total	$2,450,000

Reports of intended shipments of gold next week by the National City Bank, Lazard Frères, and others were denied on authority, while Drexel was said that in the course of business the advantages and economy of shipping gold might dictate action.

The sterling exchange market was practically unchanged yesterday, the closing quotations for demand sterling being 84.87½ to 84.87⅝, with the market quiet and steady. C. Schumacher & Co., in their weekly review of the exchange situation, said:

During the week demand sterling and cables advanced steadily until Thursday morning, when the prices receded 1⅛@⅜c. per pound sterling from the highest point. The advance was gradual until Wednesday, when it went up like a rocket, gaining 3½c. per pound streling between morning and evening. While short sterling never wavered in its upward course until Thursday, sixty-day sterling and Continental bills were very weak in tone, particularly on Monday, when they had become almost unsalable. On that day the market was so bad, particularly for Continental bills, that over a third of that day's receipts had to be carried over to the next day. It was late in the afternoon of Tuesday that these accumulations could be marketed. The market from that day steadily gained until Thursday when it receded about 1-16 per cent., the same as demand sterling.

Yesterday with discount in London at 6¼@6⅛ per cent., demand sterling held its own at about $4.87½, but sixty-day bills declined 1⅜@1½ per pound sterling. Continental bills 1-32@1-16 per cent. Compared with the quotations of a week ago demand sterling still shows an improvement of ⅜c. per pound sterling, sixty day sterling ½c. per pound sterling, while Continental bills show no change whatever, although last Monday and Tuesday morning francs were about 3-16 per cent. lower, and reichsmarks 1-16@⅛ per cent. lower. For the cause of these fluctuations we must look to the Transvaal—this was plainly shown by the rapid advance in demand sterling after Methuen's defeat and the succeeding decline after the rumor of a victory by Gen. Buller—the defeat caused sales of stocks here for London account of 50,000 to 60,000 shares. The subsequent rumor of victory caused the repurchase of an equivalent amount.

Meanwhile the English money market is tightening constantly, the strain being such that assistance from outside has become necessary. It was reported at one time that the Bank of France had arranged to render this assistance, but the news was not confirmed. The only other outside sources from which England may now expect relief are the United States, Canada, and Australia. Our first shipment leaves by the steamer Lucania to-day. The amount so far reported is $1,500,000. This amount will probably be further increased before the steamer sails. Our own money market, though not as high as it has been, still continues at an average of 7 per cent., a rate to which we are now gradually getting accustomed.

Money rates are not quoted as active on Saturdays. The nominal rate for call loans yesterday was 4 per cent. The amount of Canadian gold received in this city during the week was $2,900,000. Of this, the Bank of Montreal had $2,400,000, the Bank of British North America $400,000, and the Merchants' Bank of Halifax $100,000.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

New York City.

GLENS FALLS UMBRELLA COMPANY.—The Sheriff has received an execution for $1,400 against the Glens Falls Umbrella Company of 391 Broadway, in favor of John Brister.

MARCO GANY.—Deputy Sheriff Rinn has received an attachment for $820 against Marco Gany, grocer and dealer in teas at 270 Hudson Street, in favor of Adams Brothers & Co. An attachment for $200 obtained a few days ago was promptly settled. Mr. Gany has been in business since June, 1898.

BERNARD TRAYNOR.—The Sheriff yesterday received seven executions against Bernard Traynor, dry goods dealer at Amsterdam Avenue and Sixty-second Street, in favor of the following creditors: George H. McMechen & Son, $154; Louis Manauer, $114; William H. Hill, $307; Oscar Fribourg, $129; John W. King, $184; Charles R. Culver, $187, and Lazarus Fried, $402.

FARMERS' BUTTER AND EGG COMPANY.—The Sheriff has received an execution for $2,326 against the Farmers' Butter and Egg Company of 580 Amsterdam Avenue in favor of Nathan Harrison. It is said the company sold out recently, and has liabilities estimated at $8,000. It was incorporated in 1884, and had creameries at Cooperstown, Collier's, and Portlandville, N. Y. Two months ago the company estimated the assets at $22,000.

Out of Town.

PHILIP H. BRUCK.—Philip H. Bruck, former Mayor of Columbus, Ohio, has made an assignment to J. N. Turner. The assets are placed at $77,000, and liabilities at about $60,000.

PETITIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

GEORGE S. WHITE.—George S. White, clerk, at Yonkers, has filed a petition in bankruptcy here, with liabilities of $6,838 to two creditors for money loaned and advertising, and no assets.

H. & M. WEITZNER.—Henry and Max Weitzner, who did business as the Berlin Cloak and Suit Company, at 173 Mercer Street, have filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities $1,695, and assets $298 in accounts.

NEW YORK MILK COMPANY.—Schedules of the New York Milk Company of 104 West Forty-seventh Street, show liabilities $1,593, assets $1,813, consisting of accounts, $1,202; cash, $11; sterilizing plant and cans at Circleville, N. Y., $600.

C. E. MCDOWELL.—Clarence E. McDowell, clerk, residing at 320 St. Nicholas Avenue, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities $2,613, and assets $5. There is only one creditor, who obtained a judgment for $2,613 in 1885 at Elmira, N. Y.

S. W. WALDRON.—Samuel W. Waldron, residing at 105 East Eighty-sixth Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities $21,189 and no assets. The debts were contracted in 1889 and 1890. Of the liabilities $9,348 is due the estate of Walter Waldron. He was formerly a builder.

L. C. KING.—Lewis C. King, residing at 253 West Eighty-eighth Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities $178,322 and no assets. He was of L. C. King & Co., importers of varnishes at 171 Front Street who made an assignment on Feb. 7, 1898. George E. D. Todd, his partner, has already received a discharge in bankruptcy.

JAMES AND ALLAN MACNAUGHTAN.—James Macnaughtan, formerly President of the Tradesmen's National Bank, and Allan Macnaughtan, President of the Wool Exchange, have applied for their discharge in bankruptcy, and the order to show cause has been set down for Dec. 27 before Judge Brown of the United States District Court.

HARRIS LEVY.—A petition in involuntary bankruptcy has been filed against Harris Levy, shoe dealer, at 196 Varick Street, by A. A. Joseph, for three creditors whose claims are as follows: A. J. Bates & Co., $1,267; George Silver & Son, $407; Lazarus Fried, $447. They allege that on Dec. 9 he removed his entire stock of boots and shoes and secreted the same, permitted a City Marshal to seize $200 worth of stock on an attachment; that he always carried a stock worth $4,000; that all the goods purchased from the petitioners were new goods, but those seized by the marshal were second-hand goods, and that he failed to disclose what had become of his goods.

HORACE MOODY.—Horace Moody of 15 to 21 Park Row has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $140,644 and no available assets. A large part of the liabilities is in connection with the Fort Plain and Richfield Springs Railway Company, of which he is Secretary and Treasurer. Charles Seidler appears in the schedules for $75,000 on account of the Fort Plain and Richfield Springs Railway Company, and also for $3,000 which he advanced to the company, and is secured by 118 first mortgage bonds of the company. Among the creditors are W. B. Brown, $16,707; Phebe J. Twombly, $6,664, and M. A. Frisbie, $6,373. The debts were contracted from 1892 to 1899, and outside of the railway company are chiefly for borrowed money, merchandise, and notes. He has three shares of the Nicaragua Canal Company, but they are hypothecated. Mr. Moody was formerly for many years an insurance broker and afterward a partner in the firm of Moody & Jackson, railroad contractors, at 68 Broad Street.

FRANCESCO AIELLO.—Judge Brown of the United States District Court has appointed Francesco Tocci receiver in bankruptcy of the assets of Francesco Aiello, who did business as Aiello & Co., bankers, at 180 Worth Street, on the application of Gen. S. F. Kneeland, and the bond was fixed at $30,000. Mr. Aiello made an assignment on Sept. 27 to Mr. Tocci, who gave $50,000 bonds in the Supreme Court. After the assignment Mr. Aiello disappeared and has not been heard from. Mr. Tocci has since been collecting the assets. He has found that there are unpaid drafts issued by Mr. Aiello to transfer money from New York to Hongkong, China, aggregating $140,000, and about 1,000 in number. Mr. Tocci has succeeded in procuring money from the Hongkong National Bank in China and London to the amount of $24,000, has converted the fixtures and other tangible assets into cash, and there is $6,000 to Mr. Aiello's credit in the Bank of Genoa, Italy, which Mr. Tocci has not been able to collect. There has been drawn against that account more than enough to cover the entire amount, but the drafts have not been paid on account of the assignment, but Mr. Tocci believes steps should be taken to recover the money. He has heretofore been unable to begin any proceedings for its recovery, as he was restrained by the court from making disbursements of that character. Among the assets is some real estate in Brooklyn, incumbered by a mortgage, the interest on which is now due and should be paid to prevent foreclosure proceedings.

COTTON.—Liquidation was the order of the session at the Cotton Exchange. Unfavorable cables were expected, but the foreign advices were even worse than looked for. The recent English reverses in South Africa were seriously considered in connection with a barely steady closing of the Liverpool cotton market at a net decline of 1@2 points; whereas the tenor of private cables had recently been leading some to expect better market conditions in England. The local cotton market at the opening was therefore 7 to 8 points lower. Later business developed a feverish, unsettled situation, with the longs, as a class, disposed to sell out, while the shorts picked up considerable new courage and sold with greater confidence than for some time past, increasing the net decline 7@9 points in the face of flattering advices regarding the crop movement. The condition of the Southern spot markets, the statistical situation in general, the cotton goods markets, and the spinning districts at large.

BREADSTUFFS.—WHEAT—Most of the forenoon wheat ruled barely steady around the curb figures of Friday night, which, because of the bearish Government report, were ⅜@⅞c below the regular close. Sentiment in the local market was quite bearish all the morning, and throughout the regular session room traders, finding nothing in the situation to justify a reduction of short accounts, increased their obligations on that side to a moderate degree. Neither foreign houses nor outsiders took any part in the market and it was a narrow affair throughout the morning with last official prices ⅝c under the previous night. On the curb, however, owing to export rumors and fears of political complications abroad, short accounts were covered in a great measure and prices rallied on May from 74⅛c to 74⅝c, bid, closing at the latter point at 1 o'clock.

The Old-Fashioned Christmas Dinner.

ne ol'-fashioned Chris'mas dinner's wuth a dozen now-a-days, hat's delivered by installments, in the sleek new-fangled ways.
ake me back, O almanac! to the time when sev'ral "courses" ome together in a bunch, an' united all their forces!
Twas a time when, j'ined together, old an' young an' saint an' sinner ould be found all gathered round one old-fashioned Chris'mas dinner!
Thus said Ahab Adams, merchant, from a stress of thought to free him, o his brother Shubal Adams, who had come from Maine to see him.]

ft I think that dinner over—how once more I'd like to try it!
ut, you see, it can't be managed; all my money wouldn't buy it.
an't fetch back the old-time framework; can't arrange the proper meetin':
ost of all the folks I'd ask here, long ago has quit their eatin'.

'irst I'd want a slice o' Winter that would fetch out what was in you:
ir a haft o' glitterin' blades sharp as if they meant to skin you;
'roze-up cloud-boats near the hills, tryin' hard to make a landin',
'rees with snow-white blankets on, sleepin', like the hosses, standin';
'ences peakin' through the drifts, clear plate-glass across the river—
ll the chimneys breathin' steam crawlin' upward with a shiver;
un a yellow chunk of ice; failed to furnish any heatin', n' remains for nothin', 'cept to be present at the meetin';
ritters in the barn sharp-set as they was before you fed 'em;
now and frost unusual sassy—yell out every time you tread 'em.
hat would be a val'ble mornin', wuth the trouble of apprisin'!
lad that Chrisimas happened 'round on a day so appetizin'!

hen I'd want our Dad on deck—up an' down as last year's cider—ade us toe the mark, you know—but a fust-class good provider.
'hen he slung his banner out—"Come an' hev a Christmas dinner," very one that got the word knowed his stomach was a winner.
ow they hus'led through the snow!—horses kep' their bells a-ringin', unners creakin' like a sign—gals a-cacklin' an' a-singin';
l' folks wrapped up double-bulk—baby bundles half a dozen—
ogs that wouldn't have thanked the dogs of the King to call 'em cousin!
o I'd hev 'em come an' come, ere the morning hour was through with;
Come in wagonloads on runners—more than we knowed what to do with!

Mother—wouldn't I hev her there?—would I!—well, somehow or other,
I hain't learned so I kin speak stiddy yet, concernin' Mother.
see times that I would give half my days of growin' older,
For a half an hour of her, with her gray head on my shoulder.
[Thus said Ahab Adams, merchant, proud of his success, with reason,
And his good financial prospects growing brighter every season.]

Recruiting for the Boers in Paris.

From The Saturday Review.

Here and there in the Café Pracope groups discuss the "distress" of the "Boeres." The committee is still in the back room at Voltaire's table, busy; a tall man, almost bald and pale, says wearily that it does nothing but talk. It has been sitting for weeks, he declares, waiting for recruits and 100,000 francs. It has got the men, but still waits for the money and—always will. At last we are informed that the committee will see us and, what is more, that the committee will join us. And soon the committee comes—not a determined score, as we expected, but a solitary young man with a soft beard and dreamy eyes. He bows courteously, and wonders what we want. His idea is simple and seemingly sincere; it is to aid the Boers "who are in need of help"; and so, in reply to a number of applications, he has founded a committee. He at the present moment alone represents it.

Four hundred men have offered their services, and are ready to start; but there are no funds. Each volunteer must have an outfit and pocket money; each, however, is too poor to equip himself, being either a student or a laborer or a mechanic. "And so I sit here, and wait," he concludes, "wait for some generous person to equip my men and myself, for I, too, am poor, and I also wish to go. When? I cannot say; perhaps never. But I have mapped out our route and made out a list of steamers that leave Marseilles. I have hours days, and details arranged. I have 400 men, all ready. But I have neither outfits for them, nor ammunition, nor money." Sadly he speaks, and sincerely. Slowly he rises; and, after bowing again, returns to Voltaire's table. He sits there to-day, he will sit there to-morrow, for hours at a time, waiting, watching and hoping. When volunteers present themselves he enrolls them. If they ask when they must get ready to start, he replies: "Je ne sais pas. J'attends. Nous partirons peut-être demain, ou à la fin de la semaine, ou dans un mois—peut-être jamais."

The Barrel Organ in Church.

From Notes and Queries.

To attend a church where the music is supplied by a barrel organ must be very like stepping into a bygone century, but it is an experience which the parishioners of Trottiscliff—A Kentish village within twenty-five miles of London—can every week enjoy. Its adherence to old customs may be pardoned, for a church was standing at the time of the Domesday Book, and the existing chancel is more than 800 years old. Its pulpit is the one that stood in Westminster Abbey until 1824. The musical capabilities of a barrel organ are limited, but the parishioners of Trottiscliff have a choice of sixty, there being six barrels, each supplying ten tunes—most of them very old-fashioned.

Tangier.

From The Fortnightly Review.

Were it not for the black, businesslike jetty pushed out into the bay for the convenience of the foreign steamers, and the flags of the European legations flouting the dull-red Moorish banner on the fortress—Tangier, in this year of grace 1899, might be the Tangier of at least 600 years ago; and, barring a few modern Christians on donkeys, with Paris bonnets, tweed suits, and cutaway coats, we might even fancy ourselves walking the streets "way back" in the time of the Crusades, while the people who pass us seem to join hands through the Middle Ages with the immemorial untouched East of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob Indeed, here the nomad successors of such patriarchs may still be seen with their camels coming in from the desert, pitching their tents on the confines of a town without roads, or wheel carriages, or any other signs of modernity save certain mysterious wires overhead, which have the impertinence to establish electric communication between the town of Tangier and its environs.

Out on the cool Marchand toward sunset (a delicious upland of downs close above Tangier commanding a superb view of Spain with the Bay of Trafalgar in the distance) groups of Spanish and Jewish children turn out to play.

The Moor and the Roumi (Christian or foreigner) take their evening gallop; the peasants, white-shrouded women, and men in brown-hooded jelabas, flock back from the town to their distant Cabyle villages.

As the shades of evening fall the Soko is thronged, but no longer with buyers and vendors. The whole place is now given up to light-hearted merriment. Here four champions, with long sticks in place of rapiers, engage in mimic contest before a squatting crowd of applauding connoisseurs. The story teller or comedian, two-stringed lute in hand, strides up and down in front of another group, gesticulating wildly. In a corner of the Soko, the snake charmer and fire eater comes in for his full share of attention. Town affairs, the last execution or murder, are eagerly discussed; and here and there debates run so high that a spectator might suppose that bodily violence, even to knifing, is about to follow; seldom anything of the kind happens.

Some Transvaal Names.

From The International Review.

Cronje: A General in the Boer Army. The last syllable in this name has the same sound as the last in "lawyer," except that there is no "r." (A great majority of English-speaking people do not sound a final "r" of this character, but as some Americans do, especially Westerners, it is necessary to note the fact.) The name under consideration is pronounced "Kron-yeh."

Helpmekaar Pass: An important mountain pass in South Africa which probably will be heard of frequently as the Boer war progresses. It means "help each other." Pronounced "Help-muh-kahr," the second syllable being like the first in "murmur," with no "r."

Johannesburg: The capital of the Transvaal or South African Republic. In Dutch "j" has the sound of our English "y," and "a" is like that in "father." The Dutch "g" has a very peculiar, guttural sound which few Americans can master. It is permissible, therefore, for us to pronounce it as our English "g." The best usage in pronouncing this name may be figured as "Yoh-hahn-ness-burg."

Mafeking: A South African town frequently mentioned in the public press of the day. Pronounced "Mah-fay-king," the "a" broad as in "mar."

Natal: South African British colony. Without exception every American whom we have heard use this name has pronounced it incorrectly—with the same "a" sounds and the same accentuation as in "naval." The correct pronunciation is as different from this as it well could be, viz., "Nah-tahl," the "a's" being as in "father" and the accent most decidedly on the last syllable.

Veldt: (Dutch) field. The "v" in Dutch is "f" in English. Pronounced "felt," the "d" being elided.

Pagan Christmas Rites.

From The Chautauquan.

So many of these rustics' observances smack of heathen rites that a Christian celebration in the country of France transports the guest from traditionless America back into ancient Gaul, the Gaul of the Druids as well as the Gaul of the Romans. It is a striking thing to note how skillfully the early Church transformed all these pagan festivities, whether of the Winter solstice or the Latin saturnalia, into modes of commemorating the great event of the Christian religion. This transformation extends even to the smallest details. Certain kinds of Christmas cakes are found in some provinces, where those shaped like bullocks' horns, evidently the traditional form, appear side by side with cakes fashioned after the infant Saviour. Both styles are baked to be distributed among the poor. So on Christmas eve in many places the peasants believe that all the spirits of evil are loosed for a season. The devil breaks out of hell and tries by phantoms and mirages to entice the faithful from the path which leads to the midnight mass. Hobgoblins, sprites, and demons of the air are given full sway to torture and steal the barnyard cattle. Only the surest of bolts and the stoutest of doors will insure protection against their fiendish arts. But once the night has passed and the Christ is born, all these imps of darkness retreat to their prisons to lie in subjection again until another holy night approaches. But the good goes with the bad.

When the midnight mass is being sung the cattle fall on their knees before their mangers and worship Him who was born in their stall. And because their kind once afforded shelter to the King of Glory the power of speech is granted them at a given moment, which they utilize for the purpose of uttering prophecies.

The Wrens and Robins at Table.

Phil Robinson in The Contemporary Review.

There is a large Summer house in the orchard, with a table in it and commodious seats, a weather-proof thatch as solid as a cottage roof, and stout walls of young pine logs and oaken rustic work. But it is so very little used that, if it were not that its ruin would cause great inconvenience to certain wrens and robins, it really might not be kept in repair at all. But the wrens and the robins have taken to it too seriously to have their confidence betrayed. To them it is one of the leading "natural features" of the landscape; what a heathered hillside is to grouse, or a dark pool to trout. According as their mood runs, it is their "sweet Auburn" or their hundred-gated Thebes. But, whichever it may be, the Summer house is their property, acquired by the simple process of taking possession of it, and should you go into it they do not hesitate to remind you that you are in the way. I sometimes feel on going in that I ought to have brought some agent's card or "order to visit." Certainly, when speaking of having made use of it, one should add, "by the courtesy of the wrens," or "by the kind permission of the robins." Their young are absurdly tame—all too tame, poor little mites, for their safety.

One day, entering the Summer house, I found the robins feeding three young ones on the seat. The mother flew away, but the fledgelings staid where they were, as she told them. They moved up a little, so to speak, to oblige me, to make room for me, as it were, on the seat. As I remained for nearly two hours, the parents had to abandon their timidity, and to feed their children just as if they did not see me sitting there. They were never actually disagreeable about one staying long, but the persistent way in which the wrens kept coming to see if you had gone yet, chirping disappointedly to find you had not, and flying away, was disconcerting.

And, as you wrote, tiny flocks of fluff would come sailing down from the roof on to the table, and scraps of moss drop on your head or paper. I do not think the wrens did it purposely, but still, at the back of it all, why should there not have been an idea that it was as well that you should be allowed to see that everybody was not so idle as yourself, and that, while you sat there trifling with pencil and paper, others might be really busy and deserving of consideration?

Poisoning by Canned Meat.

From Appleton's Popular Science Monthly.

Instances of poisoning from the eating of canned meats have become quite common. Although it may be possible that in some instances the ill effects result from metallic poisoning, in a great majority of cases the poisonous substances are formed by putrefactive changes. In many cases it is probable that decomposition begins after the can has been opened by the consumer; in others the canning is imperfectly done, and putrefaction is far advanced before the food reaches the consumer. In still other instances the meat may have been taken from diseased animals, or it may have undergone putrefactive changes before the canning. It should always be remembered that canned meat is especially liable to putrefactive changes after the can has been opened, and when the contents of the open can are not consumed at once the remainder should be kept in a cold place or should be thrown away. People are especially careless on this point. While every one knows that fresh meat should be kept in a cold place during the Summer, an open can of meat is often allowed to stand at Summer temperature and its contents eaten hours after the can has been opened. This is not safe, and has caused several outbreaks of meat poisoning that have come under the observation of the writer.

Sleep.
Now that the charge is won,
Sleep in the narrow clod;
Now it is set of sun,
Sleep till the trump of God.
Sleep.
Sleep.
Fame is a bugle call
Blown past a crumbling wall:
Battles are clean forgot:
Captains and towns are not;
Sleep shall outlast them all.

General Tom Thumb and the Queen.

From St. Nicholas.

The American Minister, the Hon. Edward Everett, was very kind to his countrymen, and it was at his house that Mr. Barnum met a certain Mr. Murray, master of the Queen's household. On the day following, one of the Queen's Life Guards appeared before Mr. Barnum with a note containing an invitation from the Queen to General Tom Thumb and his guardian, Mr. Barnum, to appear at Buckingham Palace on a specified evening.

In retiring from the royal presence, Mr. Barnum attempted to follow the example set by the lord in waiting by backing out. The gallery was of great length, and the gentlemen with long strides made rapid progress; but Tom Thumb's short legs left him far behind—or before. Seeing that he was losing ground, he turned and ran a few steps, then resumed the process of "backing." Again losing ground, he repeated the performance, to the great amusement of the royal spectators. The Queen soon sent another summons, and the General, with his guardian, made a second visit to the palace, being received in the Yellow Drawing Room. A third visit was soon paid to Buckingham Palace, and this time the Queen's uncle, Leopold, King of the Belgians, was present, and was greatly amused, asking many questions; and Queen Victoria, desiring the General to sing, inquired what song he preferred. "Yankee Doodle," was the prompt reply. All present laughed heartily, and her Majesty said: "That is a very pretty song, General; sing it, if you please," and he did.

Strange Prophecies.

From Chambers's Journal.

Clement V. and Philip IV. procured the condemnation of Molay, the Grand Master of the Templars, to the stake. As he was led to execution Molay cited his persecutors to appear before God's throne, the King within forty weeks and the Pope within forty days. Within those respective times both died. Rienzi, the last of the Tribunes, condemned to death Fra Moriale. When he had pronounced the sentence the culprit summoned the Judge to meet death himself within the month, and within the month Rienzi was assassinated.

In 1575 Nanning Koppezoon, a Roman Catholic, tortured to death during the religious strife in the Netherlands, recanted his extorted confession when on the way to the scaffold. A clergyman, Jurian Epeszoon, tried to drown his voice by clamorous prayer. The victim summoned him to meet him within three days at the bar of God, and Epeszoon went home and died within that time. While at the stake Wishart openly denounced Cardinal Beaton: "He shall be brought low, even to the ground, before the trees which have supplied these fagots have shed their leaves." The trees were but in the bravery of their May foliage when the bleeding body of the Cardinal was hung by his murderers over the battlements of St. Andrews.

Put Up the Sword.

I have sung of the soldier's glory
As I never shall sing again;
I have gazed on the shambles gory,
I have smelled of the slaughter-pen.

There is blood in the inkwell clotted,
There are stains on the laurel leaf,
And the pages of Fame are blotted
With the tears of a needless grief.

The bird is slaughtered for fashion,
And the beast is killed for sport;
And never the word compassion
Is whispered at Moloch's court.

For the parent seal in the water
Is slain, and her child must die
That some sister or wife or daughter
Her beauty may beautify.

And the merciful thought we smother—
For such is the way of man—
As we murder the useless mother
For the "unborn astrakhan."

But a season of rest comes never
For the rarest sport of all;
Will His patience endure forever,
Who noteth a sparrow's fall?

When the volleys of hell are sweeping
The sea and the battle plain,
Do you think that our God is sleeping,
And never to wake again?

When hunger and ravenous fever
Are slaying the wasted frame,
Shall we worship the red deceiver,
The devil that men call Fame?

We may swing the censer to cover
The odor of blood—in vain;
God asks us, over and over,
"Where is thy brother, Cain?"
—JAMES JEFFREY ROCHE in The Century.

Sun Worship and Sacrifice.

From The Nineteenth Century.

"I think," said Raja Sivaprasad, "that sun worship was the original worship of both the Persians and the Hindus. I have even seen animals as the sun rises gaze on it with awe, which is perhaps the first beginning of this feeling of reverence for the source of light. The Vedas are full of sun worship. But the priests of the Hindus gave up the simple, direct worship of the sun, and brought in by way of sun offerings animal sacrifices consumed by fire, for they looked upon fire as part of the sun. In course of time people began to think and to question with regard to this sacrificial worship. Then came Buddha, and Buddha being a good and great man, when he saw the animals' throats cut thought: 'How can good possibly come of doing evil?' And the first thing he did was to forbid sacrifice and say: 'Not hurt any creature is the best virtue.' Buddha went out from his home and meditated. Then he came back to Benares, and at Sarnath argued with the Brahmans, who justified their sacrifices on the authority of the Vedas. But Buddha said: 'What are the Vedas but the work of munis and rishis? There is nothing supernatural about them.' And so the great schism arose, Buddha against the Brahmans and the Brahmans against him. Many of the rajas and maharajas came and heard him and were converted, till at last Buddhism was in the ascendant, for we have in India a saying, 'As is the King, so are the people.' Then came King Vikramaditya, in whose honor a new era was founded, reckoning by which we are now [this was in 1892] in the year 1949. King Vikramaditya was a Kshatriya, and believed in Brahmanism, and with his reign Brahmanism and Vedic religion began to revive.

"After many centuries appeared Sankaracharya, a Brahman, who undertook to persecute and drive out the Buddhists. He said: 'These people do not believe in a Creator. How can they possibly be tolerated?' And he drove them out, and reestablished the Vedic religion. By this time the disapproval of animal sacrifice had become firmly rooted. And as sacrifices were enjoined in the Vedas, Sankaracharya got over the difficulty by saying that it was only in the golden age, when the animals slaughtered could be restored to life, that sacrifices were required; there was no need to sacrifice now. To this day animal sacrifice is dispensed with among the majority of the Hindus, although not so among the Kshatriyas and among many of the Sudras."

The Great Trek. Its Consequences.

Right Hon. James Bryce in The North American Review.

This Great Trek of 1836 has been the source of all subsequent troubles between the Dutch and English races in South Africa. The circumstances attending it developed in the minds of the emigrant Boers three passions which have characterized them ever since, and which must be understood, because they are the key to the subsequent history of the country. One of these is a deep dislike to the British Government, which they conceived to have forced them to quit their old homes by a course of injustice and oppression. Another is a love of independence for its own sake, a sentiment which is in their Dutch and Huguenot blood, (for some of the leading families were sprung from French Huguenots, who had gone to Africa from Holland after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes,) and which had shown itself, even before England took the Cape, in risings against the Government of the Dutch East India Company. A third is an ardent attachment to their Calvinistic faith and to their old habits and usages.

Cut off from all the influences of Europe, and leading a rude and solitary life on their enormous ranching farms, they were, when they went out into the wilderness, nearly two centuries behind the people of Western Europe in the thoughts, as well as in the arts, of modern civilization. The conditions of their warlike life among hostile savages after the Trek kept them so backward that they might really be said to belong rather to the seventeenth century than to the nineteenth.

Chinese Civilities.

From "The Yangtze Valley and Beyond," by Mrs. J. F. Bishop.

"Men began to pour into the roadway from every quarter hooting, and some ran ahead—always a bad sign. I proposed to walk, but the chairman said it was not safe. The open chair, however, was equally an abomination. The crowd became dense and noisy; there was much shouting and yelling. I recognized many cries of 'Yang kwei-tze' (foreign devil) and 'Child-eater!' swelling into a roar; the narrow streets became almost impassable; my chair was struck repeatedly with sticks; mud and unsavory missiles were thrown with excellent aim; a well-dressed man, bolder or more cowardly than the rest, hit me a smart whack across my chest, which left a weal; others from behind hit me across the shoulders; the howling was infernal; it was an angry Chinese mob. There was nothing for it but to sit stolidly, and not to appear hurt, frightened, or annoyed, though I was all three."

Substitutes for Silk.

From Chambers's Journal.

A German doctor, improving on a method patented in France some years ago, has produced from cotton a fibre which in many respects surpasses the material from which it is prepared; and the same may be said of an English process patented in 1897, by which, from a mass of cotton dissolved in certain chemicals, continuous threads may be spun and fibres obtained of any desired length. The fineness and length of the fibres produced by either of these processes are the chief features of improvement, which may possibly induce manufacturers to take them up. The former is already being handled on a large scale on both sides of the Channel; and the latter, although as yet scarcely beyond the experimental stage, bids fair to become equally successful.

We hear that even silk—the queen of all fibres—is not secure on her throne. She likewise has many competitors, and that little lepidopterous laborer, the silkworm, is likely soon to be out of work. Of these, one hails from certain Mediterranean shores, notably Sicily, where at low tide, from myriads of shellfish which attach themselves to the rocks and larger stones upon the beach, a quantity of very fine and glossy fibrous matter not unlike a cobweb, and similar in appearance to silk, is obtained, and this, when thoroughly washed, dried, and combed, is made up into fabrics.

Another fibre which threatens to displace the produce of the silkworm is that known as Vanduara silk, produced in Glasgow by artificial means and at a very small cost. It consists of extremely fine threads obtained by forcing a gelatinous solution through a number of minute apertures; and after undergoing a special water-proofing process the fibres become pliable, and can be handled on the looms with perfect ease.

Spun glass, in fine and glossy fibres, capable of conversion into textile fabrics possessing a sheen even surpassing that of silk, has long been known; but unfortunately it has serious disadvantage unfitting it for general use.

Why Should the Hindu Change His Faith?

From The Contemporary Review.

Why, the Hindu asks himself, should he accept this Western religion? He has one of his own, ancient, potent, elastic; it embodies his instinctive genius, suits his special needs, is older than the Christian, rests on thought he has elaborated and many Western men have learned to admire. To surrender his religion would be to make a complete surrender of himself, his past, his separate mind and being, and to become a mere echo of the civilization he despises. The Hindu reaction is thus a very real force, moved by reasons we cannot but respect. Patriotism lives behind and within it; in it the Orient stands up against the Occident, defies it, challenges its right to come East and impose itself on what is older, more congenial to the Oriental nature, and too deeply rooted to be plucked up by alien hands. And so we need not be surprised to find the reformer succeeded by the reactionary, though behind the veil of his reaction the spirit that would reform still lives.

For the Hinduism he defends is not the Hinduism of the multitude, the religion of the street and the temple, of Kali Ghat and the Durga puja, of the sacred river or caste; it is an idealized system, eclectic, clothed in garments which are heirlooms from the past, but quickened by a spirit which belongs to the present. Not all it finds in Hinduism is Indian, but some of it is very Occidental indeed.

The Andes and Mountain Sickness.

From "The Highest Andes," by E. A. Fitz Gerald.

I got up and tried once more to go on, but I was only able to advance from two to three steps at a time, and then I had to stop, panting for breath, my struggles alternating with violent fits of nausea. At times I would fall down, and each time had greater difficulty in rising; black specks swam across my sight; I was like one walking in a dream, so dizzy and sick that the whole mountain seemed whirling round with me. The time went on; it was growing late, and I had now got into such a helpless condition that I was no longer able to raise myself, but had to call on Lanti to help me. I was right under the great wall of the peak and not more than a few hundred yards from the great couloir that leads up between the two summits. I do not know the exact height of this spot, but I judge it to be about a thousand feet below the top. Here I gave up the fight and started to go down.

I shall never forget the descent that followed. I was so weak that my legs seemed to fold up under me at every step, and I kept falling forward and cutting myself on the shattered stones that covered the sides of the mountain. I do not know how long I crawled in this miserable plight, steering for a big patch of snow that lay in a sheltered spot, but I should imagine that it was about an hour and a half. On reaching the snow I lay down and finally rolled down a great portion of the mountain side. As I got lower my strength revived, and the nausea that I had been suffering from so acutely disappeared, leaving me with a splitting headache. Soon after 5 o'clock I reached our tent. My headache was now so bad that it was with great difficulty I could see at all.

The Queen and Her Hard Landlord.

From Sir Edward Russell's "That Reminds Me."

On one occasion her Majesty was speaking to a gentleman of high station, when she said, "I don't like the ——'s," (referring to a landed family.) "Why, ma'am?" "Oh, because they are very bad to their tenants; and many of their cottages are in a horrid state; and if anything is done by any tenants at their own expense to improve their condition, the first thing the ——'s do is to raise the rent upon them." It may well be supposed that at this the gentleman who was honored with this conversation rather smiled. He said, "Well, I am only glad, ma'am, that you sympathize with the afflictions of tenants." Whereupon the Queen said, "Oh, I am a tenant myself. I hold ——" (naming a place of her Majesty's) "from Mr. —— of ——, and I have made many improvements, and every time I have made an improvement my rent has been raised."

The Wind at the Door.

Often to my door
Comes a twilight visitor.
When the mountain Summer day
From our valley takes his way,
And the journeying shadows stride
Over the green mountain-side,
Down the clove among the trees
Moves the ghostly wandering breeze.
With the first stars on the crest
And the pale light in the west,
He comes up the dark ravine
Where no traveler is seen.
Yet his coming makes a stir
In the house of Ash and Fir:
"Master, is't in our abode
You will tarry on the road?"
"Nay, I like your roof-tree well,
But with you I may not dwell."
Birches whisper at their sill,
As he passes up the hill:
"Stranger, underneath our boughs
There is ample room to house."
"Friends, I have another quest
Than your cool abiding rest."
And the fluttering Aspen knows
Whose step by her doorway goes:
"Honor, lord, thy silver tree
And the chamber laid for thee."
"Nay, I must be faring on,
For to-night I seek my own.
Breath of the red dust is he
And a wayfarer like me;
Here a moment, and then lost
On a trail confused and crossed.
And I gently would surprise
Recognition in his eyes;
Touch his hand and talk with him
When the forest light is dim,
Taking counsel with the lord
Of the utterable word."
Hark, did you hear some one try
The west window furtively,
And then move among the leaves
In the shadow of the eaves?
The reed curtain at the door
Rustled; there's my visitor
Who comes searching for his kin.
"Enter, brother; I'm within."

Gen. Grant Owns Up.

From "That Reminds Me," by Sir Edward Russell.

When Gen. Grant came to Liverpool and was entertained at the Town Hall, a quite unknown Liverpool man wrote to the Mayor, with many apologies, but asking if he might take the liberty of asking for a few minutes' conversation with the great soldier. * * * The Mayor hesitated, but found a way of mentioning the matter to the great man, who, without hesitation, said "Certainly, let the gentleman come." He came. He said to the General, "Now, Sir, after amateur as I am, I have followed every step of the war, and think I understand every movement except one. On such a day you were there, and the Southerners were there"—pointing to plans on a map that he had brought. "Now, it seems to me that you ought certainly to have gone there, whereas you went there"—pointing again. Gen. Grant, the usually taciturn, and when not taciturn phenomenally terse, just took the cigar from his mouth and said, "You're right, Sir. Damned blunder!" And in a moment the amateur strategist, beaming now, was courteously dismissed.

Sir Astley Cooper.

From The Gentleman's Magazine.

When Sir Astley Cooper lived in Broad Street, London, he had every day a numerous morning levee of city patients. The room into which they were shown would hold from forty to fifty people, and often callers, after waiting for hours, were dismissed without having seen the doctor. His man Charles, with more than his master's dignity, would say to disappointed applicants when they reappeared on the following morning: "I am not sure that we shall be able to attend to you, for our list is full for the day; but if you will wait, I will see what we can do for you." During the first nine years of his practice, Sir Astley's earnings progressed thus: First year, £5 5s; second, £26; third, £64; fourth, £96; fifth, £100; sixth, £200; seventh, £400; eighth, £800; ninth, £1,100. Eventually his annual income rose to more than £15,000; the largest sum he ever made in one year was £21,000. A West Indian millionaire gave him his highest fee; he had successfully undergone a painful operation, and sitting up in bed he threw his nightcap at Cooper, saying: "Take that!" "Sir," replied Sir Astley, "I'll pocket the affront"; and on reaching home he found in the cap a check for 1,000 guineas.

At Nazareth.

From the black embers of the wintry earth
The West withdraws the reddening flame of day;
So ends the seventh annual of my birth—
And see! a Star—to mock our brazier gray.
Dost thou remember how at hours like these—
Yea, mother, I was not too young to know—
Thou wouldst get humbly down upon thy knees,
And, opening wide our rustic coffer, show
The Magi's golden tributes treasured there:
The casket with its heap of gleaming stones
And coins of mystic kingdoms old and rare;
The incense arks, the myrrh's bejeweled cones
With countless hieroglyphs graven o'er:
These wouldst thou lift into my baby hands
Till lap and breast and arms could hold no more;
Then, pouring out the precious incense sands
Over the brazier coals, while all the room
Grew white with wreathing odors sanctified,
Thou wouldst prostrate thyself amid the gloom,
Sweet mother, on the ground before thy child.
To-night there is no incense for thy Son:
The chill wind finds the brazier black as death;
Nay, do not kneel—here, here, my breast upon,
Let starlight show the vapor of thy breath.

The Chrysanthemum.

From The Saturday Review.

The National Chrysanthemum Society was instituted just fifty-three years since, in 1846. The flower which it has taken under its patronage, upon whose aggrandizement it has bestowed so successfully such patient and ingenious care, has been established among us only a little over a century. The first time it was thought worthy of a "show" all to itself was in 1830. Fancy if one of those early patrons could have dropped in at the exhibition last week and seen what his favorites had attained to! Surely he would have thought himself translated. The very generic name of the plant, the "golden flower," at first so pertinent, has lost its distinctiveness. There are golden chrysanthemums still, it is true; yellow blossoms incomparable for purity and brilliance; but what of all these other colors not less brilliant and pure, these rich damasks, royal purples, flushed pinks, this dazzling white that puts a snowdrift to shame, at last actually a bloom that is just sea green?

Color, size, form, growth, all have undergone a change that half a century ago it entered into no man's heart to conceive. And the end is not yet, it may be: the last wonder has not yet been revealed for us; so limitless in its possibilities and potency is that "affectation of Men to gratifie the Pleasure of their Eyes, inciting them to push on things to more and more Perfection."

Life in East London.

From Walter Besant in The Century.

The dominant note of East London is that it is a hive of working bees. There are, it is true, a few drones in it. They are not the fat and luxurious drones of the other London, those who live in luxury without labor, and are down-laden with the curse of idleness. Our drones, the East London drones, are the residuum, the lees of humanity, who cannot and will not work; they are miserable, half-starved, skulking drones. They beg, they thieve, they do anything with a willing mind so long as it is not work. They dwell in the slums; they are, in the language of the day, the "submerged," but all the King's horses and all the King's men cannot drag them out of the slough, nor can any river—not Abana or Pharpar, or even the Jordan itself—cleanse the Augean stable of their mind. The helping hand grows tired of pulling and tugging at them; they will not come; they sink back into their Male-bolge; the black mud closes over their heads. Let them be.

It is a city of working bees. As we linger and loiter among the streets multitudinous, we hear, as from a hive, the low, contented murmur of continuous and patient work. There are two millions of working people in this city. The children work at school; the girls and boys, the men and women, work in factory, in shop, and at home; in dock and in wharf and in warehouse, all day long and all the year round, these millions work. They are clerks, accountants, managers, foremen, engineers, stokers, porters, stevedores, dockers, smiths, craftsmen of all kinds. They are girls who make things, girls who sew things, girls who sell things. There are among them many poor, driven, sweated creatures, and the sweaters themselves are poor, driven, sweated creatures; for sweating once begun is handed on from one to the other as carefully and as religiously as any holy lamp of learning. They work from early morning till welcome evening.

Pot Herbs.

From Longman's Magazine.

In its strict sense, as used by the early botanists, a pot herb is a "herbe that serves for the potte," and of these we have a considerable number in our native flora. Among them may be mentioned the wild cabbage, sea beet, and mercury. The use of the wild cabbage, or sea colewort, is hardly extinct yet. It is still gathered by the peasants on the sea cliffs of Devonshire in hard Winters when garden produce is scarce. This plant is the origin of our garden varieties, such as savoys and brussels sprouts, and broccoli and cauliflower, and has been cultivated from very early times. The great naturalist John Ray noticed it growing wild on Dover Cliffs, where it still flourishes in remarkable abundance. Indeed, in Summer time the white chalk cliffs from Dover to St. Margaret's Bay are gay with the pale yellow blossoms of this plant. It may also be seen in considerable plenty on the picturesque cliffs which command the entrance to Dartmouth Harbor, in South Devon. In the Isle of Wight it was formerly abundant, (A. D. 1665,) especially on the Culver Cliffs, between Bembridge and Sandown; but for some reason which it is difficult to discover the plant has become very scarce of late years.

The sea beet, (Beta maritima,) sometimes called sea spinach, the origin of our beetroot and mangold wurzel, is a common plant near the sea. It is mostly abundant in salt marshes and on banks and waste places along the shore. Fifty years ago the young leaves were regularly gathered by the poorer classes in the Isle of Wight, and "boiled and eaten as greens with the pork or bacon which then formed so constant an article in the dietary of our Hampshire peasantry." Occasionally the plant is so used now, and it certainly forms an excellent substitute for spinach.

Customs of the Mosquito Indians.

From Bell's "Tangowera."

The Indians are not acquainted with the art of kissing, but they sniff or smell the skin of the cheeks, which answers the same purpose. The little child is lifted in the father's arms, and he buries his nose in its stomach. Handshaking is as common as with us, but I have noticed that there is always a tinge of melancholy in the character of the Indians, which breaks out where we should expect hilarity. Thus, after a long absence, sisters and mothers sit down, and throwing a cloth over their heads, with their hands clasped on the head of the person who has returned, cry over him with their dirgelike song. On the part of the wives, it is supposed to be improper to show any emotion, consequently they take little notice of the husband on his return, but confine their attention to others and to their duties in the meantime.

Extracts from an Old Magazine.

From The Monthly Intelligencer.

On the 27th of February, 1731, two publishers were taken into custody for publishing a libel entitled "The Divine Catastrophe of the Royal Family of the Stuarts."

On the next day the new church at Bloomsbury was consecrated by the name of St. George, as was also the burying ground in the Fields adjoining.

On March 8 Charlforth and Cox, two solicitors convicted of forgery, stood in the pillory at the Royal Exchange, and on the same day five malefactors were executed at Tyburn.

On April 26 the death of "Mr. Daniel de Foe, Sr., eminent for his many writings," is recorded; and among the appointments on the 29th of the same month is that of William Cowper, Esq., to be Clerk to the Commission of Bankruptcy.

Coughs, Colds, Asthma and Croup Cannot Exist Where It Is Used.

The two illustrations above show more plainly than words can express the wonderful change that has been made in the treatment of respiratory diseases during the past two years. Formerly, any sufferer from Catarrh, Asthma, Consumption or Bronchitis was at once placed under the care of some physician and dosed with all sorts of nauseating drugs and tonics. Even as far back as twenty-five years ago, the doctor seemed to be aware of the fact that in order to reach these diseases inhalation must be used, and experimented with atomizers, sprays and douches, in the hope of finding some germicide which could be forced into the bronchial tubes and lungs. That all these treatments proved practically useless is shown by the fact that, during the past twenty years, the number of deaths from catarrh and consumption alone has increased from 8,000 to over 200,000 a year. The discovery that these terrible scourges were germ diseases did not lessen the death rate, for of all the germicides known to the profession but one of them could be inhaled into the lungs, and this, Chlorine Gas, was deadly poison. The others, carbolic acid, ammonia and creosote (liquids) must touch the germs themselves in order to destroy; consequently could not be used with effect, as it is absolutely impossible for moisture in any form to enter the bronchial tubes and lungs. The discovery of

made the cure of these diseases by inhalation possible; without it there was no way of reaching the germs, and up to the present day

NO OTHER HAS BEEN FOUND.

HYOMEI alone is the only germicide of sufficient power to destroy the bacilli of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Croup and Consumption, and which can be taken in the air we breathe without injury to the patient.

KILL THE GERMS

of these diseases and you have no need of stomach medicines, or the service of a physician. You can sit in your own home, in church, at the theatre, and cure yourself. The little inhaler can be carried in the pocket and a few moments' use of same will prevent Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Pneumonia and Croup. You take no risk as with all other treatments, for every bottle is guaranteed and your money refunded if it fails to cure.

Hyomei is sold by all druggists, or sent by mail.

CAUTION—Beware of Imitations of Hyomei containing Poisonous Ingredients.

Hyomei Outfits, complete, $1.00. Trial outfit, 25 cents. Extra bottles, 50 cents. Hyomei Dyspepsia Cure, 50 cents. Hyomei Soap, 25 cents.

DR. WILSON AGAIN

At His Regular Thursday Evening Lecture, 240 Fifth Avenue.

Dr. Wilson, the great aurist, gave another of his regular free illustrated lectures last Thursday evening to an interesting and much interested audience at the New York headquarters of the National Association of Physicians and Surgeons, 240 Fifth Avenue.

Many of those present were totally deaf, and several of these were selected by lot and were given free treatment with results as follows:

CAMPAIGNS OF THE BOERS

Incidents of Sieges at Ladysmith, Kimberley, and Mafeking.

CONQUEST OF NATAL AIMED AT Burghers Considered the Task One That Would Cause Them No Great Trouble.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

CAPE TOWN, Nov. 16.—The position of affairs at Ladysmith continues to excite much anxiety, while the progress of the campaign on the western borders of Cape Colony is being regarded with great interest. Sir George White's little garrison at Ladysmith continues to be invested by the great bulk of the Boer forces. Next to that of Mafeking, the siege of Ladysmith promises to be the most picturesque incident in the earlier stages of the campaign. The British force took up its position there, determined to make a stand and accept battle on the enemy's terms. The women and children and non-combatants generally were removed from the town to a neutral zone a few miles away, and the two Generals set to fight an artillery duel which is bound to exercise an enormous influence on the first part of the struggle.

The country round about not being of a nature to justify military excursions except in such strength as the number of British troops at present at Ladysmith renders impossible, the garrison must remain in the town to be shot at, and, although, of course, the garrison can shoot in turn, it is obvious that the advantage lies with the Boers, who have the option of selecting the points of attack. The result of the siege so far, however, is scarcely flattering to the Boer artillery. In addition to the artillery of the Boers rarely making good play, their ammunition is very defective. Many of their shells do not explode, on account, it is said, of the ammunition having been kept in stock too long.

M. Louis de Rougemont has just returned to the Cape from Ladysmith, where, he says, he witnessed the recent engagement from a hill. Speaking of the situation and the battle, he said: "I consider the place the finest possible to find for defense. Every 100 yards is a fortress, and I consider Ladysmith impregnable. Hide's farm was the seat of the fight, and he drove the cattle into town. Soon after hostilities began, I saw a pretty sight. While the big shells were passing over, some women who were washing linen kept at it, and never stopped even to see what damage was done. I should like to have asked their nationality."

THE SIEGE OF KIMBERLEY.

It now seems that Cape Colony is to occupy the serious attention of the Boers. Kimberley, being close to the Orange Free State border, naturally claims their first attention. The diamond centre has for some time been in a state of siege, which from every point of view, however, it is regarded as being well able to withstand. The Boers are now shelling the town. With the object of hitting the electric light, they fired at the Premier Mine, but their shells fell harmlessly. They then moved their guns forward, and were seen to throw up intrenchments near Alexandersfontein, with the object evidently of attacking Beaconsfield, a suburb of Kimberley. They also opened on the Kimberley reservoir, but their shells, falling 1,500 yards short, the Royal Artillery in Kimberley disdained to reply.

The attempt of the Boers to bombard Newton was a dismal failure. They apparently fired from an old siege gun at an extreme range—over 6,000 yards—none of the shells taking effect. The children ran about picking up the shells after each explosion, many of these being almost intact. Later there was a brisk artillery duel between the Premier Mine, and two parties of Boers. The natives were kept down the mine for safety. One of the Boer shells struck the embankment in front of the fort, another entered the compound and struck the cooking pot, but none did any damage. The Royal Artillery plunged a shell right among the Boers, knocking over the gunners and disabled the gun. There was a brisk market for fragments of the injured cooking pot, choice specimens as mementoes readily fetching £1 apiece. New barricades have been formed and additional sentries posted. Mr. Rhodes, who is in Kimberley, was recently stopped and refused permission to pass without a permit. There have been three weddings in the town since the commencement of the siege.

A Kimberley cab driver, captured by the Boers and taken to their camp at Spytfontein, has since been permitted to return. He says the Free Staters talked boastfully of their intention to take Kimberley, but admitted that they had not the least idea how it was to be carried out. They confessed that their artillery had not come up to expectations.

Head Commandant Wessels has written to Col. Kekewich at Kimberley, stating that he would receive in his camp at Olifantstein any Afrikander desirous of leaving Kimberley. Col. Kekewich thereupon intimated that any such persons who might wish to accept the invitation would be permitted to leave, but upon the distinct understanding that they would not be allowed to re-enter the town during the siege. Some Kafirs who left Kimberley under the impression that they were genuine Afrikanders were turned back by the Boers.

LIVELY TIMES AT MAFEKING.

Matters have been pretty lively, also, at Mafeking. Col. Baden-Powell has been keeping the Boers on the move day and night, and has taken every precaution, not only to prevent the town being rushed by the Boers, but also to render as small as possible any damage resulting from the Boer bombardment. The night attacks of the British appear to have worried the Boers considerably. Although the Boers have shelled the town day by day, but little damage has resulted, the British casualties having been but few. Commandant Cronje has brought all his guns to bear on the town, and hailed shells in its direction for hours. His pieces, however, appear to have been light field guns, and have proved singularly ineffective. The humor of it is that Commandant Cronje, at a loss what next to do, wrote to Col. Baden-Powell requesting him to surrender Mafeking to "save further bloodshed." In reply, Baden-Powell asked when the bloodshed was to commence, and Cronje, greatly annoyed, sent to Pretoria in haste for heavy field guns, keeping up a light bombardment in the meantime just to show that he was in the neighborhood.

Immediately on its arrival, a 94-pounder Krupp cannon commenced throwing shells into the town, causing a few casualties and damaging some of the buildings. Col. Baden-Powell has completed the subterranean shelters, affording shelter for both troops and civilians during the heavy bombardment of the town from the danger of the bursting shells. Under cover of the bombardment the Boers attempted to get within rifle range. Being discovered, they were beaten off after a sharp engagement. In the sortie both soldiers and civilians behaved gallantly, and the Boers had their first opportunity of judging the mettle of the Protectorate Regiment at close quarters. So warm was their reception that there is little danger of their attempting to rush the town, except in greatly overwhelming numbers.

However, Col. Baden-Powell, observing that the enemy was coming to too close quarters, determined on a night attack, an enterprise of great daring. It was nevertheless accomplished in magnificent style. A squadron under Capt. Fitzclarence, in the dead of night, left the camp in Mafeking, where the few who knew of the undertaking awaited the result in great anxiety, and crept stealthily toward the Boer trenches. The Boers were taken completely by surprise. The British squadron left the camp with fixed bayonets, and as soon as they had reached their destination, the Captain's whistle was sounded, and was followed by a ringing cheer as the men dashed forward to the Boer trenches. For a time the night air rang out with the shouts and yells of the contending forces. The Boer forces in the rear rushed forward and discharged their rifles. Capt. Fitzclarence's whistle sounded again, and at this signal the Britishers sprang out of the trenches and scattered themselves silently in all directions, just as the Boers in the trenches were reinforced by their comrades from the rear. Under a shower of rifle shot the British ran back to their lines. Besides a loss of six killed, the British had ten wounded, including Capt. Fitzclarence, and also one man taken prisoner by the Boers. This bayonet attack has had the effect of stopping the Boers from making trenches within range of the town. It is estimated that the loss of the Boers was very heavy. When the British ambulance went out to fetch in the dead, it was met a quarter of a mile distant from the town by Commandant Botha, who expressed his admiration of Fitzclarence's attack.

HEAVY ARTILLERY ENGAGEMENT.

On the hottest day of the siege, Commandant Cronje commenced his big gun attack at four o'clock in the morning, concentrating upon Cannon Kopje, which he evidently recognized as the only way into Mafeking. At six o'clock the Boers opened a tremendous fire into the kopje from both sides. The British replied with a withering fire, and put the enemy's 12-pounder temporarily out of action. Under the cover of their artillery fire the Boers crept up close to the kopje, fully aware that rushing tactics only could avail them, but the Protectorate Maxim, together with the police volleys, wore them down, and after five hours' hard fighting they were repulsed The opinion prevails that the Boers were beaten for all time so far as Mafeking is concerned. The Boers must have lost very heavily; for several hours two wagons were engaged along their position picking up the dead and wounded. The British casualties were three killed and five wounded. After the fight the kopje resembled a shambles. The look-out tower was shot to pieces.

Commandant Cronje is a heavy, thick-set man of stolid countenance, with bushy eyebrows, stern, set mouth, grizzled mustache, and dark thick beard, streaked with gray. He is a typical Boer, with the strongest racial prejudices. Stories of his daring deeds in the early days as a pioneer among hordes of hostile savages are recounted with almost reverential awe by unsophisticated burghers at the present day for the emulation of youthful warriors. In guerrilla warfare he is credited with being the ablest tactician in the whole of the Boer forces.

TRANSVAAL SHORT OF FUNDS.

The Transvaal Government is evidently running short of funds. The pay of the police is much overdue. The normally busy mining centre of Barberton is deserted; there are not over fifty males there. Pretoria is unable to obtain any news of the campaign, official or otherwise. The Government has taken over the mines in the neighborhood of Johannesburg, and a careful examination of the workings is being made. It is believed the authorities are on the eve of sensational discoveries. While carelessly tapping the walls of Hosken's Buildings the Detective Department noticed that they gave forth a hollow sound. The walls were demolished, and what was believed to be a thick buttress crumbled into dust, revealing a cavity packed with a valuable assortment of goods. Further investigations proved the floors to be false, and it is believed the cellars are overflowing with merchandise. The search is proceeding.

Col. J. G. Stowe, the Consul General of the United States at Cape Town, has communicated by telegraph with the Transvaal Government, informing it of the names and condition of the Transvaal prisoners at Simon's Bay. This act of official courtesy, it is hoped, will be appreciated by the Transvaal State Secretary, and cause him to facilitate the inquiries which are being instituted by the United States Consul at Pretoria as to the status and condition of the British prisoners. Rumors are being circulated by the Dutch inhabitants in the neighborhood of Cape Town that the prisoners of war at Simon's Bay are being badly treated. The facts, however, are as follows: The prisoners are victualed exactly the same as the British troops when on board ship. More can scarcely be expected by prisoners captured as troops.

The prisoners are allowed to smoke at all hours upon the upper deck—a privilege which the British officers and seamen do not enjoy. Bedding is provided for them, but not clothing. They are required to perform such cleaning work as is absolutely necessary to keep the portion of the ship allotted to them clean; this is always required of seamen and troops. They are not, however, required to do any other work. Any luxuries, except liquor, which they care to purchase, or which they may receive from friends, are allowed them. They are allowed to interview friends from noon to 4 P. M. daily, and are allowed to correspond freely by letter, except in regard to politics and the disposition of troops, so that their letters are under censorship. They are treated with every consideration and under the most liberal interpretation of the international duties toward prisoners of war laid down by the accepted writers.

SCENES ON THE PRISON SHIP.

The friends of the prisoners at the Cape take full advantage of the permission accorded them, and there is quite a crowd of visitors each day to the Penelope. At the stern of the vessel floats the white ensign, and on the fore and aft bridges a couple of bluejackets are on sentry with loaded rifles. The deck presents a motley scene. The prisoners and their friends stand about in groups, absorbed in conversation. Those who have no friends lounge about the decks smoking. Some are playing quoits, while others are busy making purchases from the Indian hawkers, who drive a thriving trade. The prisoners are dressed in a variety of costumes; many of them are smartly attired in well-cut tweed suits, while others, with their clumsy garments, ungainly "veldschoen," and broad slouch hats, present the appearance of hailing from the backveldt, although, as a matter of fact, nearly all of them come from the Rand or its immediate vicinity. Between themselves and their friends conversation is carried on in Dutch, but, on accosting them in English, one is astonished to find how large a proportion of them not only speak English, but speak it fluently and with a less pronounced accent than is to be heard among Afrikanders in Cape Colony and even in Cape Town itself. Generally speaking, the prisoners by no means convey the idea of the backveldt Transvaal, although here and there are to be seen men who have evidently come straight from the country.

A striking figure among the prisoners is Capt. Schiel, who was shot through the leg at Elandslaagte, but is now sufficiently recovered to be able to get about with the aid of a crutch. Capt. Schiel is a middle-aged, well-set-up man, with iron-gray hair and a determined mien. He speaks English fluently and in conversation gives one the idea of being socially a genial and good-natured soldier of fortune. He denies that he is the man for whom the British Government offered £1,000 in connection with the Zulu war of 1879, and, moreover, declares that he has never done anything of which an officer need be ashamed. As to the war and its issue, he is not to be drawn into hazarding a prophecy. He pays a high tribute to the British infantry in general and the Gordon Highlanders in particular, whose charge up the hill at Elandslaagte he describes as a magnificent piece of work. Capt. Schiel has applied to Gen. Buller to be released on bail, but has been refused.

THE PRISONERS SANGUINE.

The majority of the prisoners are very sanguine as to the result of the war, and it is evident that they do not for a moment entertain the idea of the Boers being beaten, and consider it quite impossible that the British flag will ever again fly at Pretoria. Nothing will convince them that at Elandslaagte the British force was not greater than their own, and the opinion is common among them that had there been better generalship on their own side they would never have been prisoners of war at Simonstown. Many members of the captured force point out that leaders who become so excited as to take places with their rifles in the firing line, while neglecting the actual direction of operations, cannot possibly attend to their legitimate duties.

With regard to the Boer plan of campaign, it is evident that the conquest of Natal was not considered as a task that would cause any very serious trouble. Once in possession of the military depot at Ladysmith, they considered there would be little difficulty in seizing Pietermaritzburg and Durban, and thus place themselves in possession of the whole colony. Ladysmith, they admit, is a strong position, but they deemed a strong commando capable of readily capturing it. The Boer idea appears to have been that when they conquered Natal and garrisoned it with a powerful force the British Government would be ready to make terms. Col. Stowe has visited the Boer prisoners on board the Penelope. More Boer prisoners are en route to the Cape.

Among the killed at Elandslaagte was Gen. Kock, member of the Executive Council. Gen. Kock had no military rank in time of peace, but, with eight others, was appointed to command the various divisions into which the Transvaal was divided for the purposes of the present war. The command held by Gen. Kock was that of a portion of the forces which entered Natal from the Transvaal, and under him were the German and Hollander Corps. Gen. Kock's column appears from all accounts to have detached itself from the main body and taken the division of Ladysmith, while the latter went round to Dundee. It is stated that Lieut. Col. Schiel led the forces at Elandslaagte, although Gen. Kock was nominally in command. It is highly probable that this was the case. Being entirely unaccustomed to artillery, it can be readily imagined that the General would have been only too willing to relinquish to a more masterful spirit than himself the conduct of operations requiring the employment of special tactics. Whether the result would have been different had Gen. Kock retained command can only be a matter of speculation. It is safe to assume, however, that the rout would have been less complete, for a Boer General would never have kept the field in face of a galling fire, while, on the other hand, a dashing officer like Schiel, with a body of his fellow-countrymen, well accustomed to discipline, under him, would hold the position to the last, but the presence of a considerable element of the rabble, or "poor white" class of Boers, made the position untenable.

BOER LEADERS AFFLICTED.

Up to the present every member of the Transvaal Executive has lost a member of his family. The Kocks and Wolmarans have suffered most. Frickkie Wolmarans, Mining Commissioner at Hocksoord, was among the killed at Elandslaagte. Also J. du Preez, one of the wealthiest landowners at Krugersdorp, as well as Messrs. Hayber and "Tom" Hinds, well known throughout the Transvaal as manufacturers of tobacco. It is also said that Commandant Ben Viljoen was killed at Elandslaagte, but this has not been officially confirmed. All that can be ascertained for certain is that he is missing. It was at first generally supposed among the Boers that he had been taken prisoner at Elandslaagte, but as this has proved not to be the case and he has not yet turned up, the Boers have probably concluded that he was killed. The Boer prisoners say that when Viljoen found himself and party surrounded by the British and the centre of the Hussar charge, he exclaimed: "I wish the man who told us the English can't fight was here now."

Five Britishers remained at Krugersdorp, Transvaal, on the strength of their permits, but have now been sent to the front, strongly protesting. The last Britisher to leave the place has now arrived at Durban. She is the wife of a tradesman, and had resolutely resolved to see it out, but the threats of her Dutch neighbors at last became unbearable. The woman says that the district is in mourning, the number of West Rand burghers reported killed being very large.

There has been arrested on a charge of high treason at Pietermaritzburg, the capital of Natal, a man named Vandam, who joined the Rifle Association of the city and took the oath of allegiance. As, however, he subsequently admitted being a cousin of Commandant Vandam of Johannesburg, and also of Dr. Leyds, he was requested to resign. He, notwithstanding this, continued to attend meetings of the association. He thus aroused suspicion. His case has been remanded.

It is still possible to leave the Transvaal by the Delagoa line, and some of the firms in Cape Town have received purely business communications, dated nearly three weeks ago. Further advices, however, are not expected, as it is understood that the last commandos have now been called to the front. A refugee, who has recently come via Delagoa, gives a remarkable—and bearing in mind the well-authenticated facts of 1881—and almost incredible account of the lenient treatment of spies in Johannesburg. He says that two Englishmen were apprehended with dynamite and fuse on their persons, without permits, at 11 P. M. in the public streets. Although it was the general opinion that the sentence would be death, they were after trial by court-martial, only lashed the next morning and put over the frontier. Four natives, however, were tried by court-martial one afternoon, sent to Pretoria, and hanged the next morning.

On the evening in which he left the refugee noticed the Government police, although it was Sunday, and the Boers are generally rigid Sabbatarians opening grocers' stores by means of chisels and choppers. From conversation he overheard, it would appear that a portion at least of Johannesburg is doomed. The officials declare that they must make the capitalists suffer, and have decided, whether they win or lose the day, to destroy the Exchange House, Goldfields Consolidated, the Robinson and Barnato Buildings, and other property.

The telegram from Transvaal Secretary Reitz, threatening to shoot six British officers from among the prisoners of war at Pretoria, in the event of the death sentence being passed upon a man named Marks, arrested at Durban on the charge of being a Transvaal spy, is loudly condemned as an instance of Boer ferocity. Secretary Reitz states that Marks is no spy of the Boer army, but a secret detective for criminal cases, and as such was sent to Natal long before war was declared, all of which the Transvaal Secretary states can be proved by the Magistrate of Pietermaritzburg. The Transvaal Government therefore requests that the prisoner be allowed to proceed to the republic without molestation, as in case of his execution the Government will shoot six British officers in his place. The telegram was sent to Sir George White, in command at Natal, and communicated by him to Gen. Buller in Cape Town, who suggested that the answer be: "The Transvaal Government, when it declared war, should have withdrawn its detectives. If a Transvaal detective has been found within our lines during war, we are justified in holding him until the reason for his presence can be properly explained. Will make the inquiries suggested by your telegram."

THE SURRENDER OF VRYBURG.

There has just arrived in Cape Town a number of refugees from Vryburg, which is shown on the maps of South Africa as a town in British Bechuanaland, but which, on the declaration of war by the Transvaal, was promptly annexed by the Boers. Among the refugees are several members of the Volunteer Corps, which, before what is termed the fall of Vryburg, was disbanded, owing, it was generally supposed, to several of its members being suspected of doubtful loyalty. It now appears that the disbandment was simply resolved on when the townspeople, in public meeting assembled, determined to yield to the demands of Gen. De la Rey to surrender in order to avoid bloodshed. With a force of 100 police and 60 volunteers, and with one Maxim, the town was helpless against the Boers, who were 1,100 strong, and had three guns. The part played by Major Scott in the surrender was heroic and pathetic. When the meeting had resolved to surrender and sent a deputation to request him to retire, the Major first called the officers of the volunteers and police together, and explained the position—namely, that his orders from Col. Kekewich were to hold the place, and that he was determined to do so. He was, however, overruled by numbers, and most reluctantly he retired with the police to the veldt. Although there was only twenty-four hours' supply of either food or water in the town, Major Scott made one more desperate effort. He called for men who would fight to the last. Six responded to his appeal. On this he went out, but with a broken heart. The men camped out on the veldt for the night, but without any camp equipments, and Major Scott lay down to rest beside Sub-Inspector Rush. In the course of the night he complained of the cold, and rose up and left the Sub-Inspector's side. Two minutes afterward Rush heard a shot, and, thinking it was the Boers upon them, he raised an alarm, only to find Major Scott shot through the head, and quite dead. The police buried the Major next day at Geluk, where the spot is now fenced in.

At the time of the surrender many farmers were gathered in town for Nachtmaal, a periodical form of religious service, in which the farmers of a Dutch district in South Africa travel many miles to town in order to take part. Both farmers and townspeople were seized with panic and fled in all directions. Gen. De la Rey, in a short speech, declared the town to be annexed to the Transvaal, at the same time hoisting the Vierkleur. The Civil Commissioner and his officials, who had remained at their posts, were then summoned by the General, who ordered them to leave the town. They were, however, treated with every courtesy, and passes to convey them through the Boer lines were given them.

The officials, with their wives and families, in the course of their journey to Cape Colony, had to pass several commandos both of Transvaal and Free State burghers. Their treatment by the Free Staters was much better than by the Transvaalers, who jeered at them, but offered no violence. In every way, and especially in smartness and equipment, the Free State commandos, the refugees say, compare favorably with those of the Transvaal. The camps of the latter were guarded in the most slovenly manner. Many of the stores on the road had been looted, and the burghers were wearing clothing that had thus been commandeered The railway station at Taungs was utterly looted, the papers being scattered over the veldt, while miles of telegraph tape had been unwound as if in sport. In fact, the Boers had behaved like children at mischief. The railway bridge at Hartz River had been broken and a good deal of damage done at points along the line. Nevertheless, the refugees met with considerable kindness at the hands of some Free State officials, who went to much trouble to lighten the hardships of the little party. The power of the Kimberley searchlight may be judged from the fact that its reflection was seen seventy miles distant from Kimberley. This light is an awe-inspiring as well as inexplicable phenomenon to the Boers, who try in vain to escape its rays as it plays upon their laagers and upon themselves when on the march. It literally searches them out and throws them into a light as clear as day.

Since the surrender of Vryburg the Civil Commissioner has been the object of much adverse criticism throughout the Colony, which apparently was unmerited. It is claimed that but for the line of action he adopted there would have been great and useless bloodshed. After the Mayor bolted, he had to assume the responsibility of governing the town. When the evacuation had been decided on a number of the residents visited the Boer laager and urged them to take possession.

The United Hebrew Charities.

A summary of statistics of the work of the United Hebrew Charities for November shows the number of applications received and dealt with to be 2,824, representing 9,413 individuals. Relief was refused for sufficient cause in 748 cases; 90 persons were supplied with transportation to different parts of this country and Europe; 12,174 garments, 484 pairs of shoe, and 81 articles of furniture and bedding were distributed, 68 nights' lodging and 205 meals were furnished to homeless men and women. In the employment bureau there was a total registry of 722 applications. Work was found for 247, 70 refused work, and 228 failed to call after registering. In the industrial school there was an average attendance of 226 girls learning sewing and dressmaking. The receipts for the month were $7,104.04. The disbursements in the various departments for relief were $9,800.

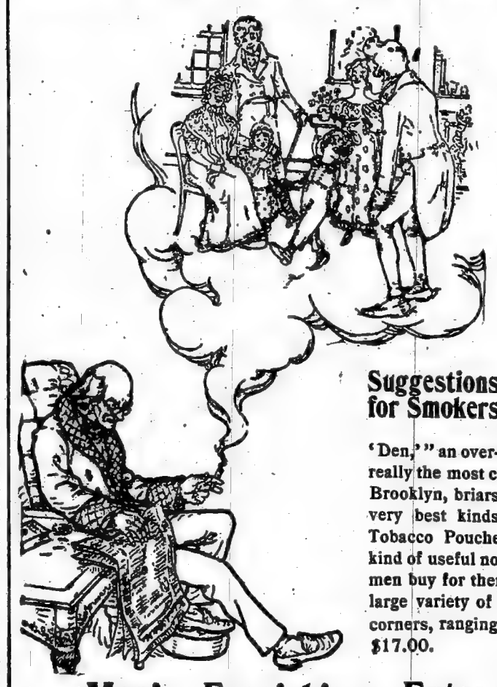
Christmas Week Visions.



It is said that the person who always sits on the cushion of advantages will go to sleep. It is the disadvantages which keep one awake. Our forceful opposition to difficulties always brings some betterment, some new achievement, which keep this store awake.

The disadvantages of not having all the room we wished in order to accommodate you resulted in our new building. Its very much increased facilities, its enlarged elevator service, its roomy broad aisles, its good light, its pure air, its new Departments, its convenient Tea Room, its better display of goods, its cheerfulness, until to-day it's the second largest store in Greater New York, and second to none in merchandising advantages. Christmas week, the most crowded shopping week in the year, will be comfortable here. Our increased space and facilities warrant that. Our delivery department has always been an ideal one. But we've even improved on the scope and effectiveness of the best, assuring you the most accurate and prompt service in New York. The whole store is replenished with the very newest Christmas goods from the roof to the basement, and at prices that are incomparable. To have been here last week doesn't mean that you have seen what we have this week. Every day changes the scene. Come and enjoy a visit.

Suggestions for Smokers.

"I'm glad I have found a place where I can get a suggestion for a smoker's 'Den,'" an over-heard remark. But we've really the most complete stock of Pipes in Brooklyn, briars and meerschaums of the very best kinds, Cigar Holders, Trays, Tobacco Pouches and every conceivable kind of useful novelty. Those things that men buy for themselves. Among them a large variety of water Pipes for Turkish corners, ranging in prices from $1.75 to $17.00.

$3.00 for Regular $5.00 to $15.00 Umbrellas.

It seems almost like telling you what can't be true when we say these Umbrellas are the regular $5.00 to $12.00 and $15.00 kinds, and that there are more $10.00 ones than less. But it's a fact or we wouldn't say so, and happens thus wise: The long-continued dry weather has very materially lessened the demand for umbrellas, and a maker with a large stock was frightened. We made our terms, fortunately, just in the nick of time for Christmas. We pass the purchase on to you, with all there is in it. But for the umbrellas. There are 1,187 of them, for both men and women. About half are men's full 8-rib, 28-inch; balance are women's. Beautiful gift giving handles of genuine ivory, real Cape Horn tortoise shell, rare natural woods, long 9 to 12-inch Princess's pearls, and every one richly trimmed with sterling silver. All at $3.00 each, and they are the regular $5.00 to $15.00 kinds, too. Is it worth while getting here early enough to chance getting a $15.00 umbrella for $3.00?

A Colony of Best Dolls.

There are Dolls here that are pictures and the grown-up people just love to stay around and watch them. Can you blame the children then for being almost glued to the spot when they see them? But then our dolls are so natural it seems almost an insult to them to call them dolls, and they are so nice we kind of hate to spoil the charm by quoting prices. All the same, the prices have a practical charm, an economy about them, that can't be beaten. RETURNS TO HIS FIRST LOVE.

Minister Who Tried Suicide When Engaged to Two Women Will Marry His First Choice.

Special to The New York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Dec. 17.—After becoming engaged to one girl, falling in love with another, renouncing his first attachment, and attempting to commit suicide as the easiest way to solve the snarl in which cupid had involved his affections, the Rev. George Allen of Milton has essayed another venture in the direction of matrimony.

A special meeting of the Session of the Presbyterian Church at Milton, of which he is pastor, was called on Friday evening, when his engagement was announced to Miss Minnie Gedney, niece of Dr. Gedney, a leading Ulster County physician, residing at Milton.

It was to Miss Gedney that it was reported Mr. Allen was engaged before he made an attempt to kill himself at the home of his cousin, Mrs. Henry Hustis, in Cold Spring in November of last year. He stood before a mirror and fired six bullets from a 22 calibre revolver into his head. Four of the bullets were extracted, and owing to a good constitution he recovered. The only explanation made at that time for the act was that Mr. Allen was temporarily out of his mind because of an attachment which he had come to regard as unsuitable.

For about a year previous to the incident referred to his health had not been good, and the Summer previous he had spent with his father in Paisley, Scotland. On the steamship, returning from Scotland, he met Miss Nokes, a pretty trained nurse, connected with a New York hospital. The two became engaged before leaving the steamship at New York. When Mr. Allen thought the subject over calmly he felt that he had made a mistake, but how to rectify it and do justice to Miss Nokes and meet the demands of his own conscience he could not decide. For three weeks prior to the attempt he made on his life he was out of his mind, and was cared for by friends at Milton.

When Miss Nokes learned the real state of Mr. Allen's mind she released him from his engagement.

During all his troubles the members of Mr. Allen's congregation remained faithful to him. The announcement of his engagement to Miss Gedney brought to him the hearty congratulations of every member of his church, with best wishes for the happiness of his bride-elect and himself.

DOCTORS TORTURE A PRIEST.

Use an Electric Battery in Satisfying a Personal Grudge.

Special to The New York Times.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., Dec. 17.—Sensational developments are promised in the case of the robbery of the Rev. Father Stanton, the Catholic priest at Clinton, a week ago. The two robbers remained in the house two hours, and by threatening to shoot him kept Father Stanton from giving an alarm. For two hours they tortured the priest with an electric battery they brought with them. The battery was applied to his feet and neck.

It is said that the two men went to the house a second time, but were frightened away. Since then three miners have remained with Father Stanton each night.

During the past few days the town has become greatly excited over the suspicion that the two men are prominent physicians. It is said that they were intoxicated, and did not really intend to commit the robbery, but were gratifying their personal animosity.

Members of the congregation have employed detectives to locate the guilty persons.

LIEUT. T. M. BRUMBY DEAD

Well-Known Naval Officer Succumbs to Fever.

WAS DEWEY'S RIGHT-HAND MAN

Rendered Valuable Services at Manila —The Interment Will Be Made in Georgia.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17.—Lieut. Thomas M. Brumby, Flag Lieutenant to Admiral Dewey during the Manila campaign, who has been ill with typhoid fever for several weeks, died at Garfield Hospital shortly after 6 o'clock this evening.

His death, while not unexpected, was a great shock to Admiral Dewey. The relations of the two men for several years past had been very intimate, and a strong friendship had grown up between them. Lieut. Brumby went out to the Asiatic station with the Admiral, and had been there with him until they both returned to the United States several months ago. In his capacity as Flag Lieutenant to the Admiral, Lieut. Brumby was thrown with his chief practically all the time, and acted as his personal representative in many matters of detail delegated to him by the commanding officer.

He was regarded by Admiral Dewey as a bright, energetic, and capable assistant, while his devotion to the Admiral was marvelous. The burden of his thought during the latter days of his illness, when his mind was racked with delirium, seemed to be regarding his work for the Admiral.

The Lieutenant's last illness, dated from about Nov. 27, the first symptom being nothing more than a cold, which, however, failed to yield to treatment and soon afterward he went to the Garfield Hospital, where he died. Admiral Dewey was unremitting in his attentions to him until his condition became precarious and visitors were not allowed to see him.

Some days ago Mrs. W. I. Heyward of Marietta, Ga., a sister, was summoned, and Thursday she was joined by her husband, both remaining with the Lieutenant until he died. His aged mother is still living in Marietta, Ga. Lieut. Brumby was unmarried.

Nothing definite has been decided concerning the funeral, except that the body will be taken to Georgia for interment, leaving here to-morrow night for Atlanta. It is entirely improbable that Admiral Dewey will accompany the remains, but will designate his secretary, Lieut. H. H. Caldwell, to perform that duty.

In his report of the battle of Manila Admiral Dewey recommended that Brumby be advanced some numbers on the list of Lieutenants. His recommendation was adopted by the Navy Department, and the name was sent to the Senate, but together with a number of other promotions made by the department was not acted upon.

The promotion recommended placed him about thirteenth on the list of Lieutenants, and had it been confirmed he would in less than a year from now have reached the grade of Lieutenant Commander. The Lieutenant's death is the third of those who were closely associated with Dewey at the battle of Manila, who have died since that time, namely, Capt. Gridley, Commander Wood, and Lieut. Brumby.

Lieut. Brumby was presented with a sword by the Legislature of Georgia on the 26th of October. He remained in Georgia some days after that, and returned to Washington about the middle of November.

Lieut. Brumby's father was Col. Arnoldus V. Brumby, who graduated in 1835 from the West Point Military Academy. He served in the Florida war of 1836 against the Seminole Indians. In 1851 he established the Georgia Military Institute at Marietta, and when the civil war began was placed in command of the Fourteenth Georgia Infantry, but ill-health forced him to resign after a few months' service. It was in his father's institute, afterward burned to the ground by Gen. Sherman in his march to the sea, that Lieut. Brumby was born in 1855. The family moved to Athens in 1863 and to Atlanta about 1868.

Young Brumby entered the Annapolis Naval Academy on Sept. 29, 1873, and was graduated June 18, 1879. He was assigned to the Tennessee, on which he served for two years. He was promoted Ensign on Nov. 26, 1880, and the next year was assigned to the receiving ship Franklin. As Ensign he served also on the Jamestown, 1882; the Gedney 1882-5, and the Vandalia, 1885-7. He was promoted Junior Lieutenant April 21, 1887, and was made Lieutenant Aug. 24, 1892. Meanwhile he had served on the Vandalia, the receiving ship Vermont, and the schoolship St. Mary's. In 1896 he was again assigned to the Vermont, and in 1897 was sent to the Naval Observatory and War College.

When Admiral Dewey, then Commodore Dewey, was assigned to the command of the Asiatic Squadron, he chose Thomas M. Brumby, who was at that time stationed in Washington, to be his flag officer. In 1898 Brumby was placed on duty on the Olympia. At Hongkong and in the Philippines he became known as "Dewey's right hand man." President McKinley, in one of his speeches, said that while a Northerner first raised the flag over Santiago it was a Southerner, Brumby, who set the Stars and Stripes floating over Manila.

A grandson and two nephews of the late Col. Brumby are line officers of the navy, and other members of the family served as officers in the volunteer army during the war with Spain.

MARIETTA, Ga., Dec. 17.—Mrs. Ann Eliza Brumby, the aged mother of Lieut. Brumby, received the news of her son's death very calmly. The long illness of the Lieutenant had prepared Mrs. Brumby for the shock, and she displayed little emotion. She admitted that she had given up hope of his recovery several days ago.

The Brumby burying ground is in Atlanta, and while Mrs. Brumby would like to have the remains of her son brought home she said to-night she would offer no objection should the Washington officials desire to inter the body there.

ACTORS USE BALL CARTRIDGES.

Members of the "Three Musketeers" Company Are Wounded by Their Comrades on the Stage.

Special to The New York Times.

PHOENIX, Arizona, Dec. 17.—A performance by the "Three Musketeers" Company at the Patton Grand here late last night came to an abrupt ending. The Opera House was packed when some unexpected shooting in the fourth act caused a stampede.

In accordance with the lines of the play, one member of the company in the rear of the stage, and concealed from the audience, commenced shooting his pistol with frequency. Seven or eight actors on the stage replied, and they were all shooting with marvelous rapidity. Paul Gilmore and David Halbert, members of the company, fell to the floor during the shooting, but that was a part of their acting, and not until Gilmore exclaimed, "For God's sake, stop shooting; these are ball cartridges!" did the firing cease.

Gilmore and Halbert were both seriously wounded, but they will not die. In the meantime the audience yelled "Murder!" and called to the police for protection. Women were screaming when, to cap the climax, the lights went out, and the crowd jammed itself at the doors in a mass packed too tightly to get outside.

The company's supply of blank cartridges had given out, and shortly before the performance a small boy went to a store to purchase a supply. The clerk sold him ball cartridges, thinking they were blank. The cartridges were a peculiar kind and have not been in use for some years. The lead balls were hidden behind a thick wad, and it would require more than a hurried examination to reveal the true nature of the cartridges. During the shooting at least thirty of these leaden missles whizzed before the footlights and in various corners of the Opera House.

AGUINALDO CONTINUES FLIGHT.

Is Making for Cabugaon, Cagayan Province—Gen. Young's Forces Divided—McCalla Takes Two Towns.

MANILA, Dec. 17.—The following dispatch, dated Dec. 15, has been received from a correspondent at Laoag, Province of North Ilocos:

"Natives at Manitong, Province of North Ilocos, report that Aguinaldo, in disguise, and accompanied by several of his Generals, left that place last Saturday with 500 men, going in the direction of Solsona, from which point he intended to proceed to Cabugaon, Province of Cagayan.

"An insurgent Major, claiming to be in command of 100 Filipinos who have been guarding twenty-three American prisoners at Cabugaon, surrendered. He wrote his Captain to deliver the prisoners to Gen. Young.

"Gen. Young's command is now divided into six or seven parties, which are operating in the mountains about Laoag. Several parties are hunting for Gen. Tino.

"Major Swigert, with a detachment of the Third Cavalry, had an engagement with 120 insurgents near Dingras. Two Americans were killed and two wounded. Several Filipinos were killed.

"Capt. McCalla of the navy has occupied Claveria and Pantelona. The Filipinos surrendered 1,000 rifles."

CONVENTION FIGHT ECHOES.

Chicagoans Declare that Dr. Jamison's Absentmindedness Gave the Decision to Philadelphia.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17.—Chicagoans here are still busy explaining why they did not get the Republican Convention. The Chicago delegation came here expecting that the convention would be thrown at their heads, and they have not yet recovered from the shock they received when it went to Philadelphia. The French cry, "We are betrayed," has been raised, and Chicago is looking for a victim.

Dr. T. N. Jamison, the Illinois member of the National Committee, is the likeliest candidate, and the indications are that he will have to spend a great deal of time explaining to his fellow-citizens why Chicago did not get the convention. There is also some growling at Senator Hanna, and it is asserted that Philadelphia would not have secured the necessary votes if word had not been passed around that Hanna favored Philadelphia. The explanation that Philadelphia won because a majority of the committee preferred it as a site for the convention of 1900 is not accepted by Chicagoans, and they refuse to entertain it for a moment.

The charge against Jamison is that he forgot to vote. On the first ballot Chicago was in the lead. On the second Chairman Hanna announced that somebody had failed to vote. R. C. Kerens had attempted to change his vote to Philadelphia, but the Chairman had ruled that this could not be done. After Chairman Hanna discovered that there was a missing ballot, he passed around his hat, asking the committeemen to deposit their ballots as their names were called. This gave Kerens a chance to vote for Philadelphia, and Philadelphia won by a single vote.

This is the story the Chicago men tell when they are explaining how it happened, and they assert that had the forgotten vote been cast, Kerens not being allowed to vote for Philadelphia, Chicago would have had a majority. And they allege that the forgetful committeeman was their own representative, Dr. Jamison.

Dr. Jamison says he did vote, and that it was some other committeeman who forgot. It is alleged, however, that he admitted to several committeemen that his was the forgotten vote. His friends say that if Jamison did not vote for Chicago, it was because he was absentminded, and that he did not mean to let Philadelphia have the convention. It is doubtful, however, if his absentmindedness will be received as an excuse in Chicago, in the state of mind in which Chicago people now are.

THE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

Cincinnati Will Make an Effort to Have It Held There.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 17.—There will be a strong effort made to have the next Democratic National Convention held in Cincinnati. The building erected for the International Saengerfest last June is retained in expectation of having this convention here. It was decided to make an effort for the Republican National Convention, but it was said that the Republican Committeemen would not consider any Ohio city when it was conceded that an Ohio man would be renominated.

The Saengerfest hall seats 14,800 and cost over $90,000. With a suitable building already constructed, it is claimed that Cincinnati will offer every inducement that can be offered by other cities. It is understood that John R. McLean, the Ohio member of the Democratic National Committee, will do everything in his power for his native city, and other members of the committee are known to be favorable to this city.

THE TEXAS AT HAVANA.

The Disinterment of the Maine Dead Begins To-day.

HAVANA, Dec. 17.—The United States battleship Texas, Capt. Sigsbee commanding, has arrived here, and Capt. Greene, Commandant of the naval station, has conferred with Capt. Sigsbee with regard to the removal from Colon Cemetery of the bodies of the victims of the Maine disaster. The present intention is to remove the remains with as little ceremony as possible.

The work of disinterment will begin to-morrow morning. Each coffin will be inclosed in a metal casket and be surrounded by a disinfecting compound. The caskets will be removed during the night to the naval wharf, where they will be under guard until all is ready for removal to the battleship, which, it is expected, will take place Wednesday night or Thursday at daybreak. The Texas will then leave at once. Father Chidwick will identify the coffins as they are taken from the ground, having a chart showing the exact location of each.

ARMOUR & CO. AIDS SQUIRE & CO.

Chicago House Comes to the Rescue of the Boston Firm.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 17.—The financial situation in so far as it relates to the great packing house of John P. Squire & Co., which has failed for $3,000,000, has been greatly helped to-day by the action of Armour & Co. of Chicago, who, it is stated, have come to the assistance of the stranded company.

Just what has been done is not known, but it is understood that enough money has been guaranteed to make the company go along without much further trouble. Whether Armour intends absorbing the plant cannot be ascertained, the firm refusing to discuss the matter.

CHRISTMAS AND THE JEWS.

Dr. Hirsch Says His People Should Not Make It a Day of Rejoicing.

CHICAGO, Dec. 17.—In Sinai Temple to-day the Rev. Dr. Emil G. Hirsch, the most prominent Jewish clergyman in Chicago, denounced the celebration of Christmas by the Jews as a day of rejoicing.

He said every true Jew, remembering history and knowing that the day is one of persecution to his people in Europe, should observe the day not in gladness, but in sorrow. This Christmas in particular, Dr. Hirsch said, was one that should not be observed with cries of "Peace on Earth, Good Will Toward Men" when nations were at war.

He declared Christmas was a day dreaded by the Jews of many European countries, as they feared for their lives.

BIG FIRE ON FIRST AVENUE.

Tenement Dwellers Routed Early This Morning by Fierce Blaze in Factory Building.

Fire started in some sudden manner at 12:40 o'clock this morning in the big factory building 655 and 657 First Avenue, between Thirty-seventh and Thirty-eighth Streets. The flames spread with such rapidity that the firemen, fearing the destruction of many of the tenements which crowd upon the factory on all sides, hurriedly sent out additional alarms. Within fifteen minutes of the time when the flames were first seen four alarms had been sent in.

The building was occupied by a wire works, a cigar factory, a machine shop, and other business firms. It was apparent that there was no hope of saving this building, and every effort was devoted to the tenements.

Very soon after the arrival of the first engine the avenue was blocked with half-clothed men and women, who tumbled from the tenements with wild cries.

The flames shot from the cellar of the building, through an elevator shaft, and burst through the roof to light up the neighborhood for blocks around. Sheets of flame burst from windows, and showers of sparks fell upon the gathering crowds and the frightened tenement dwellers.

The basement was occupied by a livery stable owned by Michael Kiley of 154 East Forty-second Street. There were fifty horses in the place. All were destroyed, despite the efforts on the part of police, firemen, and citizens to save them.

The ground floor was occupied by a bottling establishment owned by an Italian, whose name could not be learned. The second floor was occupied by A. McGurk, manufacturer of mattresses. The third floor was occupied by Challan, Helenex & Co., manufacturers of wire and wire supplies. The fifth and sixth floors were occupied by Emil Ney, cigar manufacturer.

It seemed several times as if the five-story brick cigar factory owned by Maurice Jacoby, with an entrance in Thirty-eighth Street and extending to the rear of the burning building, would catch fire. This was prevented by the hard work of the firemen.

Chief Croker was in command of the firemen, while Capt. Delaney had charge of the reserves which were sent out from the East Thirty-fifth Street Police Station.

Roundsman Quinn and a squad of men were sent into the tenement house, at 653 First Avenue, to rouse the tenants. They got everybody out, apparently without much trouble. On the third floor they found Mrs. Landsberg's three children, two, three, and five years old, unconscious from smoke. The little ones were carried down stairs and were revived after a little work.

Chaplain Smith of the Fire Department was on the ground during the fire.

It was impossible to get an estimate of the loss. A watchman familiar with the contents of the several floors, thought it would take $60,000 to replace the property destroyed. The fire was well under control at 2:30 o'clock this morning.

QUAY'S FRIENDS UNEASY.

Rumored in Washington that Gov. Stone Will Call a Meeting of the Legislature to Elect a Senator.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17.—There is some disquietude among the friends of Matthew Stanley Quay to-night in consequence of the persistency of the report that Gov. Stone, who appointed him to be Senator, is to convene the Legislature of Pennsylvania in extra session to endeavor to elect a Senator. Members of the Senate Committee on Elections, having the Quay case in charge, are at a loss to know where this report could have originated. Quay's opponents, who are also trying to trace it, suspect that it indicates a settled conviction on the Quay side, after repeated polls of the Senate, that he cannot be seated and that it would be better to make a second effort to pull him through the Legislature.

It is not generally believed by either the Quay men or their opponents that Gov. Stone will do any such weak and hasty thing. It would, say all the Pennsylvanians who have talked about the report, at once show that he doubted his right to appoint after the Legislature had refused to elect. It would also plunge the Legislature into another contest, which would be hopeless for Quay, but would afford Gov. Stone the chance which some of his friends say he covets, of being voted for and elected Senator himself. This, it is asserted by Pennsylvania politicians, would be the end of Stone, for it is not believed that he could poll as large a vote as Quay.

A Senator not on the Elections Committee, but who has been polled as intending to vote for Quay, said to-night that he did not think it likely that Quay could win his fight unless opinion changed very decidedly in the Senate. It was true, he said, that Quay is personally liked in the Senate, but members were doubtful of the wisdom of disregarding the precedent set in the Corbett case, although for his part he considered the precedent wrong. Having adopted it, and forbidden Governors to appoint after Legislatures had refused to elect, it would look very much like encouragement to other Governors to send Senators here from the offices of Governors instead of through the joint assemblies of the States.

The case will go over until after the holiday recess, beginning Dec. 20.

WANTED A MILITARY FUNERAL.

Ohio Man Accused of Double Murder Desired by Will to be Buried in the Atlantic Ocean.

Special to The New York Times.

BELLEFONTAINE, Ohio, Dec. 17.—On May 22, when Ernest Austin, now on trial on the charge of murdering his mother and brother, was lying at the home of a neighbor suffering from self-inflicted wounds, he thought he was going to die, and, summoning Attorney Willis, he made and signed a will, which was duly witnessed by two neighbors.

These men were made executors for the second clause of the will, which provided that in case of his death, he should have a military funeral, be buried in the Atlantic Ocean, and have a salute fired over the place where the body was sunk.

In the first part of the will he made arrangements for the payment of all of the expenses and other bills he might have outstanding. In the third and last section he bequeathed the balance of his estate, which consisted of a fine farm and all the stock on it, which he came into possession of by the death of his murdered mother and brother, to the lodge of United American Mechanics, at Mingo, of which he was a member. This will has just been made public through the progress of the trial. It is believed that the Austin case will be given to the jury this week.

MARCONI SYSTEM IMPROVED.

Discovery of a Receiver 2,000 Times More Sensitive than His.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Dec. 17.—Researches by Prof. Reginald A. Fessenden and his assistant, Prof. Kintner, in the electrical laboratory of the Western University of Pennsylvania have resulted in the production of a receiver for wireless telegraphy that is 2,000 times more sensitive than the "coherer" of the Marconi system.

In speaking of the discovery to-day Prof. Fessenden said: "Although we have improved the receiver so that it is 2,000 times as sensitive as the original one we realize that we have not yet begun to see the limit. Marconi in his brilliant experiments has demonstrated that messages can be sent over ninety miles. As our receiver is much more sensitive it is clear that the messages can be sent by our method very much further, though just what the limit is I would not like to say. It should be possible to send messages at least across the Atlantic with poles less than 200 feet high. The ultimate distance must be determined by actual experiment."

FIXING ASSEMBLY SLATE

Senator Platt Confers with Speaker Nixon and Mr. Odell.

THE COMMITTEES AGREED ON

Allds to be Majority Leader—Cities Chairmanship for Kelsey—Mr. Payn's Chances.

Senator T. C. Platt, leader of the Republican State organization, had a long talk yesterday morning with S Frederick Nixon of Chautauqua, who will again be Speaker of the Assembly, and B. B. Odell, Jr., Chairman of the Republican State Committee, who represents Mr. Platt while the latter is in Washington. The make-up of the Assembly committees formed the subject of discussion. Several times during the past few weeks Mr. Platt has talked with his lieutenants about this matter, which has given him much trouble to settle with satisfaction to all persons concerned.

It was learned after yesterday's conference that while the committees were practically agreed on, some changes may be found necessary before the official announcement is made on the floor of the Assembly Chamber. Assemblyman Jotham P. Allds of Chenango County will again be Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, which carries with it the leadership of the majority on the floor. There has been no opposition to the selection of Allds for a second term in this place, and Speaker Nixon is anxious to have him as his chief lieutenant in the contests which are anticipated during the session.

The Chairmanship of the Cities Committee, which has bothered the leaders more than anything else, according to the present programme will go to Assemblyman Otto Kelsey of Livingston County. George W. Aldridge, ex-State Superintendent of Public Works, is in the city for the purpose of looking after the interests of Assemblyman Weston E. Lewis of Monroe County. Mr. Aldridge would like to see Mr. Lewis at the head of the Cities Committee, but it is understood that he may be assigned to the Committee on Taxation and Retrenchment in case it is finally determined not to give this post to Assemblyman Abram C. De Graw of Brooklyn, who was Chairman of the committee at the last session. Mr. De Graw himself announced a week or two ago that he would not get his old committee again, but since then pressure has been brought to bear to have him returned.

Assemblymen James G. Graham of Orange County and Willian A. Tripp of Dutchess County are both mentioned in connection with the Chairmanship of the Insurance Committee. If Mr. Graham does not get the place it is expected that the Chairmanship of the Judiciary Committee will go to Assemblyman Louis Bedell of Orange County, which is the home of Mr. Odell, who is anxious to have his own Assemblymen get desirable appointments. Assemblyman Thomas M. Costello of Oswego County will probably be found at the head of the Committee on Labor and Industries, while Assemblyman Robert J. Fish of Madison County is slated for head of the Railroads Committee.

Two other Chairmanships which are regarded as settled are those of Public Health and Privileges and Elections. Assemblyman Nelson H. Henry and Assemblyman Edward H. Fallows, both of this county, are said to be the selections for these places. Mr. Fallows could have had the Cities Chairmanship had he wished it, but he declined to accept it after consulting with some of his friends.

It was announced at the Fifth Avenue Hotel last night that Gov. Roosevelt would be in the city at the end of the week for a final talk with Senator Platt on the legislative programme and the matter of appointments which will be at the disposal of the Governor during the coming year. The principal one of these will be the superintendency of the Insurance Department, now held by Louis F. Payn. Mr. Payn saw Senator Platt yesterday before leaving the city. He wants to retain his place, and has said that he would fight the Governor if he attempted to name another man, relying on his friends in the Senate to vote against the confirmation of anybody else. This promises to be the feature of the session.

Mr. Payn's friends have been saying that he made a great mistake in making a public declaration of antagonism to the Governor in his recent interviews printed in the local newspapers. Mr. Payn has been told this by those who for years have been his political allies. His friends in the organization, in discussing the matter, say that he has placed the Governor in a position, by his open defiance, where he will be forced to name some one else for his place. The Governor's friends here assert that he will name a man for Mr. Payn's place, regardless of the effect it might have on the next campaign.

Senator Platt returned to Washington on an afternoon train.

SECOND STAGE CAREER ENDED.

After Losing an Eye as an Actor, Andre Turned Prestidigitateur and Shot Off a Finger.

Henry Andre, thirty-five years old, of 107 East Twenty-third Street, professionally known as "Zanzic," a prestidigitateur, shot himself in the hand last night while performing at Proctor's Pleasure Palace. It was his first appearance on the vaudeville stage.

In one of his tricks he used several rings borrowed from persons in the audience. The rings were apparently rammed into the barrel of an antiquated pistol. This was to be discharged at a beer bottle on a table, and from this bottle a white guinea pig was to be drawn forth with the rings on a blue ribbon about its neck.

The pistol used in the act had to be a very large one, and it was only yesterday morning that "Zanzic," after several weeks' search, found what he wanted in a second-hand shop on Third Avenue. So long had the weapon been in stock that it never occurred to him that it might be loaded. He only intended to use a percussion cap to produce a report when the pistol was fired.

When Zanzic pulled the trigger last night there was a flash and a report which would have been creditable to a small cannon. Then the act ended abruptly. The performer bowed and smiled and quickly retired to the wings. The next moment the curtain went down. Two-thirds of the audience applauded, but the remaining third, failing to see the point, insisted on some sort of an explanation. Finally another performer stepped before the curtain and said that an accident had happened, and that the "professor" was seriously hurt, having shot off one finger. After a brief intermission a troup of acrobats appeared on the stage, and the performance went on.

In the meantime there was much excitement back of the curtain. Roundsman Sennett of the East Fifty-first Street Police Station heard the commotion from where he was standing, in the Fifty-eighth Street door of the theatre, and, finding out what had happened, sent to Flower Hospital for an ambulance. The surgeon, on his arrival, found that "Zanzic" had shot his left index finger off at the second joint. He was taken to the hospital, where an amputation was performed. If the man escapes lockjaw and blood poisoning he probably will recover in three or four weeks. He can hardly return to the stage as a legerdemain artist, as his hand is likely to be crippled.

Two years ago the same man was endeavoring to make his living as an actor. He was the villain in a one-act melodrama wherein the heroine, in self-defense, was supposed to fire at him with a revolver. He got too close to her one night and the powder burned his left eye out, necessitating his retirement from the dramatic field.

FRANCE AND CHINA MAY FIGHT.

Dispute Over Boundary of French Concession Has Led to a Skirmish —Trouble Is Expected.

Special to The New York Times.

TACOMA, Washington, Dec. 17.—Hongkong mail advices state another Franco-Chinese war is imminent over the delimitation of French "leased" territory at Kuang Chcu Bay, on the Tonkin border. This dispute is of several months' standing, the French having demanded thrice the amount of territory which China is willing to concede under France's original demand for an open port there under French domination.

Marshal Su, China's most famous General and the victor in the battle of Liang Shan in the last Franco-Chinese war, was sent to Kuang Chou Bay with 30,000 well-drilled troops. He bore special orders from the Empress Dowager to uphold the Chinese cause in the settlement of the dispute with a firm hand, and to fight if necessary without any further orders from Peking. Marshal Su arrived last month at Kuang Chou Wan, on Kuang Chou Bay, and a skirmish between the Chinese and French troops followed upon his refusal to longer temporize over the boundary negotiations. A half-dozen Frenchmen and sixty Chinese were wounded, according to French reports.

Marshal Su has a reserve force of 6,000 regulars at Tse Khan, and is preparing for a big fight. The French have a much smaller force, and to strengthen them have assembled the warships Descartes, Pascal, Bengali, Surprise, Lion, and Dentrecasteaux.

NO SPANISH-RUSSIAN ALLIANCE.

Senor Silvela Says Spain Will Not Give Up African Possessions.

MADRID, Dec. 17.—Señor Silvela, the Premier, replying to a question on the subject in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday, said the report of an alliance between Spain and Russia, based upon the cession of Ceuta, the Spanish seaport town in Morocco, opposite Gibraltar, was without foundation.

"Neither now nor in the future," he declared, "will Spain on any account cede her African possessions."

The Spanish Government has formally recognized Gen. Cipriano Castro as President of the Republic of Venezuela.

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER'S GIFT.

The Tuskegee Industrial Institute Is to Receive $10,000.

Booker T. Washington has received a letter from John D. Rockefeller, who offers $10,000 to the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute, at Tuskegee, Ala. Half of this amount is to be used in meeting last year's deficit caused by the erection of necessary buildings and other improvements.

The remaining $5,000 is to be used toward the present year's current expenses.

CLAIM THEY WERE MISLED.

Norwalk People Subscribed for Books Without Knowing It.

Special to The New York Times.

NORWALK, Conn., Dec. 17.—The representative of a Chicago firm that was getting records of family ancestors for a history of Fairfield County two years ago is now in Norwalk and vicinity delivering the books at $15 each. Many people are greatly surprised when the book is delivered to them, saying they had no knowledge of ordering it. They are told that they did, and are shown their signatures. If the book is then refused the agent leaves it at the door and says their attorney will enforce payment.

Those who refuse to receive the book say the signatures were procured by subterfuge, as they were asked to sign after they had given a family record, and were told by the agent that the signature was desired to show that the record was genuine. It now transpires that they were signing an order for a $15 book.

MAY LOSE THEIR LIVES.

Mother and Daughter Burned as the Result of an Explosion in a Cellar.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Dec. 17.—Three persons were burned here late this afternoon by the explosion of gases in a cellar. The injured are Mrs. William Chamberlain of East Third Street, her daughter Lottie, fifteen years of age, and Joseph Stevens, a man employed by Mr. Chamberlain.

Mrs. Chamberlain had occasion to go into the basement of her home, and found that a barrel of varnish was leaking and that considerable of the stuff had run out upon the floor. She examined the barrel and found one of the hoops had broken. She obtained another barrel, and she and Stevens proceeded to transfer the varnish in the broken barrel to the good one. This was accomplished, and they then started to clean up the cellar floor.

While they were doing this Miss Chamberlain stood close by. It was becoming dark, and Mrs. Chamberlain struck a match, intending to light a lamp. The striking of the match was accompanied by a rush of flame and an explosion. The flame enveloped Mrs. Chamberlain and her daughter, and to a less extent Stevens.

Mrs. Chamberlain's clothing ignited, as did that of her daughter. They ran up stairs and, grabbing rugs and bed clothing, wrapped themselves in them and rolled about the floor. This put out the flames, but both were so badly burned that there is little hope of their recovery.

Stevens was a little distance off when the explosion took place, and escaped with a scorched face and singed hair.

BLUE LAWS FOR MT. VERNON.

Clothiers Arrested for Selling on Sunday—Two Prisoners Escape.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., Dec. 17.—The police of this city to-day began the enforcement of the law forbidding any dealer to sell goods on a Sunday. The Christian Endeavor Societies have been stirring up trouble here for some time and have caused the saloon keepers much trouble.

Only two arrests were made to-day, as the storekeepers had warning and would not sell to policemen whom they knew. Morris Greenwald and Jacob Sedermann, both clothiers, sold articles to policemen and were arrested and gave bail. They will have hearings to-morrow before Judge Schatz.

Patrolman Masterson had trouble. He made two arrests and both prisoners escaped. One of the prisoners was a woman. The policeman entered her place and made a purchase. As he put the parcel into his pocket he informed the woman that she was under arrest. She stormed and fussed, but put on her things and prepared to accompany the officer.

He started for the door with the woman behind at a distance of a few feet. He stepped through the door first, and as he did so it was slammed behind him. The key was quickly turned and he was on one side and the woman on the other. He waited for some time, but could not get in to take the woman into custody again.

A little later he arrested a man for selling him an article of wearing apparel, and the prisoner said he would have to get his hat and overcoat. He went up stairs for them and did not return, and a search later showed he had gotten away. Both will be arrested this morning when they open their stores.

the heroic measures now decided upon savor rather of weakness than of strength.

Rumor has it that the question of expenses has really been at the bottom of the half-hearted measures hitherto adopted, and it is not unlikely that Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and other members of the Cabinet will resign.

QUEEN TO REMAIN AT WINDSOR.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—The Court Newsmen have issued the following announcement:

"The arrangements made for the Queen's departure from Windsor have been postponed until after Christmas, as, owing to the present state of affairs in South Africa, the Queen is unwilling to be at a great distance from London."

Not for years before has the Queen decided to spend Christmas away from Osborne. Her decision to remain at Windsor, in touch with the Cabinet, is a measure of the gravity of the crisis and of the anxiety her Majesty feels for the welfare of the country.

She is, nevertheless, in fair health. Saturday morning she took her usual drive, and just before dinner that evening she received Lord Wolseley, who, with Major Gen. Sir Henry Peter Ewart, Crown Equerry to the Queen, dined at Windsor.

The Queen's graceful act in presenting a flag to the American hospital ship Maine is highly appreciated by her own people, as well as the Americans in London, and the morning papers express the hope that the incident means something more than a pretty ceremony.

REBELLION IN CAPE COLONY.

Whole Northern Part of the Country with the Boers—Natives in Basutoland Uneasy.

STERKSTROOM, Cape Colony, Dec. 16.—As a result of the British reverses, the whole country to the northward is virtually in a state of rebellion.

The natives there, as well as those in Basutoland, are said to be much disturbed and to be losing heart regarding the strength of the British.

CAPE TOWN, Dec. 14.—Secret meetings of Boer sympathizers continue to be held in various parts of Cape Colony, and the attitude of the Dutch farmers is truculent.

DURBAN, Dec. 16.—The Natal Government Gazette announces that Gen. Buller has appointed a commission to inquire into the losses of the people of the colony resulting from the Boer invasion.

GEN. ROBERTS'S SON DEAD.

Only Child of the New Commander in Chief Succumbs to Wounds.

LONDON, Dec. 17.—Lieut. the Hon. F. H. S. Roberts, son of Baron Roberts of Kandahar and Waterford, who was wounded in the engagement at Tugela River, is dead. Such was his display of gallantry on Friday in an attempt to rescue the guns that he was recommended for the Victoria Cross.

The young officer who has died from his wounds was the only surviving male child of the famous General. The man who would have probably inherited the title, Col. J. Sherston, a nephew of Lord Roberts, and at one time his aide de camp, was killed at the battle of Dundee. Lieut. Roberts was regarded as one of the most promising young officers in the British Army.

He was born at Simla Jan. 8, 1872, and, like his father, was destined for the army from childhood. On both sides he came of fighting stock, his mother being a daughter of Capt. John Bews of the old Seventy-third Regiment, now known as the Black Watch. Lieut. Roberts was educated at Eton, and afterward at the Royal Military College at Sandhurst. He passed the examination for the army with honors, and eight years ago received his commission in the King's Royal Rifles. He obtained his first "step" four years later.

In spite of his youth, he had seen active service in four campaigns, and his gallant conduct on the field of battle had won for him two "mentions" in dispatches to the War Office. He was in the Isazai, Waziristan, and Chitral relief expeditions, and in the Nile expedition of 187-8. He had arrived in South Africa only a few weeks before he was wounded.

BERLIN COMMENT CONTINUES.

Belief Generally Expressed that Great Britain's Standing as a Great Power Is Gone.

BERLIN, Dec. 18.—A distinguished member of the Diplomatic Corps, in the course of a discussion to-day regarding Gen. Buller's reverse, said: "It means morally far more for Great Britain than the mere loss of the battle. Her prestige after the defeats of last week has fallen enormously on the Continent, and it will be many years before she will again venture to assume a tone toward a great power such as she took in the Fashoda affair.

Most of the Berlin papers, as well as those throughout the country, comment upon Gen. Buller's defeat in a serious and dignified tone, although with a considerable undercurrent of satisfaction at Great Britain's humiliation. It is admitted that Great Britain is now fighting to save her South African possessions. The general belief is that Sir Redvers Buller acted prematurely and under pressure from the home Government. The official papers take a rather gloomy view, as if apprehensive of awkward complications.

The Kreuz Zeitung says: "Great Britain's decadence is now apparent to the whole world."

The Vorwaerts hopes the war will result in the establishment of the United States of Africa on a republican basis, but it is also convinced that such an outcome would not affect Great Britain's position as a great power.

The Vossische Zeitung thinks it would be hopeless for Great Britain to match herself against a great power.

The military papers severely criticise British tactics.

RUSSIAN PRESS PLEASED.

Leading Journals Express Gratification Over Buller's Defeat.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 18.—The Novoe Vremya, which does not conceal its pleasure at Gen. Buller's defeat, says:

"The whole campaign must now be recommenced, but under altogether altered conditions of opinion in England."

The Svjet says: "The Almighty is manifestly bestowing His blessing on the Boer arms. God is punishing an arrogant and rapacious people, who have oppressed and persecuted other races in order to enrich themselves."

IRISH MEETING BROKEN UP.

Dublin Police Called Out and Troops Kept in Readiness to Subdue Boer Sympathizers.

DUBLIN, Dec. 17.—The announcement that a pro-Boer meeting would be convened to-day as a protest against the proposal of Trinity College to confer a degree upon Joseph Chamberlain led to exciting scenes. A large force of police was called out, and the troops were held in readiness.

Maud Gonne, the so-called "Irish Joan of Arc," and James Connolly, the Irish Republican, drove in a wagonette to the place appointed for the meeting, which was attended by a large crowd. Mr. Connolly tried to speak, but was prevented by the police. The wagonette then made a tour of the streets, the crowd rapidly increasing, cheering for the Boers, singing "God Save Ireland" and "We'll Hang Joe Chamberlain on a Sour Apple Tree," and using disgusting expressions against the Queen, the empire, and the army.

While passing Dublin Castle, the occupants of the wagonette waved the Transvaal flag defiantly, whereupon the police stopped the vehicle and seized the flag.

The wagonette, attended by a large body of police, who often cleared the streets, then drove to the roms of the Irish Transvaal Committee, where Michael Davitt, William Redmond, and J. O'Brien were waiting. A meeting of about sixty persons was held, Messrs. Davitt, Redmond, and O'Brien speaking in violent condemnation of the war and of Mr. Chamberlain, and declaring that the latter's visit to Ireland at such a moment was proof of his callous nature. The speakers urged that, should an opportunity occur, Dubliners ought to show their detestation of the Colonial Secretary in unmistakable fashion.

Mr. Davitt said: "All Irishmen rejoice in the triumphs of the Boers. No power in Europe would now fear Great Britain, except, perhaps, the Prince of Monaco." Mr. Redmond said: "Mr. Chamberlain deserves not doctors, but executioners."

Ultimately a resolution, proposed by Mr. Davitt, was carried, denouncing the war, and calling upon the powers, particularly the United States, to take steps to insure the independence of the Boer Republic.

While Maud Gonne was speaking, somebody shouted a reference to the Phoenix Park murders. The Chairman and Dr. Davitt warmly protested, however, that no violence should be shown.

The meeting closed amid tremendous cheers evoked by a rumor that Ladysmith had fallen. Maud Gonne and Mr. Connolly drove off with the intention of holding open-air meeting, but the police arrested Mr. Connolly.

IRISHMEN DENOUNCED ENGLAND.

Sympathy with the Boers Expressed at Two Meetings.

The United Irish-American Societies met last night in Fernando's Hall, Third Avenue and Fiftieth Street. The larger part of the evening was devoted to a discussion of the South African war. Michael J. Jennings presided. Many speeches were made and England was denounced with all the force that the orators could command.

The delegates then unanimously adopted a resolution in which England was denounced as the "hereditary enemy of representative government," and it was declared that "her war is one of lust for territory and utterly without justification, and the Boers deserve and merit the support of all free men and particularly of all Americans." The Chairman was instructed to appoint a committee to engage either the Grand Central Palace or Madison Square Garden for a mass meeting to denounce England.

While this meeting was in progress a similar one was being held by the Irish National Club, at 320 West Fifty-ninth Street. Edward O'Flaherty was Chairman of this meeting, and made a speech in favor of the Boers. After several more speeches denouncing England had been made the following telegram was sent to Representative William Sulzer:

"Irish National Club congratulates you on Boer resolution. Patriotic work of this kind will knock the bottom out of the Anglo-American lunacy craze and save our Republic for the accomplishment of her mission."

VOLUNTEERS FROM UNITED STATES.

Two Offers to Raise Regiments Here Sent to Canadian Minister.

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, Ontario, Dec. 17.—Two offers to raise regiments in the United States for service in South Africa have been received by Dr. Borden, Minister of Militia. One offer is from New York State and the other from Idaho. The names of the parties making the offers are withheld, but they are both Canadians, the former being at one time a member of the old Grand Trunk Rifle Brigade, but is now a prominent manufacturer in the United States.

A telegram was also received this afternoon by the Minister from Charles George Douglas Roberts, author and poet, now in New York, offering his services if a Canadian contingent is sent.

Farewell Banquet for Maine Fund.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—The farewell banquet at Carlton Hotel last evening in aid of the fund for the American hospital ship Maine realized £2,000 ($10,000). Among those present were the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, the Marquis of Lorne, United States Ambassador Choate and Mrs. Choate, Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, Lady Randolph Churchill, Mrs. Arthur Paget, Count Deyn, the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador, and Baron de Stael, the Russian Ambassador Baron de Staal, the Russian Ambassador; Sir Henry Drummond Wolff, British Ambassador to Spain; Prince Domidoff, Princess von Hatzfeldt, the members of the Maine Committee, and the doctors. After the banquet a concert was given by American artistes.

Died from Reading War News.

TORONTO, Ontario, Dec. 17.—Edmund Morris, General Inspector of the Ontario Bank, and widely known in banking circles, died suddenly of heart failure this afternoon. His son is an officer in Gen. Buller's army in South Africa, and Mr. Morris was attacked shortly after reading the latest war bulletins posted at the newspaper offices.

GEN. ROBERTS'S CAREER.

Sir Frederick Sleigh Roberts, First Baron Roberts of Kandahar and Waterford, Victoria Cross, Knight of the Order of St. Patrick, Grand Commander of the Bath, and the holder of many other orders and decorations, is known to Tommy Atkins—as readers of Kipling are aware—just as "Bobs." And, as a matter of fact, this sobriquet he considers as high an honor as any of the others, for it means that he has endeared himself to his men, that they trust him, and are proud to serve under him.

Gen. Roberts was born at Cawnpore, India, Sept. 30, 1832. He was a younger son of Gen. Sir Abraham Roberts, and was destined for the army almost from his birth. He was educated at Eton, then at the Royal Military College at Sandhurst, and afterward at Addiscombe, the training school of the East India Company. He was only nineteen years old when he entered the Bengal Artillery as a Lieutenant, and went to Hindustan to serve the company. In those days he was associated with such men as Outram, Havelock, Nicholson, and the Lawrences, and worked under them, unknown to fame, until the Indian mutiny. Then he received enough experience of hard fighting to serve the average soldier for a lifetime. He was at first one of Nicholson's staff officers, at the head of the Punjab movable column. Then he went to Delhi, on the artillery staff, and afterward was with Sir Colin Campbell at the relief of Lucknow.

When the relieving army got close to the rebel lines outside Lucknow, Sir Colin, wishing to let Outram know of his progress, wanted a flag raised on the mess house. Within plain view of the mutineers Lieut. Roberts climbed to the top of the building, and, amid a rain of shot, raised the flag on the turret nearest to the foe. It was shot away, and he replaced it. Again it was shot away, and he raised it again. But it was not for this deed that Roberts won his Victoria Cross. That was done at Khodagunge Jan. 2, 1858. He saw in the distance two sepoys going away with a standard. Putting spurs to his horse, he overtook them. They turned and presented their muskets at him, and one of the men pulled the trigger. It snapped, missing fire, and the sepoy was cut down by Roberts's sword. The other mutineer rode away, and the young Lieutenant brought the standard back to camp. The same day he rescued a wounded comrade under almost similar circumstances.

In the years that followed the mutiny Roberts saw almost continual service. He was at Umbeyla, in the frontier campaign, in 1863; in 1867 he had charge of the embarkation of the force for the Abyssinian campaign. In 1871 and 1872 he was the senior staff officer in the Lushai campaign, and from 1875 to 1878 he was Quartermaster General. All his promotions were "for merit."

It was toward the end of 1878 that the great opportunity of Gen. Roberts's career came to him. The Ameer of Afghanistan rebelled against the authority of Great Britain, and Roberts was sent at the head of the army to subdue him. He carried the enemy's stronghold at Peiwar Kotal with a splendid rush at odds of almost ten to 1. The next year the news of Sir Louis Cavagnari's murder in Kabul horrified all England, and Roberts was called upon to lead another avenging force. With 6,000 men he cut his way straight through the hostile land, and in thirty days placed the British flag above the citadel of Kabul, after routing the Afghan Army, which outnumbered the British by twelve to one. Then, after reinforcements had been sent to him he began one of the most famous marches in history—over towering mountain ranges and through hostile territory, straight from Kabul to Kandahar—300 miles in twenty days. At the end of the march he crushed Ayoob Khan, and the whole empire rang with the praises of the man who a few months before had been almost unknown.

Since then Roberts has advanced, slowly and always "for merit," to the position of Commander in Chief of the forces in Ireland. He was put in command in Madras, then in command of the army in Burmah, and then was made Commander in Chief of the British Army in India. In the last-named capacity he did work the value of which only soldiers can appreciate properly. He fortified the northern frontier of Hindustan with a chain of fortresses from end to end; he made both the British and native troops far more effective than ever before; he obtained better rations for the men, and he secured better equipments.

It is for this quiet work of organization that Roberts is known to the rank and file as "Bobs," and it is doubtless because of his ability in this direction he has been selected to drag victory out of defeat in South Africa.

Lord Kitchener's Record.

The exploit which gave Lord Kitchener his peerage is of recent date, and the details of the story of the campaign against the Soudanese dervishes of last year are still familiar. When the war with the Boers broke out he is said to have urgently requested the War Office to allow him to take part in it, but he was not successful.

Horatio Herbert Kitchener, first Baron Kitchener of Khartoum, was born in 1850. He is the eldest son of the late Lieut. Col. H. H. Kitchener, and was educated at the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich. He entered the Royal Engineers in 1871, and first obtained notice for his management of the Egyptian Cavalry in the campaigns of the early eighties. In 1890 he was appointed Sirdar of the Egyptian Army.

EXTENT OF BOERS' PREPARATIONS.

M. de Long, the manager of the dynamite factory at Modderfontein, in the Transvaal, has just returned to France, and has been interviewed by the representatives of several of the Paris journals. He says that the British Government can have had no idea of the vast extent of the preparations that the Boers have been quietly making for years, with the realization that another struggle with the full force of Great Britain was inevitable. Even should the Boers be driven out of Natal, he points out, no British Army could ever hope to enter the Transvaal and survive.

Since the war began, he says, heavy artillery that had been carefully stored away has been brought forth. He asserts that the forts at Pretoria and Johannesburg are as strong as any fortresses in the world, and have, within the last month, been rendered absolutely impregnable, while Edelberg alone could hold its own with 25 men against 10,000 assailants, particularly in the rainy season, which has just begun, causing unfordable streams suddenly to spring into existence.

M. de Long states that there are about 6,000 well-trained German volunteers in the Boer Army, who have not yet been allowed to go to the front. He adds that the Governments of the Boer Republics are showing a great economy of strength, and have not yet used a third of their military resources.

AGAIN PLEADS FOR BOERS.

At the patriotic service which was held yesterday afternoon by the Rev. Madison C. Peters, Chaplin of the Ninth Regiment, in the armory in West Fourteenth Street, Gen. James R. O'Beirne, the unrecognized representative of the Transvaal Republic in the United States, delivered a long address on the moral courage of the Christian soldier.

He said that at the crucial moment in battle the wise commander always relies on the man of moral courage, who, satisfied that he is doing his duty, will hold his ground and await the order to charge.

Gen. O'Beirne took the opportunity to call the attention of his hearers to the rude and quaint heroes who are to-day, he said, fighting the flower of a great power so successfully. Although they are not trained soldiers, Gen. O'Beirne said, the Boers are possessed of the same moral courage that inspired the Revolutionary Fathers who likewise vanquished the same mighty force, and by so doing established this Republic.

BRITISH OFFICERS HERE.

Major J. Fowle of the Twenty-first Lancers of the British Army, with Private W. H. Rowlatt, arrived here yesterday on the steamer Etruria en route for New Orleans. The Major said that he came to supervise the shipment of 900 mules from New Orleans to Cape Town. Both the Major and the private who accompanied him were with Kitchener in the battle of Omdurman, their squadron losing 1 officer and 1 private and 39 wounded.

Private Rowlatt, describing the use of the lance, said that in the battle of Omdurman he had killed some ten men. He had himself been wounded by having his arm nearly severed by a scimitar.

Regarding the present war the Major declined to talk. Another officer abroad, who did not wish to have his name used, said that one of the difficulties encountered by the British was the poor condition of their horses after the long voyage in transports. One of the mistakes made had been the tardiness in throwing troops into Cape Colony, but the Government had followed the course which has been so disastrous because it was feared that the sending of large forces of troops before hostilities began would disturb conditions in Cape Colony.

WAR IN PLYMOUTH CHURCH.

The war of shot and shell in South Africa was indirectly the cause of a lively war of words yesterday morning in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. The verbal belligerents were Deacon S. V. White and Thomas O. Hague, the unsuccessful Democratic candidate for the Assembly in the First District of Brooklyn in the recent election.

Mr. Hague lately came to the conclusion that Plymouth Church should take some action expressing its disapproval of the South African war, and urging friendly mediation in the trouble. Inspired with this thought Mr. Hague prepared a resolution to be cabled by Plymouth Church to the City Temple Church of London, the City Queen's Church of Wolverhampton, and the leading Congregational Church of Liverpool. The resolution was as follows:

"Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, tenders fraternal feelings of deep sympathy with the bereaved families of England, and will co-operate in any movement of Congregational Church action to end the war immediately by friendly mediation."

Armed with this resolution, Mr. Hague went to church yesterday morning, it being his intention to introduce it for adoption. In the parlor of the church he met Deacon White, and to him he read the resolution. Mr. White heard him with every indication of disapproval.

"This is not a proper time to present anything like this," he said, when Mr. Hague had concluded. "You ought to give notice before introducing such a resolution."

"Well, I'm going to present it now," Mr. Hague replied somewhat defiantly.

"You won't get a Corporal's guard to vote for it if you do," said Mr. White. "It would be impossible to get it through. It is not a proper resolution, anyhow."

"I don't see why not," returned Mr. Hague, warming up. "Plymouth Church took similar action in the Venezuelan dispute."

"That was carried unanimously," retorted Mr. White. "It was the proper thing to do. Plymouth called upon the churches in Great Britain to affiliate with her in preventing hostilities. It would be impossible to get any one in Plymouth to stand for anything that would seem like censure. The men who stood as a bulwark in the interests of this country a little over a year ago are the same men who are guiding Great Britain in her present troubles."

Here Mr. Hague interfected something about Germany, but Mr. White would not let him finish.

"Germany has nothing to do with it," he said. "Salisbury was Premier in the time of our trouble, and he is Premier now. In our difficulty with Spain, Great Britain was the nation which, more than any other, prevented other powers from forming an alliance against us."

At this stage of the dispute the Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, the pastor, entered the parlor. Mr. Hague turned to him with the resolution. Dr. Hillis looked it through and then said very seriously:

"I do not think that this is a proper thing to present to Plymouth Church at this time. I trust that you will not undertake to do so."

Mr. Hague, very much nettled, apparently, turned again to Mr. White. "This church," he said, warmly, "is run by a lot of little lawyers and others, and I'm going to get out."

"You can't go too soon for me," returned Mr. White, with equal warmth.

Mr. Hague then started to leave the parlor. Turning, he sent back this parting shot:

"This church is run by a clique of lawyers who want to do all the talking. They are dominated by a spirit of bloodthirstiness, and lack the spirit of Christ."

Then Mr. Hague left the church and returned to the Hotel St. George, where he lives, without introducing the resolution.

There were a number of members of the church present in the parlor while the dispute was going on, and it excited a great deal of comment in and out of the church during the day. Mr. Hague was still somewhat ruffled over the affair when seen last evening.

"The proposition," he said, referring to the resolution, "was spurned with contumely and reproach, and in language out of keeping with Christian charity and forbearance. Thus blessed are the peacemakers by the powers that be of Plymouth Church."

Mr. Hague said he did not intend to leave the church.

DR. SAVAGE DEFENDS BRITISH.

The Rev. Dr. Minot J. Savage, preaching in the Church of the Messiah yesterday, defended Great Britain's course in South Africa. He said in part:

"There is not a spot on earth to-day where Great Britain's foot is placed that would not be unspeakably worse to-morrow if that foot were lifted and taken away. Not one step has Great Britain taken around the world that has not meant the uplifting of humanity, finer and higher religion, education, industrial advance, opportunity for liberty, just as fast as the people were fit for it, and unspeakable blessing to all involved. Where, then, should our sympathies be? At first blush, whatever the problem that may arise, should they not be with Great Britain?"

Dr. Savage then briefly reviewed the case of the Boers. He said the Boers have no exclusive right to the gold mines in their country, despite the fact that they were there first. "If a people be in possession of a certain country, are their rights unlimited?" he asked. "Never. The concession would be monstrous, and it has never been admitted since the beginning of human sanity. I believe that at every point the British have been right.

"I believe that a disaster to Great Britain would be the greatest calamity that could be conceived next to the destruction of our own Republic. She is fighting against Russia in China for what? English advantages? No, the advantage of civilization, for open ports, liberty, to keep the Czar from absorbing China—the England of the East—for the sake of the world.

"I believe the worst came to worst and there was a war between Russia and Great Britain in the East for the two world ideals which they represent, I believe America would owe it as the highest duty to God to place every ship, every gun, every dollar she possesses at the back of and beside Great Britain."

This remark caused a remarkable demonstration. The members of the congregation almost unanimously applauded the sentiment.

"God grant that there may be no meddling on the part of France or Russia until Great Britain settles the problem which she has on her hands," he continued. "But did I wield the power of thousands and such meddling came I would say, 'Hands off!' to any power on the globe. Let us remember that for world purposes there is no such thing as England and America—England and America are one at heart, one in religion, one in interest, one in ideals, one in hopes, and we must be one in either defeat or victory."

NEWS OF THE RAILROADS.

THE SEABOARD CONSOLIDATION.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 17.—In an interview to-day John Skelton Williams, President of the Seaboard Air Line, gave a résumé of the opposition of Thomas F. Ryan to the consolidation into the Greater Seaboard Company of the various Southern railways. Among other things, Mr. Williams said:

"It may be proper at this time, in view of certain allegations which have been published by Mr. Ryan's attorneys recently, to state exactly what his interest is in the Seaboard system. He owns less than 20 per cent. of the capital stock of one of the eighteen roads in the system, and this road is less than eighty miles long, out of a total mileage in the system of more than 2,500 miles. This road does not control directly or indirectly any other road in the system, with the exception of a small lumber line in North Carolina, about thirty miles long. He has a few shares here and there, is some of the other roads, but the total value of his holdings of the shares in the other roads is less than $5,000.

"Taking all the securities which he holds in the entire Seaboard system at their market value, it would represent less than 3 per cent. of the actual value of the Seaboard system, based on the present market value of its securities, or scarcely 1 per cent. of the value of the three systems which it now proposes to consolidate into the Greater Seaboard."

President Williams stated that he believed that consolidation would be an accomplished fact within a few weeks, and that all matters tending toward that end were being rapidly disposed of.

CASH GIRLS AND THEIR WORK.

Delegates of the Central Federated Union complained yesterday that cash girls in department and dry goods stores were being overworked during the holiday season, and that they often were kept at their work until 10 o'clock at night. A delegate suggested that a committee be sent to remonstrate with the proprietors of those stores; another delegate advised that the girls be organized into a union, and a third advised that the Factory Inspectors' attention be called to the matter.

Delegate Barondess said he was sure that the Factory Inspectors would not do anything in the matter, as they were controlled by the Republican machine. As to organizing the children, Delegate Barondess said such a question was absurd. He was in favor of taking up the cause of the girls, and of appointing committees to call on the merchants and ask them to lighten their work.

Delegate Timothy Healy of the eccentric firemen said that some time ago he had organized a secret union of dry goods salesmen, but that the employers discovered the fact and took measures against the leaders.

The meeting appointed a committee to visit dry goods merchants and ask them to lighten the work of the cash girls.

A communication was received from the Lithographers' Protective and Benevolent Association, which wanted a certain firm that manufactured children's building blocks boycotted.

"I move that every delegate who buys those blocks for Christmas presents for his children be fined $10," said Delegate Greef of the carpenters.

"And I amend that a committee be appointed to visit the house of every delegate to see whether he has bought any boycotted blocks," said another delegate.

A committee was appointed to investigate the matter.

Delegate Cowen of the amalgamated engineers said that recently eighty men had been brought over in the steamer St. Louis in the guise of Russian sailors. These people, however, said Delegate Cowen, were machinists, and they were put to work in the Cramps' shipyards in Philadelphia in the places of strikers.

C. A. A. I. L. Industrial Conference.

The Church Association for the Advancement of the Interests of Labor has issued a call for an industrial conference, to be held in Washington, D. C., on February 18, 19, and 20, to discuss matters of interest to workingmen. All trades unions have been invited to send delegates.

William H. Carpenter Dead.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 17.—William H. Carpenter, author, poet, and editor, died at his home in this city to-day, aged eighty-six years. He was born in England, but came to this city nearly seventy years ago. Mr. Carpenter's literary career covered a period of over sixty years. Besides publishing a number of volumes of prose and poetry, Mr. Carpenter contributed largely to various magazines.

ALARM FOR STEAMBOAT FIRE.

Police, Firemen, Hospitals, and Bronx Residents Victims of a Hastily Formed Opinion.

A stranger in town who might have wandered into 300 Mulberry Street just after dark last night would never have believed he was in the famous Police Headquarters of the metropolis. The few men in uniform and their listless manner were more in keeping with some small station.

If he were fortunate enough to wait a moment, however, he would have witnessed a remarkable metamorphosis. Suddenly the telephone bell began to ring. Not the ordinary, every-day ring indicating that some Sergeant wanted to tell that "John Smith, thirty years old, homeless," had been found by the wayside full of the liquid that intoxicates and had been gathered in. It was not that kind of a ring But rather a buzz and a series of burrs that suggested accidental crossing of telephone wires with a trolley feeder. A policeman ran to the 'phone and taking the ear trumpet, heard this:

"Hello! Hello! Police Headquarters?" in a voice that betrayed great excitement.

"Yes, what's the matter?"

"This is Queens! Queens Borough! Borough of Queens!" and the man in Queens was so excited by this time that the other policemen at the Headquarters' end of the 'phone could hear his voice as it gurgled and spurged out of that part of the trumpet which was not covered by the operator's fairly large ear.

"Seventy-sixth Precinct, Queens!"

"Yes, but what is wrong?" asked the operator losing patience.

"Steamboat on fire. Hundreds people drowning. In the Sound off Oak Point. Send reserves from—," but the operator waited no more. Quickly he reported to his superior officer the purport of the message. As quickly as the electric fluid could flash the news over the wires Capt. Wiegand, in the Morrisania Station, and Sergt. Reilly, in the Alexander Avenue Station, received a command to get all their reserves to the scene instanter. Reporters sent the news to their respective papers, and soon newspapermen by the dozen were flying uptown.

At Headquarters everything was activity. Hospitals were called up and told to hold themselves in readiness for the scores of victims that were coming to them, and at the Morgue preparations were made to receive the bodies which were promised forthwith.

The Harlem Hospital and the Fordham Hospital at once sent their available ambulances to the foot of East One Hundred and Forty-ninth Street, or Oak Point, near where the steamboat was supposed to be burning.

In the Morrisania and Alexander Avenue Stations the policemen had just come in after their tour to stay for several hours on reserve. It had been raining, and they were soaked to the skin. But the danger they believed waiting for hundreds of fellow-creatures appealed to them, and to a man they piled into the patrol wagons talking only of what method of rescue they would undertake when they reached the Sound shore.

"It's the worst time of the year," said one. "Most of the boats are tied up for the Winter, and it's too darned far and the water's too cold to swim for it." In this all agreed. But somehow they expected in some way to do something, and knowing that "New York expects every policeman to do his duty," they went forward.

Some small boy stood near the Alexander Avenue Station as he saw the policemen pile out and into the patrol wagon. With the small boy's ready wit he caught enough to tell him what was wrong, and in his shrill treble he ran up One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Street calling the news to other small boys who likewise ran. It was only a few minutes until the clanging of the patrol wagons and the rushing of ambulances added to the alarm started by the aforesaid small boy, and through East One Hundred and Thirty-eighth and parallel streets there rushed a multitude to the scene of the accident.

The patrol wagons from the two stations came together in the Southern Boulevard. Sure enough there was the fire. Tongues of flame leaped skyward, and volumes of dense black smoke were plainly visible.

"She's close in shore," said the driver of the Morrisania wagon. "Maybe we'll be able to do something, anyhow."

"Listen, there's somebody calling for help!" said another policeman.

By this time the fire engines from the nearest fire houses were added to the procession. All turned into One Hundred and Forty-ninth Street and made good progress until after the New York and New Haven Railroad tracks were crossed. Beyond that progress was slow and dangerous. The streets in that part of the city are all laid out, wide and regular—on the map. In reality they are mere lanes, which are nothing but series after series of wallows and chuck holes.

After half an hour's plunging the patrol wagons got as far as they could, and back of them were stalled the engines—all several hundred feet from the shore. The policemen tumbled out and through the deep mud and mire made their way to the shore. The firemen laid hose after much hard work.

No steamboat, not even a rowboat, was on fire. No lives were imperiled at all. But on the edge of the water they found an old and long-since abandoned boathouse fast disappearing in the flames.

OLD ARMY MULE EXECUTED.

WILLETS POINT, L. I., Dec. 17.—Through an order of the War Department Jack, the old army mule, known to every visitor at the army post here for some years, was executed yesterday.

Jack was about thirty-five years old, and had a good record. For many years he was used in the service, and was finally turned over to the engineers who had charge of the work of removing the rocks in the Hell Gate Channel. For three years Jack worked underground, drawing in and out the cars of stone and powder.

When Hell Gate was blown up he was turned over to the post here, and it was almost a year before anybody could drive him. Jack could not get used to the light, and many a private who thought he knew how to conquer him came to grief after a short trial. At last the mule became accustomed to daylight and performed his labor faithfully until three years ago, when age showed itself and he had to be retired. The Government finally got tired of feeding Jack, after waiting three years for him to die a natural death.

Jack was yesterday placed in charge of some privates, who formed in line and marched slowly to the beach. Once there Private Mason spoke a few encouraging words, and then led the mule to a pile of wood. Placing a rifle to the animal's head Mason pulled the trigger, and the career of the mule was ended. The body fell on the wood. A match was applied, and wood and Jack burned together.

REVISION OF CUSTOMS LAWS.

Merchants' Association's Committee to Meet—Appraiser's Ruling Disputed.

The general committee appointed by the Merchants' Association of this city at the suggestion of President McKinley to consider a revision of the United States customs laws, will meet Wednesday afternoon at the rooms of the association to act upon the report of the Executive Committee. This report has been sent to all members of the general committee, and so far approving letters have been received from John Pitcairn, President of the Pittsburg Plate Glass Company; John N. Carpender, President of the Norfolk and New Brunswick Hosiery Company; Thomas B. Meehan of Thomas Meehan & Sons, Germantown; W. S. Frye, President of the New England Tobacco Growers' Association; Edward P. Mason, President of the Mason & Hamil Company of Boston; John H. Hall, Treasurer and General Manager of the Colts Patent Firearms Manufacturing Company of Hartford, and others.

The meeting, originally set for this afternoon, is postponed to give place to a hearing of the committee at the Treasury Department at Washington on its protest against a recent ruling of Appraiser Wakeman, which adds a duty of 2 cents per square yard on a large number of cotton fabrics. In this protest the committee was joined by a number of importers of this and other cities, and by a number of domestic dealers, who have made large contracts for future delivery under the old interpretation of the schedule.

The Executive Committee of the association has also addressed a letter to Appraiser Wakeman asking that he name representatives from among the domestic manufacturers and importers to attend an informal conference with the Appraisers of the Ports of Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, called by him to discuss the classification of cotton fabrics, and to assure a uniform appraisement of such goods at all ports. No date has yet been set for this conference.

stops a cough in a minute

The best $5 doctor in practice cannot do more for a cough.

Dean's mentholated drops are a quick, certain relief; and for scientific reasons they are also the most practical curative.

The throat tickle feeds the continuous cough. From continuous coughing the bronchial tubes may become ulcerated. That is the danger to be avoided.

The wisest preventive is Dean's cough drops—the simplest, yet surest. It is a vigorous and pure mentholation which centers its power upon the tickling spot and stops it. Though powerful it is extremely pleasant.

Official Statement Made on Behalf of the Empire to Offset False Assertions Current.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17.—M. Routkowsky, the agent of the Ministry of Finances of Russia, in Washington, in a communication which has received the approval of the Russian Ambassador, complains of the attempts which he says were made in Europe recently to create in this country the impression that the relations between the Governments of Japan and Russia were strained. "Immediately after these statements has been authoritatively denied by the Russian Ambassador and the Japanese Minister here," says M. Routkowsky, "other sensational rumors were started, presumably at Berlin, and directed against the credit of the Russian Empire. These were followed by libels directed against the eminent statesmen to whose care was intrusted that credit, and an appeal made to Japan, in an article on Russian finances, to attack that country before her trans-Siberian railroad could be completed."

M. Routkowsky adds that in view of the fact that all of these false rumors and misstatements, if not exposed, might leave among capitalists and financiers in this country an erroneous impression, he has decided to give to the press some figures on the subject. These figures show that during the twelve years from 1887 to 1898 the ordinary revenues of the Russian Government steadily increased from 820,000,000 rubles in 1887 to 1,584,000,000 rubles in 1898, and that during the whole of that time, with the exception of two years (1887 and 1891) the expenses were considerably less than the receipts, the surplus for the twelve years amounting to 790,000,000 rubles. For the same twelve years the extraordinary revenues and expenses of the Government make a total of the former of 1,126,000,600, and of the latter of 2,075,000,000 rubles. The items in the extraordinary revenues are shown to have been: Loans, 941,000,000 rubles; reimbursement of debts to the Government of private railroads, 111,000,000 rubles; all other, 74,000,000 rubles.

The items of the extraordinary expenses during the same period were: Purchases of high-rate bonds and payment of various debts, 1,035,000,000 rubles; construction of new State railroads, including trans-Siberian road, 653,000,000 rubles; relief of the distressed population during famine of 1891, 161,000,000 rubles; increase of capital of Imperial State Bank, 43,000,000 rubles; warships, 90,000,000 rubles; all other expenses, 93,000,000 rubles. In January, 1887, the national debt was 4,357,000,000 rubles, and Dec. 31, 1898, it was 6,109,000,000 rubles. This increase, it is stated, was due partly to the refunding of high rate loans in 5 bonds at a low rate, but principally to the purchase of many railroads by the Government, which are earning large returns on the money invested.

The deposits of the people in the savings banks on Jan. 1, 1887, are shown to have amounted to 44,000,000 rubles, while on June 1, 1899, they had increased to 567,000,000 rubles.

THE BATTLE WITH THE SLUMS.

Jacob A. Riis Tells Young Men to be Reformers and Praises the Work of Gov. Roosevelt.

Jacob A. Riis delivered an illustrated lecture yesterday afternoon to a large audience of young men at the West Side Young Men's Christian Association upon the topic, "The Battle with the Slums." Verbally and by stereopticon views Mr. Riis pointed out the characteristics of the slums in this city as they were before reform touched them, as they are now, and as it is hoped to make them. He made frequent references to Gov. Roosevelt, and gave him much credit for results that had been accomplished. He contrasted old tenements with modern ones, and congested quarters of the city with those where parks and playgrounds have been provided.

Mr. Riis took an optimistic view of present conditions, saying what when schools, playgrounds, parks, swimming baths, and gymnasiums were built for the youth of the east side it was safe to say that the millennium was near. "Our century has been described as the century of great inventions," he said. "I would not characterize it as such, but as the century in which the public conscience awoke."

In speaking of the difficulties met with in obtaining parks for congested portions of the city, principally through the failure of officials to keep their promises, he said: "But in Albany to-day there is a man who was elected on a pledge, and he is keeping the pledge. The loud applause which greeted this allusion to the Governor pleased Mr. Riis, and he said: "You're all right. Anybody that claps like that for 'Teddy' is all right. I was talking with the Governor the other day about his early days in politics and he said to me, 'I wanted to be one of the kind that counts.'

"Don't be afraid of being called cranks," said Mr. Riis, in admonishing his hearers to be reformers. "The world is simply aching for a man that will do the right without flinching. It is good to be a hero or a great General, but what the world is pining for just now is men that have the courage to do right. And what is more, believe in man. That is one of the secrets of Roosevelt's success. People say he is too confiding, but he is not. He looks for the good in men, and he brings it out. It was so with the corrupt police force we had. He saw the good in the men, and it came out."

He made other references to Gov. Roosevelt, displayed his picture, and quoted him as saying: "It is better to be faithful than famous."

SPANISH WAR VETERANS.

Thomas L. Moore Elected Commander of the Association.

The Spanish War Veterans' Association of this city held its first annual election of officers at the headquarters, 2,994 Third Avenue, Saturday night. The officers chosen are: Commander—Thomas L. Moore; Vice Commander—Joseph B. McTeigue; Adjutant—James F. Kennedy; Quartermaster—L. W. Peters; Surgeon—Dr. R. P. Froelich; Chaplain—A. Harlow; Officer of the Day—Frank Schaller; Officer of the Guard—T. F. Dooley; Sergeant Major—C. M. Atwood; Quartermaster Sergeant—J. F. Bissinger.

In order that the headquarters might be as centrally located as possible, it was voted that until a suitable house can be secured the headquarters be removed to lodge rooms in the Harlem Lyceum, at One Hundred and Seventh Street and Third Avenue. The first meeting of the veterans at the new headquarters will take place on Jan. 6, when the officers will be formally installed, and the new ritual of the organization put in practice.

IN THE STATE PENITENTIARIES.

The Number of Prisoners Is Steadily on the Decrease.

ALBANY, Dec. 17.—According to the annual statistical reports filed with the State Prison Commission the total number of prisoners confined in the prisons, penitentiaries, reformatories, houses of refuge, and county jails of the State is steadily on the decrease, and especially is this fact noticeable in the penitentiaries.

Where, in 1895, there were 4,608 prisoners confined in our penitentiaries and 2,824 in 1897, the population in these institutions during the past year, ended Oct. 1, shows a record of 2,221, a decrease of over 600. In every penitentiary, except in New York County, there is a decrease, and this exception shows but a slight increase of 36 over last year's population.

SHOT HIS PROTECTOR.

Detective Employed to Guard a Young Man Is Killed by His Charge.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 17.—There was a sensational murder to-day at the residence of E. Alexander Ferguson, on Dayton Street. Dudley Ferguson, son of E. A. Ferguson, has been afflicted with melancholy on account of failing to pass an examination recently for admission to the bar.

The family employed Gus Meehan, a well-known detective, to "shadow" young Ferguson, more for the protection of the young man than anything else. When the detective appeared to-day young Ferguson shot him, and Meehan soon died. Dudley Ferguson was arrested. E. A. Ferguson is one of the most prominent attorneys here. He is the author of the act under which the Cincinnati Southern Railway was built, and he has been the counsel and Trustee of that road. He was also a promoter of other enterprises.

Four Vessels for the Morgan Line.

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., Dec. 17.—A contract for the construction of four new freight and passenger vessels for the Morgan Line has been awarded to the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company. The total cost is to be $2,400,000.

CARDINAL GIBBONS EXPLAINS.

Praised John Boyle O'Reilly Without Knowledge of His Career—English Catholics May Welcome Him.

An end has apparently been put to the discord among English Catholics in their attitude toward Cardinal Gibbons, who has been asked by Cardinal Vaughan to deliver the sermon at the dedication next year of the new cathedral at Westminster, by the Baltimore prelate's explanatory letter published in the last issue of The London Tablet.

The trouble arose over a eulogistic introduction written nine years ago by Cardinal Gibbons to "The Life and Writings of John Boyle O'Reilly." W. E. H. Lecky, the English historian, in a recently published book, severely criticised the Cardinal for this introduction, declaring that O'Reilly, being a sworn Fenian, entered a regiment of Hussars, assumed the uniform of the Queen, and took the oath of allegiance for the express purpose of betraying his trust and seducing the soldiers of his regiment."

This criticism of the Cardinal was approved by an English Catholic, who, writing anonymously to The London Times, declared that under such circumstances the Baltimore prelate could not be welcomed by English Catholics if he accepted Cardinal Vaughan's invitation.

In his letter to The Tablet Cardinal Gibbons says:

"I feel it due to myself and the interests of truth to declare that till I read Mr. Lecky's criticism I did not know that Mr. O'Reilly had ever been a Fenian, or a British soldier, or that he had tried to seduce other soldiers from their allegiance. In fact, up to this moment I have never read a line of the biography for which I wrote the introduction."

The Cardinal declares that he know Mr. O'Reilly "only as a quiet, unobtrusive gentleman of conservative views, whose ardent temperament was mellowed by time and experience; as an exemplary husband and father, as a devoted Christian, who valiantly defended Catholic principles," and as a man who, by his literary talents, enjoyed the good-will and society of such writers as Holmes, Whittier, and Lowell.

In explanation of his having written the introduction to Mr. O'Reilly's memoirs without having been familiar with his career, the Cardinal says: "Without presuming to hold up such a course as an example to others, I must confess that this was not the first time I had communicated a preface to a book without even having seen the work itself, relying on the integrity and the judgment of the author. And I would not be surprised if Mr. Lecky himself, in his large experience, has heard of busy writers who have done likewise."

Commenting editorially on Cardinal Gibbons's letter, The Tablet says:

"The Cardinal's explanation is simble and ample. He was not aware that Mr. O'Reilly had ever been a Fenian, and knew nothing of the details of the charge upon which he was condemned in an English court of justice. And surely, if that had been otherwise, time might have been allowed to bring forgiveness for an offense committed so long ago, and so nobly atoned for."

Referring to the intimation that the Cardinal would be received coldly, The Tablet says: "Let him come and try; we will answer for his welcome."

SUITS OVER SCHAEFER ESTATE.

Albert Schaefer Seeks to Enforce Payment of a Compromise Sum.

No fewer than three lawsuits have grown out of the will of Frederick C. Schaefer, who was a member of the F. & M. Schaefer Brewing Company, and who died May 20, 1897, leaving an estate whose exact value has yet to be determined, but which is estimated to amount to nearly $1,500,000. This was originally bequeathed, in equal parts, to his three sons, Edward C., George G., and Albert Schaefer, and two of his three daughters, Mrs. George H. Chatillon and Mrs. Josephine N. Elcke. The other daughter is Baroness Rose K. von Burtenbach, who resides in Germany. She received only a small legacy under the will, moneys and property equivalent to her share in the estate, including a dower of about $25,000, having been paid to her during her father's lifetime. By a codicil to his will, made shortly before he died, however, Mr. Schaefer left only the income from a fifth of the estate to Albert Schaefer, the principal, on his death, to go to his children, if he had any, and in the contrary event, to revert to the residuary estate. Edward C. Schaefer, George G. Schaefer, and George H. Chatillon were named as executors.

Albert Schaefer, who is a bachelor, and in delicate health, filed, when the will was presented for probate, a petition alleging undue influence. Subsequently a compromise was reached, and he agreed to make no objection to the probate in consideration of the payment of a sum of $35,000. He alleges that he has received no part of this sum, and a suit is pending in the Supreme Court to enforce a settlement It probably will be reached next month.

Mr. Schaefer has also brought suit in the Surrogates' Court for a compulsory accounting by the executors. This action has been brought under the article of the code which provides that after the expiration of eighteen months any creditor or legatee under a will can compel an executor to render an accounting. This case may come up this week.

The third suit is a purely formal one, brought in the Supreme Court by Edward C. and George G. Schaefer against their fellow-executor, George H. Chatillon, to secure the judgment of this court as to the disposition of Frederick C. Schaefer's stock in a real estate concern, and which is said to be very valuable. Albert Schaefer is equally interested in securing this judgment. This matter is also expected to come up before the end of the year.

In the two other suits Addison Gardner is attorney for Albert Schaefer. The executors are represented by Ashbel P. Fitch. George G. Schaefer, when questioned yesterday refused to discuss the proceedings in any way. "We have decided to say nothing about the matter," he said.

New Steamship El Cid Here.

The steamship El Cid, the last to be completed of the four new Morgan liners built at the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company's yards to replace the vessels sold to the Government during the war, reached this city yesterday fresh from the hands of her builders. She is exactly like the new El Sud, El Norte, and El Rio already in commission. El Cid was named after its predecessor which became the Niotheroy in the Brazilian Navy and is now the Buffalo of the United States Navy.

Miss Zerega Resting Easily.

Walter Eastman, the cab driver who ran over and seriously injured on Saturday Miss Florence Zerega at Thirty-fourth Street and Fifth Avenue, was charged with reckless driving in the Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday, but was remanded until to-morrow morning. Miss Zerega, who is stopping at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel as a guest of her brother, Frederick Zerega, was resting easily last night. Unless unexpected complications set in, she will recover.

New French Liner in Port.

The French Line steamer L'Aquitaine, formerly the Normannia of the Hamburg-American Line, and for a time an auxiliary Spanish naval vessel, arrived yesterday, looking very much like a new craft, after an extensive overhauling. She is commanded by Capt. Poirot, formerly of the steamship La Champagne. The trip was a somewhat tempestuous one, and nearly every one aboard was seasick, even some of the sailors.

$20,000 Fire on Wooster Street.

The seven-story business building at 179 Wooster Street was damaged by fire yesterday afternoon to the extent of $5,000. The Boston Waist Company, which occupies the third and four floors, lost $10,000, and the Improved Sponging and Refinishing Company, which occupied the second floor, rear, lost $5,000, making a total loss of $20,000. The cause of the fire is not known.

KILLED A MAN WITH A STONE.

Three Generations of a Family on Trial for a Murder.

SCRANTON, Penn., Dec. 17.—A murder trial in which three generations of a family were defendants ended to-day with a verdict of manslaughter against Thomas Gallagher, aged twenty-one years, the youngest of the four defendants, and acquittal for his brother, Joseph Gallagher; his mother, Ann Gallagher, and his grandmother, Bridget Dempsey.

The murder for which they were tried was the killing of James Quinn, in Carbondale Township, Aug. 13 last, during a quarrel between the Quinns and the Gallaghers, which began in a dispute between boys. The witnesses were all positive that the fatal wound was caused by a stone thrown by Thomas Gallagher.

Speedway Moving Pictures.

There was a gathering of riders and drivers at the Harlem Music Hall yesterday, who came there upon the inivtation of Messrs. Hurtig & Seamon, to view a series of motograph pictures of the Speedway. The pictures were taken Sunday morning last, when the Speedway was crowded with well-known horsemen. Among the first pictures shown was that of a lively brush between Mrs. Gill, driving Jack, and Alexander Newberger driving Smilax. The pictures will be shown this evening.

Christmas Bounty—And the Wanamaker Store

THE problem for us is: how to get enough beautiful, useful, practical things to supply your demands.

Delivery service is expanded to meet all requirements. Everything sold thus far is sent home,—or packed and ready, if you named a later day for delivery.

Our staff that watches foreign invoices is hurrying in the belated cases; we are even selling such of next spring's goods as are fit for giving.

It is an orderly, well-managed hurry now to have Christmas things ready for Christmas—for, while we have sold to date vastly more than ever before, there are thousands more of you coming to us, depending on this store bountiful. Express time now on everything—not a scramble, but the rapid controlled movement such as sends trains along safely at sixty-five miles an hour.

Half a thousand more helpers than last year—days made longer by hitching on the evening hours, which are the store's glistening times. More electricity, more steam, another elevator to carry boxes in and parcels out.

We are being heartily thanked for giving New York a needed extra store; we have to thank Our Public for the endorsement that is both recompense and goad to still-better storekeeping.

The Holiday Tableaux in the Rotunda are very real—for we see things largely in the light of our own feelings. You will cap this year of 1899 with a Christmas fitting and worthwhile. Our help, our haste, our carefulness, and, withal, our welcome to visitor—sightseer and purchaser.

London Paintings: half-hour exhibits at 10:30, 11:30, 3, 4:30, 8 and 9 o'clock—more pictures than ever at each showing.

The wonderful Madonna can be seen continuously.

THINGS TO GIVE TO MEN

Jules Monard Gold Watches, $125, $130.
Wanamaker Special Gold Watches, made for us in Geneva, $50.
Other watches, starting at $1.75 for some in nickel cases, up to $150 for those of fine gold.
Diamond Rings—same prices as before the African war. But only while present stocks last. Diamond Pins.
Smoking Jackets, Lounging Robes, Bath Robes. We brought many from London.
Suspenders—the mountings will last a life-time. New elastic is cheap.
Smoking Tables. The finest have both the help of many conveniences and music-box. Finest Meerschaum Pipes are $16—cheaper than they used to be.
Slippers—the practical, comfortable sorts.
Traveling Outfits. Furnished bags that hold every creature comfort.
Pocket-Books that are strong enough to withstand swelling.
Books—every fit book is here and such reference books as widen a man and save headaches and worry.
Fur Gloves—finest are $20.

A New Upright Piano Why not? A bijou instrument, 4 ft. 2 in. high, 4 ft. 9 in. long, 2 ft. deep—yet it holds the full 7 1-3 octave Royal action. Snugly built—ideal for boudoir and small rooms. Cased in mahogany or oak. And the price is $175.

By the way, do you know all about this piano store? Fifth floor.

Silk Waists A new lot—fresh and crisp taffeta silk waists in the best shades—some black. Corded all over. The price is $5, though you'd not think $6.50 exorbitant. Second floor.

Parlor Cabinets and Tables The holiday spirit pervades this large field of fine furniture. There have been great preparations here. Furniture of elegance, brought from wherever superiority of product is known, fill almost endless aisles—and plentiful stocks in reserve from which to draw. There's a showing here today of parlor and curio cabinets and fine vernis-martin tables—goods of particular excellence. Over 100 styles—and at least half of these priced a third to a half less than regularly. Some hints of savings follow:

Vernis-martin Curio Cabinets at $12 that sell regularly at $24, at $13 instead of $27, at $17 instead of $34, at $20 instead of $48. And some of mahogany at $28 that sell regularly today at $56. A few at $50 that were $140.
Vernis-martin Parlor Tables at $9, though regularly $18, at $12 instead of $24, and so on.
Vernis-martin Screens at $16, $40 and $44 that are regularly just double.
Then there's a miscellaneous group—Work Tables, Desks and Cabinets of various sorts at $14 to $130—prices that represent reductions of a third at least, up to a full half.
All new, perfect goods, fresh from the maker—some that have no duplicates in this collection. Fourth floor.

Dress Goods for Gifts Merry Christmas all around—the mill-men have lived to see wholesale prices twenty per cent. above the calamity level. Everybody is busy, and to keep little lots from under foot, they sold the goods to us—so did some of the importing houses. A loss, but it's on such a wee fraction of their business that it doesn't hurt.

Dress patterns—fine for gifts—are selling anywhere to-day cheaper than we can replace the goods in many cases.

Liberal lengths, neatly banded—
At $2—Of Fancy Mixed Suiting.
At $2.40—Of Half Wool Covert Cloths.
At $2.50—Of Striped Homespun Cheviot.
At $2.65—Of All-wool Vigoreaux.
At $2.45—Of English Striped Suiting.
At $2.65—Of Silk-and-wool Fancy Velour Stripes.
At $3—Of Fancy Silk-and-wool Suiting.
At $3—Of Camel's-hair Cheviot.
At $3.30—Of Self-colored Figured Worsteds.
At $3.75—Of Ladies' Cloth.
At $4.50—Of Cheviot Covert Cloth.
At $4.50—Of Silk-and-wool Crepe Brilliant.
At $4.50—Of Camel's-hair Plaids.
At $5—Of two-toned Cheviots.
At $6—Of Matelasse Cheviot.
At $6—Of Imported Mixed Poplins.
At $7.50—Of Whipcord Covert Cloths.

And lengths of Black Dress Goods, neatly banded, starting at $2.25 a pattern and ending at $6.

Pretty Cottons—
50c a pattern for pretty Calicoes.
$1 a pattern for pretty Seersuckers.
$1 a pattern for printed Cashmerettes.
$1.25 a pattern for Printed Percales.

Dress patterns of wool goods with proper garniture, attractively packed in fancy boxes, $2.50, $2.75, $3, $3.25, $3.50, $4 and $5.50. Rotunda and Fourth avenue.

Women's Neckwear Surely there was the gift-making thought in the mind of the buyer who chose these attractive stocks. The collection seems brighter, cheerier, prettier than ever before. More extensive, too—you'll find variety enough. Newest, best styles throughout, and not a piece in the store that's dear.

Some fancy bows, wholly new in style, at 50c each.
Jabots, in pretty boxes, 25c and $1.
Ruffs, in many styles, at 95c and $1.50.
Ostrich Boas, rich, elegant, at $12, and upward, according to length.
Broadway and Tenth street.

Wanamaker Calendars It's the renaissance time of the calendar. The advertising calendar is not all-sufficient—there are rooms where the dately reminder of the storekeeper, coal seller and medicine man are not "the thing," well-appointed offices where advertising calendars are not admitted. How do we know? Well, for several years our calendar business has strengthened—we have elegant calendars made to our order, to sell. Fifty-one thousand people have taken our catalogues of calendars for 1900. Not a catalogue left—and the calendars are "selling like hot cakes."

Thirty-eight styles, some with pictures after Humphreys, Brundage, Grivaz and Moran, 10c to 35c—as much beauty as has cost 25c to $1.25 heretofore.

These at 10c each. By mail, 12c.
No. 32. Outing—6-piece fan; women's heads; 6x11 in.
No. 33. Merry Childhood—6-piece fan; children's heads; 6x11 in.
15c each. By mail, 17c.
No. 21. Rose Queen—4 slats, drop; roses, by C. Klein; 6½x16 in.
No. 22. Pansy Time—4 slats, drop; pansies, by C. Klein; 6½x16 in.
No. 27. True Hearts—4 slats in the shape of a heart, drop; designs of landscapes and flowers; 5½x26 in.
No. 30. The Children's Week—7-piece fan, children's heads; 8½x15 in.
No 31. The Seasons—7-piece fan, handsome landscapes; 8½x15 in.
20c each. By mail, 25c.
No. 9. Heartsease—4 leaves, turn over; pansies, by C. Klein; 8½x11½ in.
No. 10. Floral Reverie—4 leaves; 8½x11½
No. 13. Pastoral—4 leaves; turn over; landscapes, from water-color designs; 7½ x13 in.
25c each. By mail, 30c.
No. 8. Summer Roses—4 leaves, turn over; roses, by C. Klein, 8½x11½ in.
No. 11. Children of the Year—4 leaves, turn over; children's heads, by Frances Brundage; tied with silk loops: 8½x11½.
Both book stores.
And special counters on Second and Fifth floors.

Furs Pardon this little list—we must give diversified news today—three million people thinking of Christmas.

Sealskin Coats, London-dyed skins, $150.
Persian Lamb Coats, collar and revers of chinchilla, $125.
Collarettes of natural lynx; high storm collar with animal heads, $20.
Scarfs of blended Baum marten, with cluster tails, $25.
Collarettes of stone marten, high storm collar, $40. Second floor, Broadway.

Headwear for Little Folks Tam O'Shanters made of camel's hair—quite the vogue, $1, $1.25.

Double-band Golf Caps, cloth and cheviot, 65c and 85c.

Polo Hats of chinchilla, plush and cloth, 85c to $2.50.

Derbys and Telescopes, $1,50, $2.

Toques for baby, 35c. And for older children at 25c to $1.25.
Second floor, Tenth street.

Blankets The purchasing of blankets here is attended always with these advantages: The sizes and weights are accurately given—no guesswork or exaggeration; the prices are favorable to the consumer—our large buying brings us price concessions the benefit of which we're willing you should share,

Now, here are blankets at $3.50 a pair. They weigh 5 lbs. and measure 72x84 in.; filling of long staple wool on cotton warp. A good value.
At $4 a pair—A trifle smaller, 70x82, but the same weight, and all wool.
At $5 a pair—Extra large—78x86—7 lbs.; these have wool filling on spool cotton warp.
Exceptionally good qualities, too, at $6 and $8 a pair.
Some of those fine French blankets are still here; one of these is equal in weight to an ordinary pair. They're shown in various pretty colorings. $10 each.

Slumber Robes Those of Italian silk are in greatest favor. Some Roman stripes at $1.50 each, and at $2.50. Rich, delicately colored robes, Italian silk with Jacquard patterns, are $5. At the same price, handsome wool blankets—used frequently for house and dressing gowns. Third floor.

Eiderdown Sacques More to sell at 35c each. To be offered at half-past ten this morning. Only one to a purchaser. Their predecessors were all gone in an hour or two. These will go as quickly. Be prompt if you would own one. The material is the same quality as that used in the dollar garments. All good, solid colors.
Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Hats from Paris and Here

A baker's dozen of very elegant Fur-Trimmed Hats have just come to us from Paris. Rebeaux, Virot, Pouyanne and Lewis send them. We thought you'd appreciate this latest touch of French fashion.

Our own trimmers have done wonders this week—made up half a hundred sweet little Evening Hats which we shall sell today at $5 to $7.

The day's millinery news is decidedly interesting. Yes, and important.
Second Floor, Broadway.

The Wanamaker Store.

Women's Handkerchiefs—Half Price

Seems strange that anybody should feel overstocked with handkerchiefs. With 3,000 sorts we are nearly meeting your demands. But, of course, there is the Wanamaker guarantee of "all-linen." Other sellers let you guess. Well, we have an importer's clear-up lot—mostly 50c and 75c Handkerchiefs—hemstitched and embroidered—to sell at Eighteen (18c) Cents.
Broadway.

Silks Why not add enough silk for waist—no matter what else you give. To help you to buy quickly we've cut waist-lengths from quite two hundred pretty silks and packed them in neat gift boxes. $2 and more.

The silks are in light and dark colorings and black. We've thought it out—how many gifts there are to buy, and all that—so you'll find lots of silks at half price among these gift-lots. But good silk in every case.
Rotunda.

Down Comfortables There's comfort in the very thought of these—the knowledge that they're thoroughly good. We know that, and you have our assurance. Down Comfortables are made here. The down is pure — odorless. Some that are covered with sateen are $3.75. And there are luxuriant silk ones at $10, $15, $16 and up to $150.

Comfortables filled with cotton are $1 to $3. Third floor.

Knit Petticoats There's one kind at 65c. It's all cotton, in pink, pale blue, red or navy blue. Those of wool in light or dark solid colors, with wide borders—some of silk, in contrasting colors—$1 to $1.75. Suitably boxed for giving, if you wish.
Second Floor, Tenth street.

THINGS TO GIVE TO WOMEN

Watches. Suit your taste, her fancy and your purse. $5 to $120.
Diamonds—which are next surest to government bonds.
Silver Table Ware. Silver Toilet Ware.
Furs. We got more fine furs for this season than ever before. Already we are searching for more.
Wraps of cloth, silk; and velour is proper again.
A Piano—the Angelus is a piano player; the Angelus Library keeps you supplied with music.
Silk for dress or waist.
Art China, Bronzes, Marble Figures, Bric-a-Brac.
Pictures—meritorious ones, whether you spend little or much.
Kid Gloves. A Paris store asked to share the product of our Grenoble producer.
Handkerchiefs. There are only three stores in America where linen is always all-flax.
Books. Subscription to Periodicals.
Desks Music Cabinets Pretty Chairs.

Elegant Lamps Reduced French china bases in artistic shapes, decorated with roses, orchids and the like—and different. The metal trimmings are in Renaissance effects, finished like Etruscan gold. We are simply selling, for him, the remainder of his winter production—and here are only a few—

$12 instead of $20 $25 instead of $50
$20 instead of $35 $50 instead of $100
$100 instead of $150.

Basement.

New Pocket Books From Vienna—just reached us in time for today's selling—the oddest, handsomest pocketbooks any woman ever owned. Leather—hard to tell what sorts, those Viennese workers manipulate it so queerly. But some of the pieces are embossed with shadowy figures, touched with a queer coppery glint; others have silver mountings—l'Art Nouveau. $2 to $14.
Main floor, Tenth street.

Silk Petticoats These are in all the new shades, and black. Made attractively. Accordion plaited. Petticoats that sell regularly at $7. These, without a single fault, at $5.
Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Christmas Candies An excellent quality of glace fruits, $1.50 for 5-lb. box, and a 5-lb. box of fine mixed candies for $1.

Various chocolate specialties; nougat, eclair, marshmallows and caramels—at 20c a pound.

Entries for Brighton Beach Stakes.

Entries for the Foxhall and Produce Stakes of the Brighton Beach Racing Association will close Dec. 30. The Foxhall Stakes of $15,000 will be run in 1901 for foals of 1899, then two years old. The association will add any amount necessary above the entry fees to make up the gross value of the stake. The Produce Stakes, also $15,000, will be run in 1902 for the produce of mares covered in 1899. The race will be run in two divisions, the first for colts and geldings only, and the second for fillies, the value of each division to be proportioned to the sex of the eligible foals. In each division $1,500 will go to second and $750 to third place.

A Christmas Present

That is a Present

YOU will doubtless give a number of presents to a number of different people this Christmas. Is there one person above twelve years old among them who would not be gratified at getting in the Christmas stocking a great big set of beautiful books, full of delightful story-reading, that would last and be a source of pleasure and profit for a lifetime?

You can make just such a present, and that by drawing on your Santa Claus money for only one single dollar, paying the rest in small monthly sums after the holidays.

If you wish your set delivered before Christmas, order NOW. We thought we had sets enough to last over Christmas, but they are going very rapidly. We promise prompt delivery on all accepted orders received during next three days. If you delay longer than that you risk having to wait for your set.

That Coupon

in the opposite corner of the page will bring you full information about the half price and terms of payment, together with sample pages of the History. It should be clipped off (cutting along the dotted line) and sent in at once. If you want the books for Christmas, however, you'd better use the coupon in the lower corner instead, sending in a dollar with it. That will save time.

Its Tremendous Scope

Many homes possess good histories of England, of Germany, of France; most comfortably-well-off families have a good history of the United States, but how many own reliable histories of Hawaii, of the Japanese, or of the Philippine Islanders? These and all other nations and races are justly measured in Ridpath's great "History of the World." And, what is more, you form a clearer and better conception of each nation by thus viewing all the nations arranged in their true relations to each other.

Cut This Corner off, if you wish further particulars before ordering and fill in the blank and mail it to-day.

ORDER COUPON.

WE are just now selling the complete set of Ridpath's History of the World (nine massive volumes) at about half-price and on little monthly payments. You pay one dollar down and the whole set is delivered at once. Then you pay two dollars a month for 17 months. Ridpath's History of the World contains nearly 7,000 large double-column pages (the equivalent of 70 ordinary volumes), over 4,000 engravings, 35 historical maps in color, 10 chronological charts in color, 9 race charts in color, 14 colored plates depicting the types of the races, 33 genealogical diagrams, 8 colored reproductions of etchings on tint blocks. A picture to every page or so.

The Twofold Nature

of "Ridpath's History" distinguishes it from all other histories. Other writers have given more or less faithful chronicles of the exploits and achievements of the world's great men and great nations; Dr. Ridpath not only has done this, but he has also devoted equal space to describing the real life of the real mankind from the earliest beginnings down to the present day. One part may be likened to the description of a house which some carpenter has built, and the other to the life-story of the carpenter who built it. Reviewing the past from these two diverse standpoints, the reader perceives clearly the qualities and defects—the real relations between the different parts of the world's whole history.

THE NEW VOLUME

The ninth volume, completed last July, includes the full story of the late Spanish war, a complete account of the Dreyfus affair, and a narration of the events which have made critical the Chinese question and have led up to the war in South Africa. It details the great campaign of Kitchener in the Soudan, and the adventures and accomplishments of Major Marchand, the French officer, whose exploits roused the French nation to the wildest enthusiasm. It tells the circumstances of Japan's great awakening. It aims to give and does give a complete review of the world's history down to the early months of the present year of 1899. The chapters devoted to the Spanish war are particularly satisfying and thoroughly trustworthy also. Dr. Ridpath has availed himself of all the reliable published material in existence touching that conflict; and has been allowed access to State papers concerning the war, which are on file in the National archives at Washington. In addition, he has been privileged to examine and make use of a number of important manuscripts written by some of the leading actors in the conflict, which are not yet published. This portion of the work, naturally the most interesting and entertaining part to Americans, is therefore particularly rich in hitherto untold facts, and may be regarded as the only really authoritative account of the war which has yet appeared.

HOW IT WOULD WORK.

The friends of Mr. BRYAN submit to the American people a Philippine policy which deserves a candid examination. Mr. BRYAN might be wrong about silver, but right about the Philippines. In large transactions the safe way is to hear both sides, to consider the matter as a whole and try to determine which is the wiser way. The Bryan policy with the Philippine Islands has been formulated by Representative WILLIAMS of Mississippi in the resolutions which he offered in the House on Thursday. We here reprint the preamble and resolutions entire:

Whereas, The hope has been held out that the Filipinos now waging war against the forces of the United States in the Island of Luzon would lay down their arms if authoritatively assured that it was the intention of the Government and the people of the United States ultimately to grant to the people of that island their independence and the absolute control of their domestic affairs; and

Whereas, Such is the intention of the Government and of the American people, who do not believe in wars of conquest or criminal aggression against other peoples, and have frequently declared their horror thereof; therefore

Resolved, That it has always been our intent and purpose to recognize the inalienable rights of the Filipinos to self-government and national independence, and that in pursuance thereof we shall make formal recognition of these rights and withdraw our land and sea forces upon the establishment of peace and the inauguration of a Constitutional Government or Governments by the people of the islands or any of them, provided the said Government agrees, or the said Governments agree, to refund the $20,000,000 which was paid by us to the Queen of Spain; to give us in fee simple, with right of sovereignty vested in us, a place suitable for a naval station and other places fitted for coaling stations, and to grant the American people in perpetuity the right of free access to all of their ports for goods, merchandise, and persons bent on peaceful or missionary pursuits.

We pledge ourselves to treat as an unfriendly manifestation toward the United States any foreign interference or aggression for the period of ten years from and after the establishment of such a Government, provided that the Government and people of said islands shall surrender into our keeping during that period the entire question of their foreign relations, and shall pay the expenses to which we may be put for such troops as shall at the request of said Government be kept on Philippine territory, and of such ships and civil forces as may be kept in the Philippine or adjacent waters for the purposes of the protection herein promised.

Is this a well-considered plan for attaining the ends we seek to attain in the Philippines? Those ends are the advancement of the native population in education, in material prosperity, and in respect for law; the faithful discharge of all the obligations, domestic and exterior, to which we have fallen heir in the Philippines; and, in justice to ourselves, the use of the opportunities opened to us by the possession of these islands to promote our foreign trade and the prosperity of our merchants, our manufacturers, and our people. If at some future time it should prove that we could confer independence upon them without too great a risk to themselves or too serious a sacrifice of our own interests, that would be the final aim of our Government. It must always be kept in view.

How shall we best accomplish these ends? All the authorities who have any qualification to speak upon the present condition and capacities of the Filipinos warn us that it will take years of patient training to make them capable of self-government; that we must inculcate the love of civil order and teach the art of government by small beginnings, proceeding to larger responsibilities gradually until under our care the race has been morally and politically regenerated. That is what the Philippine Commission tells us, that is what we learn from our officers there, and from Americans who have gone among them and studied them close at hand.

But the Williams resolution contemplates an immediate recognition of the right of independence and the withdrawal of our land and sea forces "upon the establishment of peace and the inauguration of a Constitutional Government or Governments by the people of the islands or any of them." There are further conditions that they shall agree to repay to us the $20,000,000 which we paid to Spain and give us a naval station, coaling stations, and port rights, but these are all unimportant in comparison with that momentous declaration that we "shall make formal recognition of these rights (self-government and national independence) and withdraw our land and sea forces."

If this resolution should become the law of the land and Gen. OTIS should be instructed by the President to carry it into effect AGUINALDO and his scattered bands would come hurrying back to Manila immediately upon the receipt of the news that we were going to let them have their way. They could set up a "Constitutional Government" in twenty-four hours. We should then be called upon to withdraw our land and sea forces. It would be imperative to withdraw them all at once—that is, the safety of our men would require that our full display of force be maintained to the end, and that the city be covered by the guns of the fleet until the last transport was ready to sail away. It is puerile to talk about keeping American troops there at the request and expense of the Filipinos. We can trust nothing to the vindictive and treacherous native character. When the last American soldier has been withdrawn the reckoning of the fighting Tagalos with the natives who have been friendly to us would begin. The life and property of foreign residents would be entirely at their mercy and nothing that we know of their temper and disposition would lead us to expect any gentler fate than pillage and murder for the unfortunate foreigners whom we had basely and inhumanly abandoned to their uncovenanted mercies. We have already pointed out the extent of the responsibilities we should have to assume to other powers for their murdered and despoiled subjects.

To be mulcted in money damages, however, is a minor humiliation compared to the loss of National self-respect and the insults which other nations would heap upon us as a cowardly and faithless people. They would feel a just contempt for the political judgment of a country that deemed the Filipinos capable of self-government, but a sterner feeling would possess their minds when they reflected upon our dishonorable throwing off of responsibilities assumed in the face of the whole world. We hold our heads pretty high now. We should sink to a condition lower than that of China if we fled from our unperformed obligations in the Philippines. After that exhibition of poltroonery the meanest nation would feel free to insult and snub us.

If Mr. WILLIAMS's plan is meant for anything it is intended to make the Filipinos contented and happy. Its sure effect would be to plunge them into a state of disorder and bloodshed which would be terminated only by the strong hand of some power that would waste not a moment in discussing the consent of the governed with AGUINALDO.

This is not merely Mr. WILLIAMS's plan; it is the plan of the Democratic opposition, of the Bryanites. It is reported that they will make their campaign next Summer on this issue. The plan will not bear examination. It is sufficient for its rejection to say that it will not accomplish its purpose of making the Filipinos free, happy, and contented. Beyond that, it is cowardly, faithless, and bloody. As a party policy it reeks of the fatal incapacity of the Bryan Democracy.

LENDING GOLD.

The conditions that enable the United States markets to send gold to England in the present crisis were very clearly set forth in our financial columns yesterday by our special contributor "A. K. F." Practically the process is one of lending for the sake of the higher return that the needs of England justify. The fact that it is going on at a time when ordinarily the current would be in the opposite direction shows how widely it differs from any process to which the condition of the country has hitherto accustomed us, how far it is a question of lending instead of paying.

The causes that have led up to the present situation are, of course, numerous and somewhat complex, but among the most obvious and important is the very great prosperity in all lines of production, manufacture, and trade that has prevailed in this country in increasing degree for the last four years. In considerable part this has been due to the coincidence of large crops here and short crops in the other grain producing countries, giving us the unusual combination of heavy supply and good prices. But other causes have been at work, and their influence has been great. One of these has been the natural reaction from a long and trying period of relative stagnation and enforced economy. Another has been the remarkable advance in the practice of organization, the concentration of capital and energy with the corresponding increase of product and reduction of cost, permitting us to take advantage of the new opportunities. Still another has been the stimulus given to the enterprise of our people by the events that have completely changed our position among the nations of the world and our outlook upon the future. And very effectual indeed has been the victory for sound money in 1896, when the mind of the people was cleared of delusions, and the adoption of the world's standard of value was insured. If we wish to understand the tremendous influence of this fact we have only to ask ourselves what would be the chance of our lending gold abroad if we were in doubt as to whether the Treasury would maintain gold payments at home.

Not long ago, when gold was drawn from this country to England, it was to pay for purchases made there or elsewhere or to pay for American securities sent home. This latter operation was in effect only the collection of debts owed by Americans abroad. Securities, whether stocks or bonds held abroad, were necessarily evidences of money borrowed to carry on American enterprises. It would not be safe to say that all these have returned and that we have paid all our foreign debts. But it is safe to say that we have gone so far in this direction that no serious drain of gold need be at any time feared for any such purpose. The securities now remaining in foreign hands are for the most part those that the holders either cannot sell or do not wish to sell. They are either the evidence of very bad or of very good bargains, and of course the latter are the more important. Nor does the change in our relations with foreign capital and with London, which is the seat of its operations, stop here. The present lending of gold from a stock larger and more available than any other in the world indicates that for the time being New York and not London is the financial centre and capital. Undoubtedly conditions will change, and the former course will be resumed in greater or less degree. But it is clear that the old state of things will not be permanent if it should be restored. The very great resources of the United States, the productive capacity that is directed to developing and using those resources, the steady growth of our population, and the advance in general intelligence and well-being are now free to work their natural effect. Unsound currency and the hampering influence of protection are either removed or in the course of removal. It was long ago predicted by the acute mind of Mr. GLADSTONE that when the United States came to the consciousness of their own strength and snapped the bonds with which they had foolishly bound themselves, they would seize the sceptre of commercial and financial supremacy from the hands of the mother country. That is precisely what is happening.

THE CURRENCY DEBATE.

Never was there a more curious episode in our political history than the debate, or imitation of debate, that has gone on in the House of Representatives the past week. The Democrats protested, as was their duty from the conventional point of view of the opposition, that the Currency bill was being "jammed through" without sufficient chance for discussion, but they have shown little desire to avail themselves of the chance that they had, and were evidently relieved when the thing was over with.

At the close a request for unanimous consent to introduce an amendment providing for free silver was opposed by a Democrat. But the attitude of some of the Republicans was not more consistent, and many of them were obliged to listen with such patience as they could command to citations from their past speeches against the gold standard. The only comfort they could gather in this disagreeable predicament lay in the fact that the most conspicuous examples of contradictory utterances were drawn from the speeches of President MCKINLEY while in Congress. It is not to be denied that if the Currency bill had not been made a caucus measure it would have been doubtful if it could have secured the normal Republican vote.

It is easy enough to twit politicians with inconsistency, and a good deal of twitting was done on both sides during the week. But it is only the stupid and the weak that never learn, and it is an enormous advantage for the country that the Republicans have learned that it is to their party's interest to change their attitude on the currency. That means that public opinion has been educated to the level of demanding the gold standard. After all it is really better that the politicians should be forced to follow the advance of public opinion than that the public should be guided blindly by even intelligent political leaders. What we gain is more solidly gained and will not easily be lost.

THE DEPLORABLE REVERSES OF THE BRITISH.

Let no American imagine for an instant that this Nation or the cause of civilization will be the gainer by the disasters to the British forces in South Africa.

The injury of England is of concern to us all. Our interests, moral, political, and material, would suffer by her defeat at the hands of the Boers. The two nations sustain relations to each other which forbid that we should be indifferent to the calamities that befall her. Bound together by ties of peculiar sanctity and firmness, ties closer than those that unite any other nations on earth, these two peoples of the English speech have an influence in the world's affairs that would be lamentably impaired by the abasement of either. They have a work to do which neither might be able to perform alone, and which the world can ill afford that they should leave undone.

England stood by us. Let us stand by her. We had the great help of her moral support. Let us give her our sympathy and good wishes. The envious and watchful knew that she was our friend. Let all the world know now that we are hers.

THE NAVY IN LAND WARFARE.

The presence of an unusual factor in the defense of Natal has aroused much important discussion among British naval officers and strategists at home. The unusual factor is the navy—the introduction of naval officers, seamen, and naval armaments in warfare carried on several hundred miles inland. And the question as to how far the naval strength may thus be legitimately employed has revived in the course of argument that much disputed question as to the actual status of the Marine Corps. Both these questions have a certain importance to Americans.

The consensus of opinion among British naval authorities seems to be that the employment of a portion of the navy's personnel and great guns in the interior of South Africa has established a dangerous precedent. Great emphasis is laid on the fact that a flagship and two formidable cruisers have been practically made useless for the time being. Moreover, it is demonstrated that while the death of a soldier means the loss of a single fighting unit, the death of a sailor on land amounts to the death of two. The latter must be replaced by a fresh military unit on shore and by another sailor on board ship. It is the same way with the armaments. The destruction of a naval gun on shore practically places out of use two engines of war.

The British naval officers do not deny that their arm is always at the service of the War Office wherever and whenever exigencies of the military situation demand it, and they affirm with much emphasis that no pedantic regard for the separate functions of each arm will ever cause the navy to hesitate. Still, they would impress upon the War Office that every endeavor should be used to make the necessity of employing naval resources by the military as remote as possible. Sir JOHN COLOMB seeks to provide for all future contingencies by having the Marine Corps so organized that it would be able to assist land operations with naval guns whenever the military situation required.

There is no doubt that a precedent has been formed. The employment of British bluejackets in the siege of Sevastopol only remotely resembles the present case. But whether the precedent be dangerous or not depends upon the future action of the military authorities. Broadly speaking, we believe that the possibility of receiving aid from the navy to any great degree or at any great distance inland should never be taken into account by military strategists. As we understand it, the employment of a naval brigade at Ladysmith is the result of an emergency. The Boers had succeeded in planting siege guns within range of the place. The War Office had not provided for this contingency. The situation was only saved by expressing to the front Capt. LAMBTON with heavy naval artillery and men trained to operate it.

When Gen. SHAFTER's expedition landed in Cuba and it was discovered that the heavy siege guns had been left behind no attempt was made to demonstrate the fact that the great guns might be removed from the ships to take their places. It was not known how soon every gun aboard ship might be required to fight a foe on its natural element. The Spaniards, to be sure, used some of their naval guns in defending Santiago, but they perceptibly weakened their naval strength by so doing. The point should be emphasized. Campaigns inland should be planned as though there were no navy in existence. The British Admiralty will doubtless make representations to this effect to the War Office.

The plan suggested by Sir JOHN COLOMB, if carried out, would mean the absolute reorganization of the Marine Corps in a way that would utterly destroy its present functions and usefulness and be at variance with the traditions of this "ever faithful" auxiliary arm. Many things bind the Royal Marines to the Marine Corps of the United States. Both have been maligned; neither has ever been known to falter in the performance of its peculiar and trying duties; both have the same motto, and the cap of the British marine and that of the American bear nearly the same emblem. It is to be hoped that the solution of the difficult question will not include the consideration of any plan which shall destroy the status of the Royal Marine. It is plainly and simply the duty of the War Office to prevent the recurrence of the exigencies that demanded the use of the naval arm at Ladysmith.

ADJUTANT GENERAL ANDREWS.

The retirement of Adjt. Gen. ANDREWS is a cause for sincere regret to all who have an interest in the militia service of the State.

He brought to the office he has held for the past year peculiar qualities of great value. He had had the training and experience of a regular army officer in a variety of branches. Not only by his education at the Military Academy and his service in the artillery, but by his experience at headquarters at Washington and as Quartermaster and Acting Inspector General in the time of the Spanish war, combined with his service in the National Guard of the State, he was thoroughly fitted for the task assigned to him. He had the additional advantage of the intimate and sympathetic friendship of the Governor, with whom he had served in the Police Board of this city.

There is no question that the tribute of praise so unstintedly given to him by Gov. ROOSEVELT is richly deserved. He found the National Guard extremely disturbed and confused by the experience of the Spanish war, and he leaves it in an excellent state of efficiency in all regards. It is hardly necessary to say that in this work he has had in view solely the good of the service, and that neither personal nor political considerations have been allowed to weigh with him. He resigns because his private affairs claim his attention, and he is quite justified in the belief that he is entitled to be relieved at least for the present from further duty.

He galloped away on his fiery steed,
And his armor shone as he tripled his speed;
On through the villa at breakneck tear,
Away to the heath of his ladye fayre;
Arriving within he rattled his steel
And swung his blade when he went to kneel;
He pleaded his love in that spacious hall—
The old-fashioned love that was best of all.

He spins away on his chainless wheel,
An armorless knight on a steed of steel;
Onward he flies! 'Tis a moonless night,
A brakeless wheel and an oilless light,
A thoughtless youth—he reaches the door
And kneels to her on a rugless floor.
He gives his mustache a faultless curl,
And pleads his love to a heartless girl.

AFFAIRS IN PUERTO RICO

People Anxiously Await News of Congressional Action.

ALL BUSINESS IS PARALYZED

Anomalous Position of the Island Makes It Unsafe for Investors—Census Taking Is in Progress.

PONCE, Puerto Rico, Dec. 11.—Now that Congress is in session Puerto Rico feels more than ever the high cable rates she is compelled to pay. The newspapers are able to furnish only meagre cablegrams, and many persons strongly advocate an appropriation from some source by which the Government for a few thousand dollars a year would supply free to the newspapers several thousand words of general news each day.

Intense interest is felt here in regard to the action of Congress respecting Puerto Rico, and everybody is looking forward eagerly to the arrival of the New York papers containing the President's message, of which scarcely fifty words have as yet been published here.

The Military Government is preparing for an elaborate system of direct internal taxation to replace the revenue now derived from the tariff, which everybody expects Congress will promptly remove. Taxes are placed upon horses and carriages and personalty of every kind, but licenses are not affected. All men over twenty-one years of age living in Puerto Rico and owning property of any kind or conducting a business of any sort are taxed $1 per year for school purposes.

Business in Puerto Rico remains absolutely paralyzed. Nobody will invest a cent or undertake any enterprise until the island has some standing. In addition to this, the local elections, which have been in progress for over a month past, have annihilated what little business was left.

An order has recently been issued from headquarters establishing a Board of Insurance and Surety Commissioners, whose duty it is to examine all companies doing an insurance business in Puerto Rico, and to enforce the fulfillment by them of certain requirements.

The $200,000 which the President some time ago gave to the island from the Emergency Fund, together with other funds on hand, make $600,000 which will be spent between now and July 1 next upon the roads of Puerto Rico. Nearly all the contracts have been let, and the work is being pushed rapidly.

The recent failure of the firm of Felici Costa & Co. was a severe blow to many friends of the firm, which had been in business thirty-five years, and had unlimited credit. The flood following the cyclone destroyed about $200,000 worth of coffee and sugar in their warehouses, in waiting for a market. The liabilities are about $400,000, and the assets about $200,000, consisting largely of non-negotiable paper of planters and others, upon which it is impossible to realize now, as the planters were all ruined by the hurricane. The United States Provisional Court appointed Henry Fritze Commissioner and Hermenio Armstrong receiver for the firm, which, it is rumored, will shortly reorganize and recommence business.

The work of taking the census, by no means a small task, is rapidly progressing, and the districts from which complete returns have been sent in show a decided increase. Basing calculations upon the last census, which gave the population as 894,000, it is estimated that the present census will show over 1,000,000 inhabitants upon this small, but fertile, island.

PUERTO RICO'S NEW SCHOOLS.

American Teachers, Textbooks, and Methods Are Being Introduced—Politics Hinder Progress.

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico, Dec. 12.—Since the American occupation great strides have been made in the public school system of Puerto Rico. Under the Spanish rule the system was scarcely worthy of the name. There was not a public school building in the entire island, the school sessions being held mostly in the houses of the teachers, no text books were to be found, and what little school furniture there was was of the crudest form.

The first move toward the reorganization upon American methods was made by the appointment, in January, 1899, of Gen. Eaton as Inspector of Schools. The school laws were revised, making the schools entirely free; the teachers' salaries were made payable by the insular Government, instead of by the municipalities, and provision was made for the organization of school districts.

Gen. Eaton found the task before him too great for one of his advanced years. The climate also had its ill effects, and he resigned in May. His assistant, Victor S. Clark, took charge of the schools. A Board of Education was organized, consisting of five members—three Puerto Ricans and two Americans. Each municipality on the island now has its American teacher, about seventy-five being employed. There are some five hundred Spanish teachers. The schools are now held in houses separated from the houses of the teachers, and modern text books in English and Spanish are used. All public schools are under American supervision. The school year has been reduced from twelve to nine months, and salaries have been increased somewhat, being placed on the American currency basis.

Ground has been broken for the establishment of a normal and industrial school at Fajardo, on the northern coast. This school will open during the coming Spring. The City of Fajardo subscribed $20,000 toward its construction, and the Insular Government a like sum.

An Indian training school under American teachers has been established in San Juan in an up-to-date school building. About 250 pupils, mostly Puerto Ricans, are studying in this school. All courses are in English, and English text books are used exclusively. The grades range from kindergarten through college preparatory.

Last Spring a similar school with similar grades was started at Ponce, with American teachers, but under private auspices. This is now a public school, with an enrollment of 250.

It is the policy of the department to organize good American schools, giving instruction in English, and this is being done as fast as funds permit in order that native schools may be remodeled upon an American basis, by following the methods of American instructors.

Fifteen per cent. of the people read and write, and of these one-third have been taught in their own homes or in private schools or in other countries than Puerto Rico. For some years many have been sent to the United States for their education. No religious instruction is permitted.

The children appear very eager to learn English, and seem to pick it up with remarkable aptitude. The teachers employed are from the United States, and are mostly young normal graduates, with modern methods.

The great bane of the schools is politics. A large percentage of the male teachers are politicians. Some are agitating against the new system as detrimental to their own interests. Most of the teachers, however, heartily co-operate with reforms.

Capt. Carter's Secretary Arrested.

HAVANA, Dec. 17.—Mr. Conley, who at one time was private secretary of Capt. Oberlin M. Carter, has been placed under arrest here by order of Secretary Root. For some time Mr. Conley has been employed as a stenographer in the Custom House.

Jockey Club's Sacred Concert.

HAVANA, Dec. 17.—The Havana Jockey Club has issued invitations for a sacred concert to be given on Sunday next.

Big Guns at Willets Point.

WILLETS POINT, L. I., Dec. 17.—A detail of artillerymen from Battery M, Seventh Artillery, under command of Lieut. Andrew Moses, are mounting two big Buffington-Crozier disappearing gun carriages upon the bluff here. The work is progressing slowly as the guns to be mounted are the largest in the service. It is thought the work will be ready in the early Spring, by which time the guns will be ready.

Rev. Dr. Merritt's Son Fatally Shot.

ROCHESTER, Dec. 17.—The sixteen-year-old son of the Rev. Dr. Merritt of West Webster shot himself in the right eye this morning at his home, and is now at the City Hospital. He will die.

THIS WEEK IN CONGRESS.

House Will Vote on Currency Bill Today—Committees to be Named Tuesday—Adjournment Wednesday.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17.—The two events of importance in the House this week before the adjournment for the holiday recess on Wednesday will be the vote on the Currency bill to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal and the announcement of the committees on Tuesday.

Under the terms of the special order with reference to the Currency bill, neither a motion to recommit nor a substitute proposition is in order, and the vote will be taken directly upon the passage of the bill. The result is a foregone conclusion, as it will command every Republican vote. The interest in the vote, therefore, lies only in the record of Democratic disaffection it will show.

The Eastern Democrats generally, with the exception of a few from New York, are not in line with their Democratic brethren from the South and West on the money question, but not all of them will vote for the bill. According to a careful canvass made by Mr. Overstreet of Indiana, who has been in charge of the measure, it will receive eight Democratic votes at least, and he believes seven Democrats will dodge. He figures that the bill will have a majority of thirty-five. So far as can be ascertained no other business will be transacted by the House this week.

The Senate has no programme for the week, and the indications are that short daily sessions will be held and very little business transacted. The body will adjourn for the Christmas holidays on Wednesday.

Outside of official nominations, there is practically no business on the calendar, all important matters in committee having been delayed for the reorganization of the committees effected at the close of business last week. So far no notices of speeches on any subject have been given, and Senators generally express themselves as disposed to postpone the real business of the session until after the recess.

It is expected that the financial bill will be received from the House during the week. It will be referred to the Committee on Finance. This committee expects to make its report soon after the resumption of business in the new year. The real work of the session will then begin.

FINANCIERS IN CONFERENCE.

New York and Boston Men Try to Bolster Up the Boston Situation.

BOSTON, Dec. 17.—The Post will say to-morrow:

"As a result of a conference of Boston and New York financial men which, at 2 o'clock this morning had been in almost uninterrupted session for more than twenty-four hours, it is probable that there will be a special meeting of the Stock Exchange at 9 o'clock this morning to consider drastic measures for the present financial situation.

"At this conference it was practically decided that, if no other action was taken, support would at least be given good stocks in order to prevent what might be termed a 'gamblers'' panic.

"There is one stock in particular, a Boston stock, which has sold far above par, which went a little below it Saturday, and large blocks of which are expected to be thrown on the market by men who think they must have the money to protect themselves in other lines. Thrown upon a market in which there are no buyers there is no telling how far the downward rush would carry the prices.

"A measure which was being considered at the conference at an early hour this morning was united action by the Stock Exchange in the refusal to execute selling orders. But such action, or any radical step, will depend to a great extent upon the London market this morning. If that should be very bad, some drastic measures are almost certain to be adopted to bolster up the situation here.

"It was reported last night that negotiations were in progress for the absorption of large blocks of United States Mining for cash by New York interests. A conference with that object in view was in progress at a late hour last evening. It came down merely to a question of price. As is well appreciated on the Street, such a purchase at this time would be a great relief to the situation."

CLAIM AMERICA IS UNFAIR.

Germans Discuss Tariff Relations with the United States.

BERLIN, Dec 17.—At a meeting of the Cologne Manufacturers' Association yesterday Manager Steller reported upon the recent Philadelphia Congress, greatly belittling its importance. He advised against the appointment of an international committee to investigate the tariff disagreements between Germany and the United States, and said:

"Such tender consideration for the Americans is misplaced. Only a self-assertive attitude on the part of the German nation can impress American public opinion. We must make the Americans realize that we can dispense with them, if necessary, and we must demand that Germany be treated upon a footing of decent, reasonable reciprocity."

The Hamburg Boersenhalle advises conciliatory measures, advocating a reduction in the duty on maize and a less severe inspection of American commodities. It claims, however, that the American treatment of Germany in tariff administration is unfair.

GERMANS CENSURE AN OFFICER.

Protest Against Capt. Ehrlich's Inactivity at Puerto Cabello.

CARACAS, Nov. 28.—The German colony in Puerto Cabello has sent to Emperor William a protest against the action of Capt. Ehrlich, commander of the German training ship Stosch, at the time of the bombardment, on Nov. 11. The charge is that, although being at anchor off Puerto Cabello, he did not interfere to prevent the bombardment.

It is understood that the German Minister at Caracas, Dr. Schmidt-Leda, takes virtually the same view of the case.

RITUALISM IN ENGLAND.

The Bishops Will Not Prosecute the Non-Conforming Clergy.

LONDON, Dec. 17.—The Most Rev. William Dalrymple Maclagan, Archbishop of York, in a pastoral letter regarding the ritual, says:

"It has been widely stated that the Bishops have determined to prosecute clergy who do not conform. These rumors are without the slightest authority. We do not believe that a single Bishop has thought of such a step.

"But, although the Bishops themselves may abstain from prosecutions, it is not likely that they would place any impediment in the way or others desiring to take steps. Those clergy who are in an anomalous position are little more than a handful."

Underground Railways for Berlin.

BERLIN, Dec. 17.—The Province of Brandenburg will issue a loan of 12,000,000 marks for the construction of subsidiary railways, and the City of Berlin will build an extensive system of underground railways.

Kaiser Will Witness a Launching.

BERLIN, Dec. 17.—The New Hamburg-American Line steamer Deutschland will be launched at Stettin Jan. 3, in the presence of the Emperor. Baron von Buelow will perform the ceremony of christening the new vessel.

Cyclone Devastates Mozambique.

MOZAMBIQUE, Dec. 17.—The island was swept to-day by a terrific cyclone, which did immense damage, destroying many houses in Mozambique.

Actors' Church Alliance Service.

The third regular service of the Actors' Church Alliance was held last evening in the Church of Zion and St. Timothy, in West Fifty-seventh Street. The Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix of Trinity Church read the prayers, the Rev. Walter E. Bentley, who was formerly an actor, read the lessons, and the rector of the church, the Rev. Dr. Henry Lubeck, preached the sermon, his subject being "Inspiration and Expression." At the close of the services Dr. Lubeck and the other clergymen held a short reception. Mr. Bentley announced that the badges and pins of the alliance would be ready for delivery Friday.

GEN. ANDREWS RESIGNS

Adjutant General to Retire from Office Dec. 31.

BUSINESS DEMANDS HIS TIME

He Declares that His Personal and Official Relations with the Governor Are Cordial.

Adjt. Gen. Avery D. Andrews has sent in his resignation to Gov. Roosevelt, giving as his reason that he is too much occupied with business to attend to military affairs. Among his intimate friends it is known that he wished to take this step some time ago, but remained in office to assist in the re-establishment of the National Guard after the Spanish war. Following is the letter of resignation which he sent to the Governor:

Hon. Theodore Roosevelt:

Dear Sir: I have the honor to submit herewith my resignation as Adjutant General of the State. As explained to you several weeks ago, the demands of my personal business affairs are such that it is no longer possible for me to devote the necessary time and attention to my official duties as your chief of staff, and I therefore with regret request that my resignation be accepted, to take effect not later than Dec. 31, 1899.

My annual report will contain a detailed review of the work of the Adjutant General's office for the year, but it may not be improper to enumerate briefly some of the more important results achieved under your administration. The new system of staff administration, which came into existence with your inauguration, has been fully organized and is now in satisfactory operation; the National Guard and Naval Militia have been re-equipped at considerable expense and re-established upon an efficient working basis; political considerations have not been permitted to have the slightest influence in military or naval concerns, and, notwithstanding an extraordinary number of changes in personnel among both officers and men, due largely to past and present service in the United States volunteers, the effective strength of the State troops today exceeds 15,000 men and is larger than ever before. The work of the year, while voluminous and exacting, has also been interesting and congenial, and I retire from your staff with the greatest personal regret. In severing our official relations, permit me to express my grateful appreciation of the generous freedom of action and the cordial support which I have invariably received at your hands. Respectfully,

AVERY D. ANDREWS,
Adjutant General and Chief of Staff.

The Governor's reply to this was as follows:

Gen. Avery D. Andrews, Adjutant General, New York:

Sir: I accept your resignation, to take effect Dec. 31, 1899, with the greatest reluctance. I cannot overstate the value of the work you have performed during this year. The Guard was in a very disorganized condition as a result of the Spanish war at the time that you came into office, and largely owing to the zeal, energy, disinterestedness, and high appreciation of the military and civic necessities of the situation which you have shown, it has now been brought to a thoroughly satisfactory point of efficiency. I thank you most heartily on behalf of the State, and greatly regret that you have to leave me. Very truly yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

When questioned in regard to his resignation Gen. Andrews said: "My resignation as Adjutant General is due solely to the necessities of my personal affairs which have recently made unusual demands upon my time. My personal and official relations with the Governor, and, as far as I am aware, with the National Guard and Naval Militia, are now and always have been most cordial and pleasant. Much has been accomplished during the past year in organizing a new staff system, and in re-establishing the National Guard and Naval Militia upon an efficient basis, but constant and laborious effort is needed to keep them up to the highest standard of equipment, discipline, and efficiency, and I do not feel that I can longer devote the necessary time to the service of the State. Having been continuously in active military service since entering West Point, including service in the regular army, United States volunteers, and National Guard, I feel that I may at this time not improperly ask to be relieved from further duty, at least for the present. I shall, however, always retain the deepest interest in all military matters, particularly of this State."

Gen. Andrews could not forecast the selection of his successor, as that, he said, was a matter about which only the Governor had any information. Several high officers of the Guard, who were in the secret of Gen. Andrews's resignation, believe that Col. Edward M. Hoffman, at present Inspector General on the staff of Major Gen. Roe, stands a good chance of being selected, but another officer gave it as his opinion that Brig. Gen. McCoskry Butt, commanding the First Brigade, might succeed Gen. Andrews.

"Gen. Butt has ample time to give to the duties of the office," said the officer, "and has made a fine record as an executive officer. Gen. Butt was a member of the committee which drafted the Military Code, and no one excels him in knowledge of the affairs and needs of the Guard."

Brig. Gen. Butt expressed surprise yesterday afternoon at the news of Adjt. Gen. Andrews's resignation. "I regret to hear it," he said, "as Andrews made a very capable Adjutant General."

Asked as to the truth of the rumor that he might succeed Gen. Andrews, he replied: "There is nothing in it. I shall not be appointed, for I am a Democrat, and the office will go to a Republican. I would not take it, however, if it should be offered to me. I prefer to retain my present position. The Adjutant General, under the present system, is too much under political influence. Politics hamper him and interferes with the proper discharge of his duties. If I took the office I should insist on conducting it along strictly military lines, or I would give it up. No, Sir; you can say I have no idea or intention of becoming Adjutant General."

Major Gen. Charles F. Roe said that he had no knowledge as to who would be appointed to succeed Gen. Andrews.

Gen. Andrews was appointed by Gov. Roosevelt from among a large number of candidates. He is a son-in-law of Major Gen. J. M. Schofield, United States Army, retired. Gen. Andrews entered West Point as a cadet in July, 1882, and upon being graduated became a Second Lieutenant in the Fifth Artillery July 1, 1886. He was promoted First Lieutenant in the Fourth Artillery in November, 1892, and was transferred to the Fifth Artillery in December of the same year. He resigned from the army in November, 1893, to engage in the practice of law. In the Spanish war he served as Lieutenant Colonel and Quartermaster, and as Acting Inspector General of the First Division First Army Corps. He first entered the New York National Guard as engineer on the staff of Brig. Gen. Louis Fitzgerald of the First Brigade in November, 1893. In the extensive manoeuvres attending the sham battles at Van Cortlandt Park he displayed much ability in topographical work. He resigned from the staff of Gen. Fitzgerald in February, 1898, and was elected Major of Squadron A in March, 1898. He was appointed Adjutant General by Gov. Roosevelt in January, 1899. He served on the Police Board of this city when Gov. Roosevelt was President of the board.

BALTIMORE BANK RESIGNATION.

Christian Devries Gives Up the Presidency He Had Held Many Years.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 17.—A flurry was caused to-day by the announcement that Christian Devries had resigned the Presidency of the National Bank of Baltimore, a post he had held for nearly twenty years. The resignation was entirely unexpected and neither Mr. Devries nor any of the bank directors would discuss it.

Mr. Devries has been prominent and highly respected in financial circles for many years. He is one of the city's Finance Commissioners, a Director in the Atlantic Trust and Deposit Company, and President of the Charles A. Vogeler Company, which is owned practically by his family. Mr. Devries married the widow of Mr. Vogler a little over a year ago.

The National Bank of Baltimore is the oldest financial institution in the city, and always has been noted for its conservatism. It had a capital stock of $1,210,700, a surplus fund of $400,000, and undivided profits of $78,503.58 Dec. 2, 1899. J. Thomas Smith is cashier. The Directors are C. Morton Stewart, Christian Devries, Richard Cromwell, James L. McLane, George Poole, O. A. Parker, and Major Alexander Shaw.

The Charles A. Vogeler Company is one of the largest manufacturing concerns of proprietary medicines in the United States.

NEW VENEZUELAN CONSUL

Col. Gonzalez Arrives to Take the Place of Mr. Delfino.

SAYS CASTRO IS IN CONTROL

Opposition to the Government Set Up by Revolution, He Reports, Is Disintegrating.

Col. Elias Gonzales Esteves, the newly appointed Venezuelan Consul General at New York, arrived on the Red D line steamer Philadelphia yesterday. He received his appointment from Cipriano Castro, Provisional President of Venezuela. Col. Gonzalez is a brother-in-law of the Venezuelan Minister of the Exterior, Gen. Andueza Palacio, and has previously held several minor positions under the new Government. He is a native Venezuelan, but has spent much time traveling in Europe, and has visited this city several times on pleasure trips. He speaks little English.

Col. Gonzalez did not fight in the last revolution because he was out of the country at the time. He won his military title in the Guzman-Blanco war. He is about fifty years old, tall, and a typical Spaniard in appearance, with black hair and mustache slightly tinged with gray. He said in regard to the revolt now in progress against Castro, which is led by Gen. José Manuel Hernandez, that it was really of little importance, and that Hernandez had at the present time not more than 500 men, poorly armed and but half clad. The last news he received before the Philadelphia sailed from La Guayra was that Hernandez had been routed on Dec. 9. Col. Gonzalez believes that Hernandez is now somewhere in the neighborhood of Valencia, and is confident that peace will be established by New Year's Day.

Though Castro has held the reins of government since Oct. 24, he still remains Provisional President, but Col. Gonzalez says the people will elect him President as soon as peace is restored. Hernandez, he says, was offered by Castro and accepted the post of Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, yet on the following day he left Caracas with 1,000 men, and took the field against him. Castro at once sent 3,000 men after him.

There is no Venezuelan Minister in Washington at present. Col. Gonzalez says that Señor Bolet Peraza, confidential agent of the Provisional Government in the United States, whose office is at 40 Broadway, in all likelihood will be appointed very shortly to this place, which he held under a former Administration.

Col. Gonzalez said there was no foundation for the rumors of war between Venezuela and Colombia because of the aid Castro is supposed to have given to the revolutionists there in return for services which they rendered him against his predecessor, Andrade. He denied that Castro helped the Colombian revolutionists.

It has been said that Castro is not very friendly to Americans, and in proof of this is cited the fact that several leading American merchants signed a petition to Castro asking him to retain Antonio Delfino as Consul General in this city, a position he has held for some time. Among the signers were John D. Rockefeller and Flint, Eddy & Co., but the document was not even acknowledged. Col. Gonzalez said he knew nothing about the petition, but he knew that Castro had the warmest feelings for the United States, especially as the first diplomat to call upon him upon his elevation to the head of the Government was the United States Minister to Venezuela.

Revolutionists are reported to have captured Maracaibo, and the port is closed. Col. Gonzalez said this was true, but on the day he left 3,000 men on three transports under command of Gen. Julio Sarria had left La Guayra for that place, and he had no doubt but that they were now in possession. In fact, he did not believe that the insurgents waited until their arrival, as the city is not a strategic point. The trouble at Maracaibo, he said, was nothing more than an uprising in the barracks.

Some of Col. Gonzalez's statements do not agree with dispatches which have reached this city in regard to the Venezuelan situation. The latest news reports indicate that Hernandez has about 10,000 men in the field in different parts of the country, and that he himself is near Valencia, where an important battle is expected shortly, and that in the State of Los Andes, where Castro was born, 1,000 men under Gens. Rangel and Morales, who were in charge of the Government troops when Castro made his fight against Andrade, have taken arms for Hernandez, as have others who served under the deposed President.

Col. Gonzalez will call upon Mr. Delfino this morning to demand the surrender to him of the Consulate at 17 State Street.

WOODRUFF STILL A CANDIDATE.

Denies Hanna Frowned Upon His Nomination as Vice President.

Lieut. Gov. Woodruff denied last night that there was any truth in a report from Washington printed in a local newspaper that he had had a talk with Senator Hanna while in Washington recently in which the latter told him he was opposed to his nomination for Vice President next year.

"It is an excellent newspaper story," said Mr. Woodruff. "I saw Mr. Hanna frequently during my stay in Washington, and we had several conversations. I am certain that Mr. Hanna told no one what passed between us, and I know that I have not."

Mr. Woodruff is still a candidate for the nomination, although it is reported that the national leaders favor the selection of Secretary of War Elihu Root. Well informed politicians declare that the Lieutenant Governor has pinned his hopes to the organization in this State. If New York is permitted to name the candidate he hopes that he will have the support of the organization and win the prize.

Reported Position for J. M. Gray.

Brooklyn politicians were interested yesterday by a report to the effect that John Morrissey Gray, who was defeated for Register by James R. Howe in the last election, has been slated to succeed Sheriff-elect William Walton as Deputy Commissioner of the Department of Public Buildings, Lighting, and Supplies. The report is not credited in certain quarters, however, where it is said the position has been promised to Councilman Doyle for one of his constituents.

FIFTY YEARS MAN AND WIFE.

Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Baer Celebrate Their Golden Wedding.

Fifty years ago—Dec. 17, 1849—Abraham Baer of 232 East Eighty-second Street, then in his twenties, married Miss Bertha Hirsch at Bromberg, Germany. Yesterday the couple celebrated their golden wedding anniversary by receiving a large party of friends at their home. Congratulations were accompanied with presents and at 6 o'clock the guests partook of a dinner, at which further expressions of good will were uttered and the health of the aged couple was drunk.

Mr. and Mrs. Baer have lived twenty-eight years in this country. Mr. Baer was formerly a clothing merchant in this city, but retired many years ago. Besides two sons and five daughters, Mr. and Mrs. Baer have twenty-two grandchildren. They are members of the Congregation Atereth Israel in East Eighty-second Street.

Quiet Sunday in Hoboken.

For the first time in many years the saloons of Hoboken were closed yesterday—as to the front doors. It was by no means a dry Sunday, nowever, as the side doors afforded all the accommodations needed by the thirsty. There was no performance at the Lyric Theatre, nor was there any music at the saloons along the river-front streets. The police authorities said they did not intend to allow any Grand Jury to find a second indictment against them on the charge that they permitted the Sunday laws to be violated.

Burglar Shoots Chief of Police.

FARGO, N. D., Dec. 17.—Chief of Police Murphy of Moorhead, Minn., was shot today while attempting to arrest a burglar named Collins. Collins shot and ran, but fell, dropping his revolver, with which Murphy shot him in the head. Both men are in a hospital at the point of death.

Vermont's Centenarian Entertains.

BENNINGTON, Vt., Dec. 17.—Thompson A. Barnes, the oldest man in Northern Vermont, to-day rounded out a full century by entertaining 106 relatives at a dinner.

TO ADVANCE FREIGHT RATES.

Railways Will Increase Tariffs from 20 to 50 Per Cent.—Action May Affect Retail Prices.

CHICAGO, Dec. 17.—The Chronicle tomorrow will say:

"One of the most radical and general advances ever made in freight rates will go into effect on all the railroads east and west of Chicago on Jan. 1.

"Thousands of articles of every-day consumption will be affected, and the increase will average 35 to 40 per cent., the jump on many classes reaching 50 per cent. The contemplated action of the railroad officers has aroused the shipping interests of the country, and vigorous protests are being made against the sweeping rise.

"The shippers say that if the carrying charges are increased to the extent announced by the railroads it will have the effect of increasing retail prices in every line of trade.

"Sugar, soap, coffee, flour, coal, and farm implements are a few of the articles to be affected. On these, as well as 1,500 other articles, the increase will run from 20 to 40 per cent. The rate on coal, for example, west of Chicago, will be pushed up 25 cents on the ton.

"Rates on cattle will be advanced to 28 cents per 100 pounds and hogs and sheep will go up from 25 to 30 cents and dressed meat to 40 cents per hundred pounds. Hay is another article that will feel the advance severely. The tariff on this will be increased $1.10 per ton.

"On the roads east of Chicago the increase in rates will be accomplished by changing the class under which the articles affected are shipped. This will be done by taking the items out of what are known as 'commodity' classes and putting them in the 'classes.' The roads east of Chicago will do most of the rate advancing.

"Chicago shippers are circulating petitions asking the railroads to defer the announced advances until April 1, to enable them to catch up with their orders. Should the railroad officers refuse, disastrous results to manufacturers and wholesalers will, it is claimed, be the consequence. Shippers in several jobbing centres talk of appealing to the judiciary to prevent what they term the arbitrary action of the railroads.

"Officers of the railroads in defense of their rate-increasing action declare that the advances are made necessary by the increased cost of everything they are compelled to buy, from ties to engines. They further aver that there is no reason why the railroads should continue to quote panic rates while merchants, manufacturers, and others are advancing prices."

INDIANS HAVE A DEATH FEAST.

Perform the Last Rites of Mourning for Their Chief.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Dec. 17.—A death feast was held on the Cattaraugus Indian Reservation at Towanda Saturday afternoon at the conclusion of the mourning period in honor of David Stevens, the Wolf Chieftain who died ten days ago at his home near Lawton's. During this mourning period fire and fresh food have been kept on his grave and a small excavation to the body has been open to let the dead chief's spirit absorb the spirit of the food and warmth.

The feast was held at the late Pagan's home. The braves were slow in assembling, but after a time the Pagan high priest, Herman Crow, arose and turning his back upon the people, began to talk in the native tongue, looking out of the open door, his eyes resting upon the ground. After he had spoken for a time, the effects of the dead chieftain were brought out, the speaker taking piece by piece, talking at length about each one and giving them to the persons appointed to receive them. This ceremony continued until all the clothing, including boots, canes, and satchel, was disposed of.

At the conclusion of the speaking the feast was served. Each squaw brought a pail, which was filled with soup and taken home to be eaten. The pies, cakes, cornbread, and fried cakes were passed around, each person taking his share. The spirit of the departed is also supposed to partake of this feast, this being its last relationship to the tribe before it goes to the happy hunting grounds.

HIGHWAYMAN USED A RAZOR.

Threatened His Victim in an Elevated Railroad Waiting Room.

A highwayman attacking his victim in the Eighteenth Street Station of the Sixth Avenue elevated road yesterday afternoon departed somewhat from conventional methods. Instead of a revolver as a weapon, he used a razor. He was successful, for the victim's only means of defense was an iron cuspidor and he did greater damage to the property of the Manhattan Railway than he did to the robber.

It happened about 1 o'clock in the uptown station. Edward J. Ryan of 348 West Eighteenth Street, the ticket chopper, said he noticed that the two men came up together. They were quarreling over something, and each paid his own fare. Ryan paid no more attention to them for a few minutes. Then his attention was attracted to the men's waiting room by the sounds of a suffle. He looked in and saw one man standing over the other with a razor in his hand, while the man on the floor was handing out some small change as quickly as his cramped position would permit.

Ryan immediately fled for a policeman. He found Patrolman Kreus of the West Thirtieth Street Station. When the policeman and ticket chopper reached the scene, the highwayman was just leaving the waiting room. His victim had arisen, seized an iron cuspidor, and hurled it at his despoiler. So poor was his aim, however, that the cuspidor crashed through the window and came uncomfortably close to Policeman Kreus's head.

The highwayman was seized and taken to the West Thirtieth Street Station. He gave his name as William Dalton, thirty-five years old, and said he lived in the Borough of Richmond. He is colored. His victim said he was Bynum Murphy, of 127 West Twenty-seventh Street. He, too, is a negro. He said he had surrendered all the money he had—about a dollar. That sum, in small change, was found on Dalton. The latter was charged with highway robbery. The police say both Dalton and Murphy are known to them as suspicious characters. They, however, did not detain Murphy.

GIRL DEFIES POLICE.

With Capture Imminent, She Attempts to Drown Herself.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 17.—Mary M. Bowles, an eighteen-year-old girl, a ward of the State Charity Board, is in the Everett lock-up charged with larceny. The Bowles family is poor, and employment for Mary was procured by the authorities in the family of C. A. Emery. On last Wednesday night Mrs. Emery's daughter was married, and the display of wedding gifts, which included gold coin, tempted the girl to theft and flight.

Early on the following morning she gathered up several of the bride's dresses and the coin and took the train for Boston. She left the train at Brockton and came the rest of the way by street cars. The Everett police were watching her mother's house when she arrived and entered it.

The girl saw the policeman and escaped by leaping from a second story window.

With an officer at her heels the girl ran across open fields to a pool of stagnant water covered with a thin coating of ice. Across this she tried to go, but sank to her waist. Then she defied the police and she she would never be caught alive. The quick work of the officers alone kept the girl from carrying out her threat of suicide.

The girl told the matron that she had planned to visit her mother for a few hours and then to go to Nova Scotia.

KILLED BY NEGRO OFFICER.

Charleston Policeman Prevented the Rescue of Prisoners.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Dec. 17.—Officer Robert Hutchinson, colored, when attracted to a yard in Smith Street to-night by screams and pistol shots, found a negro woman, who claimed to have been beaten by her husband, John Heyward. The officer was unable to get at the facts in the case and arrested the pair. As they were proceeding out of the gate three men, Daniel Heyward, Alonzo Heyward, and Daniel Coafum, rushed out of a house, and attempted to take the prisoners from Hutchinson.

As Daniel Heyward came up the policeman knocked him down with his club. The others crowded and struck Hutchinson to the ground, cutting his overcoat to ribbons, beating and bruising him with his club, which they had taken. The officer drew his pistol and fired three times from the ground. Alonzo Heyward was killed and Coafum was shot in the head. The woman was also shot in the leg.

LIBRARY DOORS TO CLOSE

Sunday Loans Stopped by City's Cut in Appropriations.

CHILDREN CHIEF SUFFERERS

Officers of the Free Circulating Institution Explain Work of Their Branches and Their Dilemma.

As a result of the cutting down by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment of the allowance made by the city to the New York Free Circulating Library, a notice was conspicuously posted yesterday in all of the eleven branches throughout the city of the library that they would be closed on Sundays. The Trustees, at a meeting held last Tuesday, decided that this was one of the simplest ways of making a retrenchment. The notice follows:

"On account of the small allowance by the city for the year 1900, this library will be closed on Sundays on and after Dec. 24, 1899."

For the library $92,000 was spent last year in running expenses, $82,000 of which came from the city and $15,000 from private sources. This year the Board of Estimate and Apportionment allowed the library only $61,500 in spite of an increased circulation and the establishment of a new branch at Chatham Square. The closing of the libraries on Sundays will save about $5,000 in wages of substitutes, heat, and lighting, and the purchase of new books will be reduced 20 per cent. as a further retrenchment.

J. Morris Wing, General Librarian, when seen at his home, 303 East Eighteenth Street, last night, in regard to the closing of the libraries, said that still further retrenchments were being considered by the Trustees in order to get through the year without ending with a deficit.

"We are like a big mercantile house," said he, "which has suddenly and unexpectedly found that banks won't take its paper. We had been counting on a certain income for the year, and had established a new branch and made other plans for expanding the work of the library, when we found that our income had been cut down by a big fraction. There was nothing to do but retrench."

The cutting down of the allowance of the New York Free Circulating Library was the result of a change in the policy of the city's financial board in regard to institutions of its character. This library is not the only one that has suffered. The Aguilar Free Library, being a large concern, has also been cut from $40,000 to $28,000, and will have to practice economy. The laws of the State permit the Board of Estimate and Apportionment to allow two free circulating libraries a maximum of 10 cents on each volume of their certified circulation. The State Board of Regents determines what the certified circulation is, and the Board of Estimate and Apportionment bases its allowance upon the figure certified to.

When the board came to make up the budget for 1900 a new scale was decided on. It was determined that libraries should receive their allowance on a sliding scale favoring the small institutions. For the first 10,000 volumes of circulation 10 cents a volume was allowed. A cent a volume less was deducted from the rate over 10,000 volumes. The allowance on 50,000 volumes of circulation figures out just about 8 cents a volume.

The certified circulation of the New York Free Circulating Library last year was 1,200,000, and the allowance for that number figures out 5½ cents on each volume. The Aguilar Library is the next largest circulating library, and the only one affected to any great extent.

The State certifies only to the books loaned to individuals to be taken from the library. No credit has been given for books used in the reading rooms. The State has never recognized the "traveling library" system established by the society. In accordance with this system, small libraries have been furnished, the books frequently being changed, to fire engine houses, to the public schools when asked for, and to study clubs. A system of "home libraries" has also been in vogue for some time, which provides for small libraries in crowded tenement houses. These loans of books were made at the society's own expense.

The estimated expense for this year was $90,000. The estimated income since the Board of Estimate and Apportionment's action is $77,000. It costs more to circulate the books than the city has allowed, to say nothing of the cost of books.

The library has property to the value of half a million dollars, the gift of members of the society. Of the 146,837 regular borrowers from the library over 90 per cent. are children. The percentage of children borrowing from the new Chatham Branch is much higher than this.

Mr. Wing said last night that the society could meet its expenses this year on an allowance of eight cents a volume, but Mayor Van Wyck had informed a committee that waited on him after the budget was announced that the budget having been passed it could not be amended now. The society appeared before the Board of Estimate and Apportionment at the public hearing given to charitable institutions and stated its needs, but was not informed of the action of the board until after the budget was adopted, action having been taken in executive session.

FOUND HIS MISTAKE AND DIED.

Bookkeeper Worked on Sunday and Expired on the Way Home.

Farnk Lencioni, a bookkeeper employed by a catering firm at 867 Sixth Avenue, was seized with a hemorrhage while on his way home from work last night. He was carried to a drug store at Sixth Avenue and Forty-eighth Street, where he died before a physician could be called.

Lencioni was thirty-five years old. He lived with his mother, whom he supported, at 163 West Forty-eighth Street. He had been in the employ of the Sixth Avenue caterer for twelve years and earned a good salary. A year ago he caught a severe cold which developed into consumption. The money he had been able to save was soon spent for medical treatment, and the disease progressed as his bank account grew smaller. Tied to his desk by the necessity of earning a living, the sick man worked yesterday to find an error which prevented his books from balancing Saturday night. The mistake was discovered about nine o'clock, and his death followed a few minutes later.

THE ORIENT WANTS LUMBER.

Pacific Coast Mill Men, However, Cannot Get Vessels to Carry It.

Special to The New York Times.

TACOMA, Washington, Dec. 17.—Puget Sound lumber men are unable to fill large orders for the Orient because of the scarcity of vessels to carry lumber across the Pacific. Charter rates are very high, reaching $20 per 1,000 feet to Liverpool.

Manager Palmer of the Vancouver Mills says that 50,000,000 feet, aggregating forty cargoes, could be sold for China and Siberia if vessels were available. Russian Government agents are in the market to buy 9,000,000 feet for Spring delivery at Vladivostock. The Chinese imperial railways are seeking 10,000,000 feet for Shanghai delivery, while much larger quantities of ties and car-building material are wanted at Tien-Tsin for North China railroads.

The mills can readily furnish the lumber, but dare not risk insuring delivery. The demand from South Africa, South America, Australia, Hawaii, and Europe is also very heavy. Lumbermen predict large price advances in the near future.

CHILD CAUSES FOUR DEATHS.

Throws Powder Into a Fire and Causes an Explosion.

LOUISA, Ky., Dec. 17.—At Ailance Post Office, Floyd County, Nelson Hamilton was pouring out some gunpowder from a keg, when his four-year old son picked up a small amount and tossed it into the fire. The explosion threw some embers into the pile of powder and a terrific explosion followed. The father and little son and two older children, who were in the room, were knocked insensible. The ceiling was lifted from its place, the walls spread, and the upper part of the house came down and stopped about half way on the walls, thus fastening all the doors securely.

When the oldest daughter regained consciousness sufficiently to realize that the house was in flames she tried to open a door, but at once saw the hopelessness of such an effort and began to scream for help. A neighbor arrived in time to burst in a door and get the tortured persons out, but they were so badly burned that all died within a few hours.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

While it was in his official capacity that Randolph Guggenheimer, President of the Municipal Council, appeared at the meeting of the Household Economic Association to make an address a few days ago, he takes something more than a superficial interest in such matters, for he has made cooking a sort of hobby. Mr. Guggenheimer lives well and knows how to do it, as chefs who have had to do with preparing dinners he has given will attest. No steward will do for Mr. Guggenheimer when an important dinner is on. He deals directly with the chef then, and there is rarely a conference of this sort at which the lawyer does not have a timely suggestion to make as to the component parts of the menu. If it was necessary he could go to the kitchen and prepare many of the dishes he orders, though it is in the composition of sauces and gravies that he is at his best. He could probably give Hermann Oelrichs a lively turn at preparing a dish of terrapin, regarding the composition of which the two are pretty well agreed. Mr. Guggenheimer finds recreation in fussing about where cooking is in progress, and he was able, long ago, to graduate with honors from the chafing-dish class.

There is a young man up town with a fondness for pets that are a bit out of the ordinary. A friend traveling in the West Indies forwarded to him a mongoose, and with this addition to his menagerie he was happy. Two weeks ago another arrived, and now the owner of the menagerie is miserable. He does not know whether to call the two "mongooses," or to refer to them as "mongeese." Just now he does this sort of thing when he meets an acquaintance who is familiar with his fad:

"You know that mongoose that Tom sent me last Summer? Well, he has sent me another, and they are a lively pair, I assure you."

"What are you going to do with them, raise mon—, eh, whatever you call 'em, for the market?"

"Can't do that, you know, for both of my mon—, whatever you call 'em, are males."

"Better kill one of them at once then, a fellow'll know what to call one of them, but when it comes to referring to more than that single one you'll have everybody crazy trying to guess which is the right thing as between mongeese and mongooses."

"Does it last well?" asked the bustling little woman of her dignified companion on a Broadway car.

"Never saw anything last like it," replied the questioned one. "It lasts like the Widow Cruse's oil, as the Good Book says."

And then the dignified woman wondered what a couple of people who overheard her were smiling at.

"If there is one thing that makes me madder than another about this whole street car business," said one of the strap-hangers in an Eighth Avenue car that was headed for its Polo Ground terminus, "it is the cool way in which the street car employes who are either going from or going to work will monopolize the seats in a car and allow paying passengers to stand. Look at the deadheads in this car and at the number of others that are standing. It is not an unfair example of the sort of thing that one may see on this particular line most any day of the week." One side of the car had five burly men in full uniform of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company, and nearly opposite were three others also seated. Two women separated the latter batch from two policemen in full uniform who, having been relieved from duty, were comfortably seated and on their way home. It was late at night, but not too late for the car to be packed and to have as its occupants a number of ladies on their way to their homes from the theatres, apparently, after the enjoyment of an after-the-show supper. Five ladies were standing, and the conductor of the car saw no reason why he should ask the company's employes to stand and allow the women to be seated. Evidently there is need of some sort of a regulation for the control of the manners of the company's employes when they are not on duty, but are yet on the cars of the company that employs them. It would not be a bad idea for Police Commissioners to give the patrolmen a few lessons in good manners while they are off post and riding for nothing on cars, particularly when citizens who have no free privileges are compelled to stand in the same cars. "Street car hogs" are thick enough without having their number added to by these wearers of uniforms.

One of the best-known lawyers in town suggests that it would be a proper thing for the leaders of fashion in the city to institute the fashion of wearing the crush opera hat on Sundays when going to and from church services. "The tall silk hat," says he, "is just as much of a nuisance at the church as it is at the opera or the theatre so that every reason that applies for taking the crush hat to a place of amusement applies as to wearing it at church. Then, should the fashion be adopted, aside from the comfort for the wearer, it would be a sort of badge that a man was on his way to church and was not out on a walk for the purpose of 'giving the girls a treat.' The crush hat is a sort of badge of fashion, showing that the wearer is accustomed to the usages of society, at least. The scheme would have economic merit as well, for a crush hat is a good rainy day hat, which the silk one is not, and should the idea be taken up it would be a good thing for the hatters, for every well-dressed man would have a crush hat that would be made in conformity with the prevailing fashion just as he now has a silk hat for business wear. Push the thing along, Mr. Heard About Town, and when the leaders in fashion adopt the thing there will be a host of followers of the style who would adopt it as a matter of comfort and for appearance sake, if for no other reason."

"There stands a good example of one of the self-made men in this country," said one of a party chatting in the Sinclair House, and indicating Martin McEniry, a wealthy brewer from Cohoes, Albany County. "Twenty-five years ago," he continued, "Mr. McEniry reached Albany with 25 cents in his pockets and a determination to make his way in the world as the rest of his capital. He had no acquaintance in the capital city, but in less than twenty-four hours he had secured a position as teamster for the late ex-Congressman Terrence Quinn, who operated a large brewery. Very shortly afterward the main building of the brewery was destroyed by an explosion, and McEniry was put to work with others gathering the bricks and stacking them up with other débris. One noon hour McEniry, who is a fine penman, occupied some of his leisure time in marking a number of joists with the name of the owner in chalk. 'Who wrote that?' asked Mr. Quinn of his Superintendent. 'A greenhorn,' was the reply. 'Send him to me,' ordered Brewer Quinn. McEniry, fearing he had committed an offense that would cost him his job, appeared before Mr. Quinn, who asked: 'Can you keep books?' 'Yes,' replied the astonished McEniry. 'And can you write as well with a pen as with chalk?' 'I think so.' The next morning McEniry stepped into a vacancy in the brewery office. Promotion came rapidly, and soon he was Superintendent at a salary of $6,000 a year. He remained with Mr. Quinn and his successor, ex-Mayor Nolan of Albany, and today is part owner of the brewery and owns other property valued at more than $100,000."

"High life below stairs," as it has been called, is very much interested in a competition set down for Wednesday evening at the Brooklyn Riding and Driving Club, which is the swell club for that sort of thing in the big borough across the bridge. Coachmen employed by the members of the club are to have a chance to compete for a prize for the most skillful driving done on the tan-bark ring of the club. There are a number of coachmen over there who think they are able to drive even better than can their masters, and the contest will be a hot one. Coachmen this side of the river are even taking a lively interest in the trials, and some of them have been engaged during the past week in giving points to men who are to compete. At least one of these coachmen who is anxious to get the prize has been taking lessons at one of the riding academies here of one of the professional teachers who drives at the Madison Square Garden Horse Show. He thinks that when it comes to a question of grace in handling the whip and the lines he will come out ahead of his competitors by reason of this course of instruction. As to driving between obstacles, this particular coachman has no fears, as it is said that he coached his employer in that sort of thing before the latter made his début as a fancy driver at one of the horse shows a few years ago

Three redheads, a couple of broadbills, and a half dozen black ducks formed the bag of a happy hunter who was out on the Great South Bay for some shooting on Friday. The flight of ducks has been small as yet, he reports, as the weather has not been cold enough to force the ducks well within the hunting grounds. It will take a good cold snap to bring the shooting up to what it has been some years in that region, and the old hunters says the season will be a very short one. The first flight of wild geese for the year was reported on Thursday afternoon, the birds putting in an appearance nearly a month later than they did a year ago.

PRISONER JUMPS FROM TRAIN.

Insurance Swindler and Forger in Custody of a Sheriff Disappears En Route.

Special to The New York Times.

DUBUQUE, Iowa, Dec. 17.—Forger James H. Morton, alias Rogers, alias Hall, en route from Boston to Sioux City with his wife and Sheriff Davenport of Woodbury County, jumped from an Illinois Central train west of Dubuque last night and is a fugitive.

Morton, who is about thirty-five years old, appeared in Sioux City about two months ago as solicitor for a reputable life insurance company. Nothing was known of his antecedents. Dec. 4 he took the application of C. J. Holman of Sargent's Bluffs, near Sioux City. Holman paid $100 cash and gave a note for $100.86.

On the margin was printed a recital that the note was to be paid in one year, but should be void if Holman survived the year. Morton clipped off this recital, raised the note to $2,100.86, and discounted it at a Sioux City bank. The bank paid him $800, reserving payment of the remainder, according to custom, until the note should be verified.

Holman was notified next day that the note was in the bank. He hastened to Sioux City, pronounced the note a forgery, and Sheriff Davenport took the trail. He traced Morton to Chicago, then to Montreal, Springfield, and Boston, where he caught him. Morton consented to come without a requisition. The Sheriff never let him out of his sight until the train passed Dubuque. Then he stepped out of the stateroom to converse with a friend.

When he returned Morton had entered the toilet room. He tried the door and found it locked, called for the porter's keys, opened the door, and found the window of the toilet room up, and the man gone. Sheriff Davenport telegraphed in all directions and then came to Dubuque and communicated with the interior by telephone. Davenport believes Morton has found shelter near Earley.

SWINDLER USED ROACH'S NAME.

Bogus Son of the Shipbuilder Unmasked on Arrival of W. J. Leland.

Herman W. Donath, thirty-two years old, of 1,328 Eighth Street, Northwest, Washington, D. C., was arrested in the Grand Hotel last night for passing a forged check for $3 on that house. He had registered as John B. Roach, Jr., of Chester, Penn., a son of Mr. Roach, the shipbuilder.

When William J. Leland, the proprietor of the hotel, came home from Philadelphia last night, he happened to mention to the clerk that he had a pleasant day.

"I called on my old friend, Roach, the shipbuilder," he said. "Mrs. Roach is a cousin of mine."

"Why young Roach is stopping here," said the clerk, showing Mr. Leland the register and the entry made by "Mr. Roach."

"Not on your life," said Mr. Leland. "There isn't any John B. Roach, Jr., living, if I know the Roaches, and I guess I do."

The clerk assured Mr. Leland that he was mistaken. Young "Roach" had talked with him, seemed to know all about Roach the shipbuilder, and had even told him of several vessels recently launched by his "father's" firm. He displayed a check drawn on the First National Bank of Chester, Penn., for $3, signed "John B. Roach, Jr.," and tendered it to the clerk in payment of his bill.

Mr. Leland communicated with Sergt. Walsing of the West Thirtieth Street Station, and detectives were sent to the hotel. They waited in the lobby until the bogus Roach came in, and then arrested him.

His identity was first disclosed by some letters and telegrams in his pocket, and when these were produced he admitted who he was. One letter was from his father, August Donath of Washington, D. C., and was full of good advice. The writer seemed to suspect that all was not well with his son, who had written to him that he was employed as a commercial traveler. The father reminded his son that "honesty is the best policy" and included several other equally wholesome maxims.

When Donath's room was searched nothing but a dress suit case was found. It contained a silver knife and fork. A key marked "Astor House" was found in one of his pockets.

FEAR LOST BARGE WENT DOWN.

Searching Vessels Give Up Hope of Finding the Missing Whaleback.

CHICAGO, Dec. 17.—A dispatch from Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., says:

"Whaleback barge Hundred Fifteen, which has been missing on Lake Superior since Wednesday last, was to-day given up for lost, with her crew of nine men. The only names known of the lost are: Capt. Arthur Boyce, Mate Michael Stynop, Cook William Buckner.

"The steamer Colgate Hoyt, which had the lost barge in tow, gave up the search for her to-day and passed down through the locks bound for Lake Erie. The tug Vigilant, which was also searching for the Hundred Fifteen, likewise gave it up. While it is likely that the whaleback company will send out its steamers from Duluth in a further search, the crew of the Hoyt have no doubt but the barge went down in the great storm of Wednesday."

With the rest of the whaleback fleet, the lost barge passed to the Rockefeller interests in the general shakeup of vessel property in October. There was no insurance on either vessel or cargo.

STATE EDUCATIONAL PLANS.

Senator White Will Devote His Time to Passage of His Bill.

SYRACUSE, Dec. 17.—Senator Horace White said to-night that he proposed to principally devote his attention, during the coming session of the State Legislature, to the passage of an educational measure in conformity with the report of the commission in the matter of unification of the educational departments of the State.

The bill as proposed by Senator White embodies the report in its entirety, and makes it a part of his educational bill of last Winter. The report is in exact accord with his ideas, and as he would have personally preferred to have had last Winter's bill. It also is assured of the determined support of Gov. Roosevelt.

LEMAIRES COMING HERE.

The Lemaire Optical Company, with a capital of $1,000,000, will file articles of incorporation at Albany in a few days, and will establish two factories in the United States, which, it is expected, will give employment to 5,000 men. One establishment will be at Franklin Park, Ill., where a tract of land has been leased, and the second at a point in Connecticut. Machinery valued at $500,000 will be imported for the plants. Offices and show rooms will be opened Jan. 10 in this city at 30 East Twenty-third Street.

The Lemaire Company, which has factories in England and France, is entering the United States as a manufacturer because of the heavy duties on their goods, ranging from 60 to 65 per cent. The glass for the lenses will be imported, and ground and mounted here.

Coffee Ship at New Orleans.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 17.—The British steamer Willowdene, from Rio de Janeiro via Santos, coffee laden, arrived at the Mississippi quarantine station to-night. Her crew of twenty-five men is in excellent health, and there was no sickness aboard during the voyage. The Cotton Exchange and other bodies are urging the Board of Health to refuse to permit the ship and cargo to come to the city even after disinfection and detention. The Board of Health is not certain of its powers in prohibiting entry to a healthy ship. The ship has 43,000 bags of coffee aboard.

Death of Capt. Luke Smith.

Capt. LUKE SMITH of Acton, Mass., died yesterday in his eighty-seventh year. He gained his military title in the Civil War. He was one of the founders of the Bunker Hill Historical Society and its first President.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Samuel Conover.

Samuel Conover, sixty-two years old, a stock broker, who was formerly President of the Produce Bank, which went into liquidation some years ago, died Saturday at his residence, 200 West One Hundred and Seventh Street, of apoplexy. Mr. Conover enjoyed good health until Dec. 11, when he had an apoplectic stroke while sitting in his office, in Leonard Street.

He was born in this city and educated in the public schools. When a young man he became identified with banking interests, his first position having been in the Merchants' National Bank. Later he became connected with the Fourth National Bank and rose to the position of paying teller, and then he became President of the Produce Bank and remained with it until it went into liquidation. In 1879 he was a candidate for Mayor of this city, and was defeated by Edward Cooper. He served a term as Park Commissioner and was once elected to the Assembly from the White Plains District. A widow and one daughter, Mrs. Florence Bostwick, survive him. Funeral services will be held at his late residence to-morrow evening.

James Nelson Pidcock.

Ex-Congressman James Nelson Pidcock of New Jersey, who was a power in State politics for many years, died at his home, in Whitehouse, yesterday from paralysis. He was stricken Saturday night while seated at his desk in his library. Mr. Pidcock was born at Mechanicsville on Feb. 8, 1836. He became the leader of the Hunterdon County Democrats thirty years ago, and in 1876 was elected a State Senator. In 1884 he was elected to Congress from the old Fourth District and served four years. After retiring from Congress he remained active in politics, but the redistricting of the State in 1890 cut up the districts so that he lost control of the Congressional district. He was President of the Rockaway Valley Railroad.

William Floyd-Jones.

William Floyd-Jones, a member of the firm of Worden & Co., bankers and brokers, died Saturday at his residence, 128 East Thirty-fourth Street, from typhoid fever. Mr. Floyd-Jones was thirty-two years old. He was the youngest son of the late William Floyd-Jones of Massapequa, L. I., and was descended from the old Long Island family of Floyd-Jones, whose homestead at Massapequa has stood for over two centuries. He was a member of the Union Club. He leaves a wife, who was Miss Lillian Ferris of this city, and a son, one year old. The funeral will be held at the Church of the Incarnation to-morrow morning. The interment will be at Massapequa.

Hannibal Smith.

Hannibal Smith, a prominent lawyer in New York State, died at his home at Watertown yesterday, aged sixty years. He leaves a wife, two sons, and a daughter. He was born in Oswego, N. Y. He was graduated from Hamilton College in the class of '66. In 1870 he was elected Principal of the High School and Superintendent of Schools of Watertown. In 1874 he formed a law partnership with Gen. Bradley Winslow, which continued until 1877. He was a member of the State Commission which drafted a charter for cities of the third class, and was a Director and Treasurer of the Standard Publishing Company.

James W. Reis.

James W. Reis, general manager of the National Steel Company, died yesterday at his home, in New Castle, Penn., aged about thirty-five years. The cause of his death was typhoid fever, from which he had been suffering for some weeks.

He was a brother of William E. Reis, President of the National Steel Trust. He was looked upon as one of the most promising of the young steel manufacturers of the country.

William Vance Marquis.

William Vance Marquis, who was Lieutenant Governor of Ohio under the Campbell administration, died suddenly of heart trouble yesterday at Bellefontaine, Ohio, in the office of Dr. Chalfant, upon whom he had called for treatment. Mr. Marquis was seventy-two years of age. He had been engaged in mercantile and banking business here for many years.

Walter Shanly.

Walter Shanly, a well-known civil engineer, died yesterday at the St. Lawrence Hall, Montreal, where he resided. He constructed the Hoosac Mountain Tunnel, and was General Manager of the Grand Trunk for four years. He was associated with the development of the St. Lawrence Canal system. He was in his eighty-first year.

Obituary Notes.

ISAAC B. FARRAN of Malone, N. Y., supposed to be the oldest man in his county, died Saturday. He was ninety-nine years old. Up to a few weeks ago he frequently was seen driving his team about town.

ROMLO BALCAZAR died Saturday of Bright's disease at the French Hospital, West Thirty-fourth Street. Mr. Balcazar was sixty years old. He was a native of Calle, and came to New York in 1874. He was a dealer in straw goods imported from South America.

ELIZABETH R. MACGREGOR died in Washington Saturday morning of heart disease. She was the widow of James C. MacGregor of Cincinnati, Ohio, and the mother of James MacGregor, an attorney of this city, and of Mrs. James Byrne, whose husband is a partner in the law firm of Hornblower, Byrne & Miller. The funeral and burial will take place in Cincinnati.

WILLIAM MILLS, a paint merchant of Brooklyn, died yesterday of heart disease at his home in Willmore Place. Although born in Ireland, Mr. Mills spent the greater part of his life in Brooklyn. He was an earnest advocate of improvements in the Williamsburg section. He leaves a widow and several children, all adults. He was an Episcopalian, a Mason, and a member of the Seymour Club of the Fourteenth Ward.

This company has secured all the rights and patents of Oliver L. Gardner for the manufacture of Artificial Lumber.

This material has been manufactured for a period of twelve years and is gradually taking the place of lumber for inside decorations on railroad cars and all classes of buildings.

It can be used as a substitute for plaster and laths in buildings, as it is sound proof and temperature proof, and it IS FIRE PROOF.

The economies and savings in the construction of cars and buildings, and many other things heretofore made of wood and plaster, made possible by the use of this lumber, are very large.

It is manufactured from a WASTE material of which there is an unlimited supply, and consequently capable of earning large dividends, owing to its low cost of construction.

The engineers of the Guaranty Development Company, 10 Wall Street, New York, have made a full examination of the nature of this artificial lumber and the uses to which it can be put, and they report that its value as a commercial article is practically unlimited. A detailed report of this examination can be seen at their office.

PATENTS

New patents have recently been obtained, and applied for, covering a process for the manufacture of this material in the United States, Canada, Mexico, Great Britain, France, Germany, Belgium, Austria, Russia, and Australia, which gives to this company an ABSOLUTE MONOPOLY.

Careful, conscientious work, which has cost over FOUR HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS in cash, has been put into this enterprise to develop it up to its present finished condition so that, after long usage, it now stands as a recognized commercial commodity by architects, builders, decorators, and manufacturers of railroad cars, steamships, and boxes, and there is positively no question regarding its practicability and future position as a substitute for wood in all its uses and decorations for inside work. The company now has orders which guarantee a continuous demand larger than it is possible to fill with the present plant.

The gradual decrease in the supply of wood in the world, and the increase in the demand for same, particularly the grade that is used for inside decorations, is a well-known fact, and consequently this substitute for wood is much more valuable as a commercial commodity, under these conditions, than any new commercial proposition has been for the past twenty years.

PLANTS

A plant is now erected (fully equipped with machinery) at Barberton, Ohio, for the manufacturing of this material.

A plant will be erected within the vicinity of New York, one in the West, and one in Canada, each with an earning capacity equal to the one at Barberton, Ohio.

FINANCIAL

THE EARNINGS FROM THE BARBERTON PLANT WILL, AFTER PAYING SIX PER CENT. INTEREST ON THE $1,500,000 OF PREFERRED STOCK ISSUED, PAY FIVE PER CENT. ON THE COMMON STOCK ISSUED; AND AFTER THE ERECTION OF THE PLANT IN THE VICINITY OF NEW YORK CITY, IN THE WEST, AND IN CANADA, THE EARNING CAPACITY OF THIS COMPANY WILL BE $1,800,000 ANNUALLY.

Applications are now in hand from prominent European bankers to organize corporations to manufacture and sell this artificial lumber in England, France, and Germany, and as the United States company own and control the foreign patents, a large percentage of the profits of the foreign companies will revert to the Artificial Lumber Company of America.

The books for subscriptions will open on the 18th day of December, and will close on the 23d day of December, 1899, at 3 P. M.

Twenty-five (25%) per cent. of subscriptions are payable on application and the balance on allotment on or before January 8th, 1900.

THE MANCHESTER MARKET.

MANCHESTER, Dec. 17.—Last week's market was strong but quiet. The actual cloth business done was not large, but there was an increased Calcutta demand, which partly was executed, for shirtings and light goods. Fair lines were booked fur Burmah, Java, Karachi, and the minor Indian markets. China was nibbling again, but otherwise there were only small reorders for assortments.

Yarns were fairly active and firm, American yarns being rather dearer, and Egyptian yarns being from ⅛ to ¼ higher, spoiling business.

Rouen reports considerable activity, with an upward tendency in yarns. All kinds of cottons and gray prints, dyed heavily, are under order for months, and prices are rising. Mulhouse reports a fair business in grays, with delivery extending to the end of 1900. Yarns are rather higher, somewhat hindering free sales.

ON THE LONDON EXCHANGE.

LONDON, Dec. 17.—On the Stock Exchange last week Wabash preferred fell 1½ points, Wabash debentures 3¼, Baltimore and Ohio 2¾, Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé 1, Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé preferred 2, Southern Pacific 2¼, Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul 2, Denver and Rio Grande preferred 2, Erie firsts 1¾, Louisville and Nashville 1¾, Norfolk and Western 1¾, Union Pacific 1⅞, Northern Pacific preferred 1⅝, Southern preferred 1½, Denver and Rio Grande 1½, Chesapeake and Ohio 1, Pennsylvania 1, and New York Central and Hudson River 1.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

The security market has reached the point where it is sensitive enough to respond to good news almost as quickly as to bad. Liquidation has been thoroughgoing. Weak accounts have been slaughtered by wholesale. People with thin margins are not being permitted to carry lines of stocks. All this represents marked changes, and among those changes is the fact that raids may no longer be demoralizing, for there are relatively few stocks now being so carried that scarecrow campaigning can dislodge them.

Where Wall Street men met yesterday there was much divergence of opinion as to what might be the opening and subsequent course of to-day's market. Some forecasters were sure that the Treasury Department was to afford "relief" and others predicted such disproof of certain recent disquieting rumors as would inspire renewal of confidence. Contrary views referred to unsettled financial conditions at Boston and the extraordinary tension of depressed feeling at London.

The one fact upon which all agreed was that the bear campaign (or bear foresight) having witnessed even more than was prophesied, may be regarded logically as ended.

Opinions were virtually uniform on one score—that to-day's market was likely to be shaped by the day's own developments.

What shows significantly in some quarters is that operators of exceptional consequence have been preparing in the midst of recent nervousness for the beginning of activity for improvement at the first signal that conditions are normal again. This is especially likely to be disclosed in the iron and steel properties, where the short interest more persistently holds on than elsewhere in the market. American Steel and Wire, American Steel Hoop, Federal Steel, and Tennessee Coal and Iron will be leaders when such a turn comes.

Traders continuing active on the bear side will be likeliest to be attracted by the uncertain situation of stocks of very high price rather than those wherein liquidation has already done so much leveling. Some suggestion of this tendency was disclosed at the close of business on Saturday, when Consolidated Gas suddenly broke sharply.

Quotations from London will be anxiously watched for—and their course may be influential. British consols are become, indeed, just now a worldwide barometer.

CANADA BEING BENEFITED.

J. H. Cass of the Laurentian Hills Asbestos Company of Montreal, Quebec, with connections in this country, says:

"Business in Canada is very good, though prices in some lines are not what, in my opinion, they ought to be. It is not surprising that we are having good times across the line, for it is but a logical consequence of your good times—and that you are having good times my travels through your country have thoroughly convinced me. I notice that prosperity in the United States is invariably followed by prosperity in Canada."

NEW EQUIPMENT.

Among the many orders for new equipments placed by various railroad companies last week are the following:

St. Louis and San Francisco, 400 box cars; Seaboard Air Line, 200 box cars; Canadian Pacific, 200 cars; Cleveland, Lorain and Wheeling, 50 side-dump cars of 80,000 pounds' capacity; Delaware and Hudson, 12 first-class passenger coaches; Chesapeake and Ohio, 25 consolidation locomotives and 1,500 coal cars; Southern, 650 box cars, 1,000 coal and flat cars, 30 passenger coaches, and 41 locomotives; Hocking Valley, 5 switching engines and 6 passenger engines, and Duluth, Messabe and Northern, 7 freight engines.

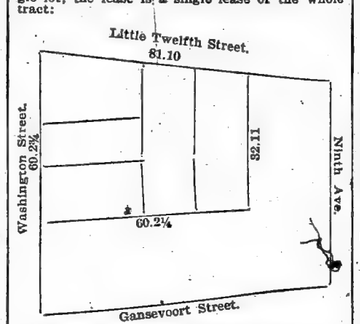
REFEREES' NOTICES.

SUPREME COURT, NEW YORK COUNTY.—PETER L. O'NEILL as administrator of the goods, chattels, and credits of Catherine O'Neill, deceased, plaintiff, against ELIZABETH B. McCLURE and others, defendants.
In pursuance of an interlocutory judgment of partition and sale, duly made and entered in the above-entitled action, and bearing date the 7th day of December, 1899, I, the undersigned, the referee in said judgment named, will sell at public auction at the New York Real Estate Salesroom, No. 111 Broadway, in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 9th day of January, 1900, at 12 o'clock noon of that day, by Herbert A. Sherman, auctioneer, the certain lease, term of years and leasehold premises described in said judgment to be sold and therein described as follows:
A lease made by John Jacob Astor to Michael Lawless and his assigns, bearing date the 16th day of August, 1830, and recorded in the office of the Register of New York County, on the 22nd day of August, 1830, in Liber 1548 of Conveyances, Page 398, and the leasehold premises thereby granted are bounded and described as follows, to wit: All those certain lots of ground situate, lying, and being in the eastwardly side of Washington and the southerly side of Little Twelfth Streets, in the Ninth Ward of the City, County, and State of New York, and being taken together are bounded and described as follows: Beginning at the corner formed by the intersection of the easterly line of Washington Street by the southerly line of Little Twelfth Street, and running thence southwardly along said line of Washington Street, sixty-nine feet two and three quarter inches; thence eastwardly and at right angles or nearly so to the said line of Washington Street, sixty feet two and one quarter inches; thence northwardly to the southerly line of Little Twelfth Street, thirty-two feet eleven inches, and thence westwardly along said line of Little Twelfth Street eighty-one feet ten inches, to the point or place of beginning, be the same more or less, together with the buildings thereon erected, and any renewal or right of renewal of said lease, subject, however, to all existing sub-leases of said property.—Dated New York, December 8th, 1899.
WILLIAM J. A. McKIM, Referee.
HENRY B. CULVER, Attorney for Plaintiff, 120 Broadway, Borough of Manhattan, City of New York.
The following is a diagram of the property to be sold:



The approximate amount of taxes, water rates, assessments, or other liens upon said premises is about $800, which will be allowed out of the purchase money or paid by the referee.—Dated December 8th, 1899.

NEW YORK SUPREME COURT, COUNTY OF New York.—In the matter of the final accounting of WILLIAM T. ESTABROOK as assignee of Ezekiel M. Pritchard and Horace F. Pritchard (E. M. Pritchard & Son) for the benefit of creditors.—Citation for accounting on behalf of assignee.
The People of the State of New York to all persons interested in the estate of Ezekiel M. Pritchard and Horace F. Pritchard, heretofore doing business as co-partners at the City of New York, under the firm name and style of E. M. Pritchard & Son, assigned to William T. Estabrook for the benefit of creditors, send greeting:
You and each of you are hereby cited and required to appear in the New York Supreme Court of the County of New York, at a Special Term thereof, to be held in Part I., for litigated motions, at the County Court House in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 29th day of January, A. D. 1900, at 10:30 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, to show cause why a settlement of the account of the proceedings of William T. Estabrook as assignee of the said Ezekiel M. Pritchard and Horace F. Pritchard, co-partners as aforesaid, should not be had, and if no cause be shown, to attend a settlement of such account.
Witness Hon. Charles H. Van Brunt, Presiding Justice of said court, and the seal of the aforesaid court at the City and for the County and State aforesaid on the 12th day of December, A. D. 1899.

DR. HALL'S PULPIT FILLED

Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church's Call Accepted by Dr. Purves.

THE CONGREGATION PLEASED

President Patton Preached at the Morning Service and Announced the Time of Formal Election.

The Rev. Dr. George T. Purves, Professor of New Testament Literature and Greek Exegesis in Princeton Theological Seminary and pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Princeton, will be the new pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of this city, to succeed the late Rev. Dr. John Hall.

The announcement was made from the pulpit of the Fifth Avenue Church yesterday morning by President Patton of Princeton University, who preached to the congregation, that the session at a meeting held on the evening of Dec. 7 had voted to issue a call to the congregation to meet in the church Wednesday, Dec. 20, at 8 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of electing Dr. Purves as pastor of the church. This announcement, signed by Silas B. Brownell, clerk of the session, closed with the words, "if the way be clear."

The action of the session at its last meeting was taken on the strength of the joint meeting held Dec. 3 by the Pulpit Supply Committee, also known as the Committee of the Congregation and the Session. The result of that meeting is contained in the following official statement given out yesterday:

"At a joint meeting of the Committee of the Congregation and Session acting as a committee of the whole to nominate a suitable person for the pastorate of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, held Dec. 3, 1899, on motion it was unanimously resolved that the session be requested to call a meeting at an early date for the election, if the way be clear, of the Rev. Dr. George T. Purves as pastor. It was further resolved that the Chairman and Mr. Charles Britton be appointed a committee to prepare and report to the session the action of the committee."

At the meeting of the session held Dec. 7 the action of the Committee of the Whole was indorsed unanimously, and H. Edwards Rowland, James Talcott, and William Irwin of the session, and Messrs. Sheldon and William Brookfield from the congregation were appointed a committee to present to the congregation the name of Dr. Purves as the unanimous choice of those having the matter of the selection in charge.

After this meeting, or on Dec. 9, a committee visited Dr. Purves at Princeton and asked him if he would accept a call, the action of the session being unanimous. Nothing then remained to be done except to await Dr. Purves's decision, and then call the congregation together. A favorable answer received by Mr. Rowland from Dr. Purves on Saturday paved the way for the announcement from the pulpit yesterday. This letter Mr. Rowland refused to make public. It will be read Wednesday night to the congregation.

Many of the members of the church expressed their approval of the choice. The selection of a pastor has hung fire so long that the congregation has become weary with the long-drawn-out uncertainty. Expressions were heard to the effect that the congregation will welcome Dr. Purves with open arms.

Dr. Purves is under average height, although well knit and active. He is greatly beloved in Princeton, and every effort has been made by university, seminary, and townspeople to keep him there, the argument being made that his field of usefulness is quite as great in the university town as in guiding the religious destinies of a powerful church in a large city.

Dr. Purves has preached in the church twice, and created, it is said, a very favorable impression. His delivery and mannerisms are essentially different from those of Dr. Hall. Dr. Hall's delivery was deliberate and he had a deep, powerful voice; Dr. Purves is quick and nervous in his delivery, and he speaks with a rapidity that requires close attention. He is noted, however, as a preacher of power and he has originality of thought, with the true Princeton conservatism.

Dr. Purves is forty-seven years old and was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1872. He was graduated from the Theological Seminary in 1876. He first served as pastor of a church in Wayne, Chester County, Penn., and from 1880 to 1886 was at the Boundary Avenue Church, in Baltimore. His next pastorate was at the First Presbyterian Church in Pittsburg. He remained there for six years. He was called to Princeton Theological Seminary from that charge in 1892 to succeed the Rev. Dr. Hodge. At Princeton, Dr. and Mrs. Purves live in the home formerly occupied by President Patton before he became President of the university.

Dr. Purves has lately taken occasion to deny the reports of ill-health which have been freely circulated in this city. He said a few days ago that his health was excellent.

DR. PURVES IS SILENT.

Refuses to Discuss His Call to Fifth Avenue Church.

PRINCETON, N. J., Dec. 17.—The Rev. Dr. Purves, whose proposed departure from this place to accept the pastorate of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church has aroused general opposition here, spoke at the chapel exercises this morning, but made no reference to the question of his call to New York.

When seen later Dr. Purves refused to say anything. All the members of his church and the Faculty of the college and a large number of the undergraduates have asked him to stay.

A CONGREGATION UNDECIDED.

Collegiate Reformed Body May Join the Presbyterian Church.

The congregation which has met for some time in the chapel of New York University, on University Heights, began balloting yesterday to determine whether organization shall be effected as a Presbyterian, or Reformed Protestant Dutch church. The voting will continue through two more Sundays, when it is expected that a sufficient number of ballots will have been cast for final action.

Although brought together by joint action of the Presbytery and the Consistory of the Dutch Reformed Church, the congregation leaned toward the latter, and assumed the name of the Collegiate Reformed Church. Since its foundation, however, the congregation alleges that insufficient interest has been shown in its welfare by the Consistory, and the sentiment has turned toward the Presbytery. It is probable that the vote will be unanimous toward organization as a Presbyterian church.

Cornerstone Laying in Jersey City.

The cornerstone of the new parish house of St. Anthony's Polish Roman Catholic Church, Jersey City, was laid yesterday in the presence of 3,000 persons by the Rev. John A. Sheppard. The building, which will be erected under the direction of the Rev. Julius Kwiatkouski, rector of the church, will be three stories high, and cost $40,000. It will contain a chapel, a school, a billiard and bowling room, and a public hall with stage.

A New Italian Church Down Town.

A new house of worship is to be erected at 359 and 361 Broome Street, for the congregation of the Italian Protestant Episcopal Church of San Salvatore, formerly located at 305, 307, and 309 Mulberry Street, but which has had only temporary quarters since its building was condemned by the city, three years ago, to make way for the widening and extension of Elm Street. The church's rector is the Rev. Alberto Pace.

Ordained as Priests.

The Rev. Stephen Van Rensselaer of New Lenox, Mass., and the Rev. John H. Wilson of Tivoli, N. Y., were ordained as priests of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine yesterday. Bishop Talbot of Central Pennsylvania conducted the service.

TELLS OF CURES AT LOURDES.

Father Edmund Conducts Services at a Brooklyn Grotto.

The Rev. Father Edmund, a lecturer of the Passionate Community, who recently arrived from Lourdes, France, told yesterday at the new French Mission Church of Our Lady of Lourdes, Brooklyn, of the cures he personally observed at the French grotto, and conducted special services at the grotto. Long before 4 o'clock, the time appointed for the services to begin, entrance to the church could not be obtained, so great was the crowd that had come to hear Father Edmund.

When the services began a lighted wax taper was handed to each person present. Then a procession, headed by priests, descended from the altar steps and proceeded down the centre aisle of the church, followed by over 1,200 of those present, carrying the flaming tapers. As the processional began to move, the audience joined in a chorus, singing the hymn of little Bernadette. When the processional party arrived at the grotto, they found grouped about it a number of persons afflicted with incurable diseases.

After the procession had halted at the shrine and the usual exercises had been concluded, Father Edmund told of the many cures which came before his personal observation. He said a well-known society woman of New York whose ailment baffled the knowledge of the leading physicians of the two hemispheres, was cured while he was at Lourdes. Father Edmund, when asked for the name of this woman, refused to give it, however. He further declared that several other prominent New Yorkers have been cured at Lourdes. Numerous cures are said to have been effected at the Church of Our Lady of Lourdes, Brooklyn, but the Mission Fathers will not reveal the names of the persons.

TRADE IN CHRISTMAS TREES.

Extent of the Traffic Here—The Pioneer Dealer.

During the past ten days freight cars have been coming over various roads to this city laden with Christmas trees for the holidays. There are now some 250,000 of these trees, mostly balsam or fir, piled up at different points along the West Street river front. Some thirty men own them.

The industry is one that has been carried on for sixty years past in this city, but it is only within the past twenty years that it has assumed large proportions. Two of the largest dealers, J. G. Piper and E. K. Chapman, have each about 40,000 trees. The trees vary in height from 6 to 30 feet. The 30-foot ones are for churches and for the outside of saloons. The smaller trees average about 75 cents apiece in price. They come from Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and New York. The cutting begins about the 1st of November each year. The dealers employ a number of men at this work.

Mr. Piper said yesterday that this year's prices were as good as usual. He expects before the end of the week to have gotten rid of his immense stock. The last of this week he said prices would be high and the supply scarce.

"Bob" Carr, who is not over seventy-five years old, is said to be the pioneer in the Christmas tree industry. He was employed in it sixty years ago. For a time the trees were stored in Washington Market, but the business grew so great that they had to be stacked up on dock property along the river, the dealers paying the city for the use of the property.

H. G. CADMUS ARRESTED.

City Employe Accused of Causing the Death of John Lynch.

Harry G. Cadmus, a clerk in one of the local public offices in Brooklyn, and a son of William H. N. Cadmus, a former local politician, was admitted to bail yesterday in the Butler Street Police Court on a charge of homicide. He is charged with causing the death of John Lynch of Brooklyn, which occurred Saturday morning.

The men were together in a saloon on the night of Dec. 8 and entered into a dispute over a small bet. According to Cadmus, Lynch was the aggressor. He struck Cadmus several times on the body and in the face. Cadmus struck back, catching Lynch on the point of the chin with his clinched fist. The blow sent Lynch to the floor, causing concussion of the brain.

REV. DR. HARSHA DEPARTS

Resignation Read at the Second Collegiate Reformed Church.

TROUBLE TOO HEAVY TO BEAR

Reports About His Debts, Ill-Health, and Church Opposition Lead to His Retirement.

An unusually large congregation gathered in the Second Collegiate Reformed Church, at One Hundred and Twenty-third Street and Lenox Avenue, yesterday morning. Many persons not members of the church were present, attracted by the publication of articles regarding the expected resignation of the pastor, the Rev. Dr. William Justin Harsha.

The Rev. Dr. J. Elmendorf, pastor of the First Collegiate Reformed Church and senior pastor of the Second Church, conducted the services, and after making the announcements for the week said that he had been instructed by the Consistory to read to the congregation Dr. Harsha's letter of resignation, which was as follows:

For sufficient reasons I ask for leave of absence from my pastoral duties from this date.

I also tender my resignation as pastor of the Second Collegiate Reformed Church, to take effect on Jan. 1, 1900, and beg your acceptance of the same.

I further wish you to unite with me in an application to the Classis of New York for a dissolution of the pastoral relations between the Rev. W. J. Harsha, D. D., and the Collegiate Reformed Church of Harlem.

After reading the letter Dr. Elmendorf said that the Consistory had accepted the resignation at a special meeting held for its consideration, and that the matter would come up for action before the Classis in due time. He then began an invocation, in which he referred to the heavy burden of sorrow which rested upon the congregation, and said that many hearts there were wounded, especially the hearts of those who had been led to accept the Christian faith through the ministrations of the absent pastor. He also prayed that sorrow might make the flock more fervent in their prayers for the absent one that he might have the strength to fulfill every duty, and bear every trial. There were many moist eyes in the congregation, as Dr. Harsha was popular, and in his seven years' pastorate had built up the church wonderfully. Dr. Elmendorf's sermon contained no reference to the affairs of the church.

After the service members of the congregation gathered in knots and discussed the resignation. General regret was expressed by all, and many said that they were disappointed in not having had the opportunity of bidding Dr. Harsha farewell. Dr. Elmendorf, when seen in his apartment at the Hotel Winthrop, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street and Seventh Avenue, last evening, said that the affair was a very sad one, and that regret was expressed on all sides. He said that, considering the situation, Dr. Harsha probably had acted wisely in handing in his resignation. Malicious rumors, he said, had been circulated regarding Dr. Harsha, and these, coupled with poor health and the heavy burden of debt he had shouldered, had proved too much for him.

When asked as to the procedure to be followed now that the resignation had been accepted by the consistory, Dr. Elmendorf said that the separation of the pastor and the congregation was complete except for the approval of the classis. A special meeting of the classis will be held, but the date has not yet been fixed. Dr. Elmendorf said that although Dr. Harsha's pastorate would undoubtedly cease Jan. 1, he would continue to receive his regular salary of $5,000 a year for the first six months of the new year. This, he said, would give him time to recuperate and arrange his affairs, and by that time there would be a demand for a man of his ability.

Many rumors have been circulated regarding the cause for Dr. Harsha's resignation, but the true reasons are worry over financial affairs, ill health, and a desire on the part of "an old fogy element" in the church, as one member of the congregation expressed it yesterday, to have him leave. When Dr. Harsha came from Omaha seven years ago to accept the pastorate of the Second Collegiate Reformed Church he was in debt to the extent of about $40,000. This indebtedness, Dr. Harsha's friends felt, was in no sense a reflection on him, as it was explained that it had been contracted through indorsing paper for a religious publishing concern in the West. Since he has been in this city Dr. Harsha has been paying of his obligations, and it is estimated that he has paid about $12,000 voluntarily of his salary.

Dr. Harsha made an assignment of all his salary over $3,000 to Edward S. Clinch, a lawyer, in 1896, with which to meet these debts. Justice Beekman, however, set aside the assignment, declaring it void as far as his creditors were concerned. Mr. Clinch, when seen last evening, refused to make any statement regarding Dr. Harsha's financial affairs. He said, however, that the treatment of Dr. Harsha by the press of this city had been outrageous, and that if Dr. Harsha had paid no attention to all other faith the matter probably never would have been mentioned. Dr. Harsha is at present in the West with a missionary friend, while his wife and family are in Massachusetts.

BEATEN IN A HORSE TRADE.

Clothing Dealer Begged that His Animal Be Killed, and Finally Left It Gazing at a Coffin.

The police of the Eldridge Street Station would like to find a certain second-hand clothing dealer in Eldridge Street, who once thought he knew something about horses. After being "done" in a horse trade the man wandered into the police station Saturday night, and, with much emotion, asked to have some one come and kill his purchase, as it was not fit to live.

It seems that the clothing man, desiring to extend his business, resolved to institute a cart service for the collection and distribution of his goods. In an evil hour he came under the malign influence of a horse dealer on Front Street. The horse dealer said he had an animal of a very superior sort, which he was compelled to sell. He had paid, he said, $400 for the animal at a forced sale. He agreed, however, to rob himself and family to the extent of letting the animal go at $100 cash. The clothing dealer finally bought the beast for $50 in cash, and three suits of clothing, which, according to the placards upon them in his store, had been for sale at $6.66 each, but had been "marked down" from $38 each, their real worth.

The animal was delivered on Saturday, and his appearance astonished the clothing dealer, who had inspected him before only in the rather poorly lighted Front Street stable. His ribs stood out like the slats on a picket fence. The spinal column was also in evidence, some parts of it not even being concealed by skin. The clothing dealer also noted that while one of the animal's eyes seemed to gaze upon him with a look of almost human hopelessness and despair, the other, which was of a leaden bluish color, seemed to regard him with stony indifference. He attributed this to some temperamental peculiarity, until a passer-by shocked him with the information that the horse was blind in one eye. It was discovered later that he had no teeth, and was very lame in three of his legs.

The owner finally threw up his hands in despair, and then went about asking some of his neighbors to shoot the horse. They one and all refused to commit the deed, and at 11 o'clock at night he went to the police station and asked that word be sent to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals to send a man to kill his horse. The Sergeant told him to telephone himself, and the man replied that the horse wasn't worth it, and left.

At midnight Policeman Lyons, while walking along Allen Street, noticed an aged and decrepit horse leaning heavily against an undertaker's window, gazing with his good eye at a nice satin-lined casket displayed temptingly within. Policeman Lyons arrested the horse, and, together the two made their way slowly and painfully to the police station. Several vagrants along the route guyed the officer unmercifully. Somebody called him a mounted park policeman strayed away from his beat and lost. "What's the charge, officer? What's the charge?" was shouted whenever Lyons was forced to stop and let the horse lean upon him and rest.

At the station house it was decided that the horse should be shot, but nobody seemed able to decide just where. It was finally arranged to give the vagrant a night's lodging in the patrol wagon house, and yesterday morning an officer of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals put it out of its misery. If the police can find the owner, he will be arrested for abandonment.

Suicide of an Artilleryman.

Samuel Hahn, thirty-three years old, a private in Company N, Fifth United States Artillery, stationed at Fort Hamilton, was found dead yesterday afternoon in a hotel at 252 East Houston Street. By his side on the bed in which he lay was a vial that had contained morphine. Hahn went to the hotel on Saturday evening at 6 o'clock and registered. When he had not left his room at 1 o'clock the proprietor burst the door in. Hahn had been dead over twelve hours.

Hebrew War Veterans Organize.

A preliminary meeting for organization of the Hebrew veterans of the Spanish-American war, under the guidance of the Hebrew Union Veterans, was held yesterday in the Municipal Court room at the Yorkville Court. About eighty veterans were present, and committees were appointed to go ahead in the work of organization. Officers will be elected at the next meeting, on Jan. 7.

Briefs must be submitted on legal cap paper, nine inches wide by fourteen long. There are no requirements regarding size or setting of type.

S. B.—The Japanese words "Shinjumeido-joshi" do not form a connected sentence. "Shinju" and "joshi" both signify "a double suicide of lovers," to whom earthly ties are forbidden, the former word being a colloquial, and the latter a literary form. "Meido" is a term frequently met with in Buddhist writings. It refers to the "dark pathway traveled after death," leading either to heaven or to the infernal regions, according to the context.

MEMORIAL OF J. W. AMBROSE.

In Recognition of His Securing the Improvement of New York Harbor.

A committee representing the subscribers to the banquet given in this city in April last, to Senator W. P. Frye of Maine, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce, have presented a life-size bronze bust of the late John W. Ambrose of this city, to the members of his family. Mr. Ambrose secured from Congress, after a number of years of labor, appropriations amounting to several millions of dollars to widen and deepen the channels in and around the Port of New York. The committee, in presenting the bust to Mr. Ambrose's family, inclosed the following letter:

"The undersigned committee, on behalf of the subscribers to the dinner to Senator Frye on April 26, 1899, take pleasure in presenting to you a bronze bust of your honored father, Mr. John W. Ambrose.

"In making this presentation the undersigned wish to give expression to the feeling of warm regard and sincere friendship that they entertained for your father, as well as to their appreciation of his splendid services in securing the improvement of the Harbor of New York, and they desire to bear witness to the high character and sterling worth of their deceased friend, whose memory will not only be cherished by those who had the opportunity and privilege of his intimate acquaintance, but also by all those citizens of this great metropolis who have at heart the advancement and development of their native city. Yours very respectfully,

"W. BAYARD CUTTING.
"GUSTAV H. SCHWAB."

The casting of the bust was done in Philadelphia from a model executed by Andrew O'Connor of this city, and is considered an excellent likeness of Mr. Ambrose, as well as an admirable example of the sculptor's art.

SUES JULIA ARTHUR'S HUSBAND.

Florence Crosby Asks $50,000 for Exclusion from Broadway Theatre.

Miss Florence Crosby has carried out her threat and brought suit against Benjamin P. Cheney, husband of Julia Arthur, for $50,000 damages for being excluded from the Broadway Theatre on Nov. 18, when Julia Arthur was playing there in "More Than Queen."

"Yes," said Miss Crosby last evening, "I have only asked $50,000 damages, but I think the figure is much too low. It ought to be double that at least for such an outrageous proceeding as ejecting a lady from a theatre. The case is in the hands of Emanuel M. Friend, my lawyer."

On Saturday evening, Nov. 18, Miss Crosby, accompanied by a Mr. Hughes, entered the theatre and was stopped by John Major, Miss Arthur's business manager, who told her that Mr. Cheney had given orders that she was not to be admitted. Mr. Hughes was told that he might remain, but declined and went away with Miss Crosby, who had been persuaded to leave and was escorted to the door by a Central Office detective.

OUR LONDON CABLE.

EFFECTS OF THE WAR NEWS

The Week Ended in a Semi-Panic—Stock Exchange Has So Far Stood the Strain Well, but More Failures Are Inevitable—Excitement Telling on Industrial Affairs—Spain More Prosperous.

Cable Correspondence.

Copyright, 1899, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Dec. 17.—A week of strain and anxiety has ended in something very near to a panic, both on the Stock Exchange and in the money market, thanks to the news yesterday morning of Gen. Buller's defeat. All the good effect that otherwise would have been certain to follow the announcement of gold coming from New York was completely obliterated, and the effects of the disaster are all the greater because on Thursday and Friday we were buoyed up by the belief of a great victory. But there is too much reason to fear now that when the gold arrives it will be drawn out of the Bank of England and hoarded.

Already some of our large banks are getting alarmed, and a run on them is by no means a remote contingency as things at present look. If you are able to spare us ten millions sterling we may stand a shock, but I fear that half this sum lost in New York might bring our looming troubles on your market.

We are able to draw gold now solely because the anticipated quantities of cotton have not come forward. Bills drawn in anticipation of these shipments have therefore to be renewed, and the rates on such offered for discount last week were generally higher than on other foreign paper. On Friday sixty-day American drafts coming this week in some cases sold at 6¾ per cent. discount, and from 6⅝ to 6½ per cent. was the common rate earlier in the week. Add to this the advance in the Bank's price for American eagles, and the necessity for gold remittances becomes evident. Yesterday business was paralyzed and the discount rate hard at 6½ per cent., with the banks refusing to buy from brokers.

Small consignments of gold are arriving from the Continent, but only from the open markets, a source of supply soon exhausted. Directly the stocks of the State banks are threatened, up will go their rates. Open market discount in Berlin is now 6 per cent., and it is probable enough that the Reichsbank will put its rate up to 7 per cent. Other markets on the Continent exhibit less signs of strain, but all are unable to do much to help us, and although it was reported all last week that the Bank of France was going to send considerable amounts of bullion to the Argentine Republic none has gone yet.

The position, therefore, is anxious at all points in spite of the gold on the way from New York, Australia, Berlin, and Paris.

Our Stock Exchange last week was put to an extreme strain and stood it well. Money to the end of December rarely cost at best less than 7 per cent., and frequently 10 per cent., but payments were effected without a serious hitch. Ten firms so far have failed, but none of them important ones. Yesterday, however, the excitement was again indescribable, and prices dropped, cataractwise, Rand mines opening at 6 below Friday's price, and dealings being often impossible. The latest prices were worse than the opening in most cases. Further smashes are therefore inevitable, and the recoil here is sure to react disastrously in Paris, where the buying has followed ours. In the feverishness of our mood we have been turning to your stocks, but it was the wholly wild sort of gamblers who bought.

All these surging torrents of excitement are beginning to tell on industrial affairs, and the outlook is much less good than it was a few weeks ago. Dear money also kills forward orders, and causes manufacturers to purchase by the week. In spite of all the great activity in our iron and steel industries, for instance, iron ore merchants complain that they cannot book new orders equivalent to their output. It is the same with textile fibres, and production of all kinds is beginning to be seriously interfered with by dear coal.

Altogether we are not happy just at present, but evils foreseen and dreaded are often mock prophets of disaster, so we hope for the best.

A friend just returned from Spain informs me that that country is more prosperous than before the war, so prosperous in Catalonia that the millowners could not afford to close their works as a demonstration against the new taxation, and therefore concluded the best way was to compromise and wait for bad days. The Government, however, is as vicious and inept as ever, with eternal talk and nothing done, and with all the old corruptions clamoring to be fed.

The debt of outer London now amounts to almost £43,500,000, and projected outlays come to at least £3,000,000 more. The annual charge is £2,711,000, or about 18d. on the pound of ratable value. Many municipalities throughout the country are fully as much or more burdened, but London has spent less on public works yielding revenue than on any other item. These figures are exclusive of the debt of the old city corporation, which, when added, brings the total load of the metropolis up to £48,000,000. The city livery companies enjoy revenues estimated at fully £125,000 a year, none or which goes to the relief of this formidable weight. A. J. W.

Liquidation that brought such large declines the week before last was continued during the week just ended, and resulted in further considerable net losses. Declines of 1 point or more were recorded in a number of the more active stocks, while in some cases the week's recession in price amounted to 3, and, in a few cases, to even 5, points. Transactions by traders were to a less degree than during the previous week responsible for the losses suffered. Much disposition was shown in many stocks to clear up accounts and convert holdings into cash, even where the operation necessarily entailed considerable loss. Conditions in the Stock Exchange market were reflected in the outside market, which generally follows the more important market. Indeed, it would be difficult to assign special causes for many of the declines recorded during the past week, and in most cases they have to be attributed to a small amount of forced selling and to a larger amount of selling by weak or overapprehensive holders.

In the opinion of most observers of the market, the past week's operations will eventually prove of much benefit to the market, as they have eliminated from it a considerable amount of stock that was weakly held and which has now, in all probability, passed into stronger hands. Among the stocks that suffered most were a number of industrial stocks, and net losses were by no means restricted to speculative issues. Indeed, the stocks generally considered in this class were in most cases firmer than the more substantial issues. Copper stocks were among those which at one time or another during the week were notably depressed. This was in large part due to selling for Boston account, which selling was the result of the difficulty met by one or two of the banks in that city. At all events, this was the explanation offered and generally accepted.

In Amalgamated Copper the curb found by far the most active issue of the week. Daily transactions in the stock averaged a number of thousands of shares, and on some days this one stock furnished probably more than half of the total business. It followed a very irregular course, fluctuating sharply almost daily, but keeping within a range of 3 or 4 points. It sold as low as 77¼ and as high as 81½, and closed at 79⅜ bid, a net loss of 1¼ points. The course of the stock seemed to indicate that it was receiving inside support. This was not given, as in the first case, by holding the stock at a given figure and taking all the stock that appeared in the market, but whenever the stock became very weak fairly large buying orders appeared in the market and generally brought about a sharp rally. This appeared to be done by inside interests, although some of the support given the stock came from buying for the short account. Traders were fairly active in the stock on a number of days, but no very determined effort was made by them either to advance or to depress the price of the stock. Total sales for the week amounted probably to between 20,000 and 25,000 shares, an amount much in excess of the business in any other issue.

New Amsterdam Gas suffered a further decline in the common stock and also in the bonds, each of which showed a net loss at the end of the week of 1½ points. No changes occurred in the local gas situation, and there was really but little ground on which to base any definite action in the stock. Only in regard to the bonds was any announcement of importance made, and this was in regard to the payment of the January interest. In some quarters it had been feared that the money for the January payment might not be forthcoming, and apprehension in this regard led to considerable selling of the bonds. Interests connected with the New Amsterdam Gas Company have all along insisted that there was absolutely no doubt of the January coupons being promptly met, and during the past week the Directors of the company took occasion to formally announce that these coupons had already been provided for and would be paid on the day they fall due. But notwithstanding this announcement the bonds closed at the lowest and with a net loss of 1½ points. The view taken was that the money needed for the interest payment has been borrowed, and that this can hardly be considered as improving the financial condition of the company. It is to be said that the largest holders of the bonds are expressing complete confidence in them and say that there is no doubt that whatever may be the manner chosen to put an end to the local gas war the New Amsterdam Gas bonds will be amply provided for.

Announcement was made of the regular quarterly dividend of 2 per cent. on Electric Vehicle common, and this very favorably affected that stock. The last sale prior to the declaration of the quarterly dividend was made at 59, and from this figure the bid rose to 65. It closed at 63 on Saturday, while at the close of the previous week no bid at all could be had for the stock.

Among the industrial stocks that suffered considerable losses were International Pump preferred, which sold down to 61, a decline of 3 points. On Saturday this stock recovered a point of its earlier loss. Closing quotations showed a net loss of 1 point in the common stock, which sold down to 14. Havana Commercial preferred sold down to 59, but on the same day it recovered 2 points and ended the week at 61 bid, a net gain of 1 point. In the common stock prices were considerably improved, and at the close showed a net advance of 1½ points. Other important net losses for the week were 7 points in Agricultural Chemical common, 3¼ points in Distilling of America preferred, 5 points in Otis Elevator common, 8 points in Standard Oil, and 3 points in American Woolen Goods common.

Following are the latest quotations for securities not listed or inactive on the Stock Exchange. CONGRESS.—The Currency bill was passed in the House yesterday by a vote of 190 to 150. Eleven Democrats voted in the affirmative. Senator Morgan of Alabama spoke against the trusts in the Senate. The credentials of W. V. Allen, appointed Senator by Gov. Poynter of Nebraska, were questioned by Senator Chandler of New Hampshire. Senator Pettigrew of South Dakota introduced a resolution offering the thanks of Congress to Rear Admiral Schley. Speaker Henderson yesterday appointed the committees.—Pages 5 and 7.

FOREIGN.—There was a rush of volunteers to enlist in Great Britain yesterday in response to the Government's call. Four seasoned regiments will be ordered from India to reinforce Gen. Buller. Lord Roberts will sail for South Africa Saturday. Lord Kitchener to-day started on his way to the front. It is rumored in London that a war loan will be called for. Students rioted in Dublin yesterday, attacking the Mansion House and tearing down the green flag. More troops are to sail from Canada. The will of George Smith, the Chicago banker, who died in London, was probated there yesterday. There is a scarcity of sailors in Germany. The abuse of the Queen in France has caused only a few notices of withdrawal of British exhibits from the Paris Exposition. Bernard Quaritch, London's famous bookseller, is dead. The Hernandez rebellion in Venezuela is said to be crushed. Chess experts yesterday began a tournament in Vienna. There was another decline in London tin yesterday. Austria's Ministry, it is announced, will resign to-day.—Pages 1 and 8.

Epidemics in the Norwalks.

Special to The New York Times.

NORWALK, Conn., Dec. 18.—The health officers of the Cities of Norwalk and South Norwalk have plenty of work upon their hands. In Norwalk the Centre School has been closed because of a threatened diphtheria epidemic, while in South Norwalk scarlet fever has broken out in the Springwood section, which is densely populated with Italians, Hungarians, and other immigrants. Typhoid fever is also prevalent in South Norwalk, probably because of the semi-water famine in that city.

BRITISH RUSH TO ENLIST

Volunteers Respond Promptly to the Official Call.

TROOPS TO GO FROM INDIA

Four Seasoned Regiments Will Sail at Once from Bombay to Reinforce Gen. Buller.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—Throughout the country volunteers are responding with the utmost alacrity to the official notices. Lord Lonsdale says he believes the Government will only accept from twenty to fifty men from each yeomanry regiment. It is asserted that many officers of the volunteer regiments are offering to go as troopers, if not accepted as officers.

Several Colonels have placed their regiments at the disposal of the War Office. About 300 artillery volunteers offered their services at Edinburgh before noon.

Lord Chesham, commanding officer of the Royal Buckinghamshire Yeomanry, has been authorized to organize a force of 3,000 yeomanry, who will proceed to the Cape. The yeomanry forces sent out will be drafted so as to work together with the mounted infantry and mounted militia from Canada and Australia.

It is understood that the volunteers selected will not form a separate corps, but will join their linked battalions to the regular forces in South Africa.

The War Office has been in communication with Gen. Sir William Lockhart, Commander in Chief in India, with a view of ascertaining what troops can be spared from his forces, and it is understood that, as a result of these inquiries, a force will almost immediately leave Bombay for Durban, including four regiments of seasoned troops, with an ammunition column and a brigade of artillery, including horse and field batteries. It is hoped that this force will reinforce Gen. Buller within a month.

The Duke of Connaught visited the War Office yesterday. Since the appointment of Lord Roberts as Commander in Chief in South Africa, the question of rank no longer bars the Duke from going to the front; and, as he has a strong desire to go, it is believed that only the Queen's reluctance stands in the way. It is not unlikely that this will be overcome.

Inquiries among the Liverpool ship owners show that transportation for 50,000 men, with horses and equipment, can be ready before the men are prepared to start. The Government has chartered the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company's steamer Assaye and the Goorkha of the Union Line.

Mr. J. B. Robinson, the South African millionaire, writes to The Daily Chronicle, reasserting that the Boers have unlimited supplies of ammunition and ample stores of food, and declaring that all statements to the contrary should be ignored.

George J. Goschen, First Lord of the Admiralty, addressing the volunteers and riflemen in London this evening, said:

"I little thought, when I accepted this invitation, that I would address men to whom an appeal had been made to stand shoulder to shoulder with the regulars in South Africa. The possession of 250,000 volunteers will be regarded by the country, I am sure, as a great element of security, and I am confident that they are all prepared to do their duty.

"The colonies also are prepared to do their share, and Canada and Australia are to the fore, welcoming the opportunity to go to the front." [Enthusiastic cheering.]

After praising the great services of the naval brigades assisting the troops in South Africa and testifying to the constant anxiety of naval men to be in the thick of the fighting, Mr. Goschen said:

"It is impossible to grant their desires, although these soldiers and sailors would be glad to go to South Africa in thousands, because, when 120,000 regulars have left our shores, the responsibility for the efficiency of our navy will be immensely increased.

"I believe the preparedness of the navy has contributed essentially to assist Britons to remain calm and confident, despite the black outlook.

"We have not only to look at South Africa, but at the situation and at possible emergencies all around; and, without being an alarmist, I would insist that we must sacrifice much to the imperative duty that every ship be fully and properly manned."

Mr. Goschen concluded with an eloquent tribute to the unanimity of the country and the colonies in supporting the Government in a grave crisis.

The Times says editorially:

"Lord Roberts will have absolutely a free hand and may be expected to resume the original plan of campaign abandoned by Gen. Buller under the necessity of relieving Ladysmith."

ROBERTS WILL SAIL SATURDAY.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—Gen. Lord Roberts and his staff will sail for South Africa on the Dunottar Castle Saturday.

"Bobs," as Lord Roberts of Kandahar is familiarly known, is a name to conjure with in Great Britain, and that Lord Roberts and Lord Kitchener are considered the right men to retrieve the disastrous situation in South Africa is amply evidenced by the more cheery tone of all the war discussion this morning. In spite of the attempts of the authorities to gloss over the supercession of Gen. Buller, the fact remains that the new appointments cannot be regarded otherwise than as the penalty for his failure. A semi-official communication says:

"The disposition to regard the change as a reflection on Gen. Buller is entirely erroneous. As the forces engaged in South Africa increase officers of higher rank are, naturally, appointed to the supreme command.

The communication then instances the successive steps from Gen. Symons to Gens. White and Buller, and now to Gen. Roberts. In spite of the plausibility of the argument, every one recognizes that it is not the whole truth. The friends of Gen. Buller see in the headlong plunge of the Cabinet a suspicious panic, and they picture hasty conclaves and the Ministers, with blanched faces, telegraphing to Roberts and Kitchener to come and save the empire. While, perhaps, these are overdrawn, there is no denying that the prodigious exertion which the Government considers necessary to crush the two little republics shows that even sedate Lord Salisbury sees the extreme gravity of the present aspect of affairs. Probably the Ministers remembered the peril which the public seems to have forgotten of a possible rising of the Kafirs. Indeed, unpleasant rumors are already current in this direction, which would be infinitely more serious than a rebellion of the Dutch.

A curious coincidence in connection with Lord Roberts's appointment at the present juncture is the circumstance that he was similarly appointed Commander in Chief after the British defeat at Majuba Hill. On this occasion, however, he will not reach South Africa to find peace patched up between his sailing and arriving.

LORD KITCHENER STARTS TO-DAY.

CAIRO, Dec. 18.—Gen. Lord Kitchener, who has been appointed Chief of the Staff of Gen. Lord Roberts of Kandahar, the new Commander in Chief of the British forces in South Africa, leaves Omdurman Tuesday, and will arrive here Friday.

He will start for Cape Town as soon as possible.

ARTILLERY NEEDED BY BRITISH.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—Rear Admiral Lord Charles Beresford is quoted in an interview to-day as saying:

"The issue of the war will depend more upon artillery than anything else, especially at the siege of Pretoria and other places, where the biggest battles are expected. Therefore I urge that all the naval guns which can be spared from the reserves and other ships be mounted on artillery trails and limbers for field service immediately. This move is necessary, as there are no quick-firing twelve-pounders of twelve hundredweight in the army.

"The Government should immediately commission every ship in 'A' Division of the navy, as a needful precaution against any nation seeking to take advantage of Great Britain's condition. No friendly nation could object. It would only be running water through hose pipes so as to prepare for fire.

"I am greatly pleased to see Gens. Roberts and Kitchener go to the aid of Gen. Buller."

CANADA TO SEND MORE TROOPS.

Offer of Second Contingent Accepted by Great Britain.

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, Ontario, Dec. 18.—The Cabinet made an official announcement to-night that a second contingent for service in South Africa had been accepted and would be raised and dispatched at once by the Government.

The composition of the force will be probably as follows:

1. A and B batteries of the permanent corps. Their peace strength is 230, combined, but the full field strength is over 300, and they will be brought up to that. They will take twelve guns.

2. A force of 500 mounted infantry, made up from the Northwest Mounted Police and the Royal Canadian Regiment of cavalry. To take the horses, guns, and men probably two steamships will have to be chartered, and the contingent will not likely be got off as speedily as the last was.

Lieut. Clare B. Schreiber, a nephew of Mr. Collingwood Schreiber of Ottawa, Deputy Minister of Railways, was killed in the battle at Tugela River on the 15th inst. The Lieutenant was one of the artillery officers under Col. Long who were killed in endeavoring to save the guns at the river. It was his first action. His father was a cavalry officer.

Australian Troops Prepare to Sail.

MELBOURNE, Dec. 18.—An Australian mounted contingent of a thousand men will sail for South Africa before Jan. 10. An additional New South Wales battery of artillery is to sail immediately.

BRITISH WAR LOAN RUMORED.

Consols Flat in London Owing to Reports that the Government Will Borrow Money.

Special to The New York Times.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—Consols were flat to-day because a large new issue is said to be in contemplation by the Government to pay the extraordinary expenses of the South African war, for which sufficient provision was not made in the estimates. Something of the kind is probable, but the tale is not confirmed.

The national debt of Great Britain on March 31, 1898, the latest date for which exact statistics are available, amounted to £638,266,482, divided as follows:

1. The funded debt.
(a) Permanent	£585,787,624
(b) Annuities	40,515,080
2. The unfunded debt	8,133,000
3. Other capital liabilities	3,830,778

The permanent funded debt on the date mentioned consisted of the following stock:

2¾ per cent. consols	£522,668,380
2¾ per cent., 1905	4,647,222
2½ per cent	31,826,171
Bank of England debt	11,015,100
Bank of Ireland debt	2,630,769
Bond debt, 2¾ per cent	13,900,000

The increase of the national debt by the new issue of consols, said to be in contemplation, will check the process of paying off the Government obligations, which has been going on for many years so steadily and successfully as to justify the following statement in Whitaker's Almanack for 1899: "The national debt took many years to reach the gigantic proportions which it assumed under the regency of George IV., and any serious reduction was regarded as almost hopeless, but it has been so vigorously and so successfully attacked during the past twenty-five years that it bids fair to be all but extinguished within a reasonable limit of time. Even so late as 1883 the funded debt stood at £713,000,000; it is now less than £586,000,000, and within the next twenty years, at the present rate of shrinkage, will be nearly £200,000,000 less."

The debt reached its highest proportions in 1816, when it exceeded £900,000,000, nearly all of which had been expended in foreign wars within a comparatively brief period. At the accession of George III. the debt was under £140,000,000, and in the first twelve years of his reign it was reduced £10,000,000. The costly and unsuccessful resistance of the American Revolution added £121,000,000 to the debt, and after this came the series of Continental wars, from the outbreak of the French Revolution, in 1793, until the exile of Napoleon, at St. Helena, in 1815. During these twenty-three years of war money was borrowed in the most extravagant manner, and the Government securities greatly depreciated. From 1793 to 1801 the average price of £100 3 per cent. stock was £57 17s. 6d.

Since 1816 the reduction of the debt has been going on steadily, but not rapidly until recent years. At the accession of Queen Victoria in 1837 the gross amount of the debt was £761,422,570, and in the period from then until March 31, 1898, it was decreased by £123,156,088.

Indications Point to a Loan.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—The Daily Chronicle's financial article, which is written by A. J. Wilson, a leading authority, says: "The expenditure for the war considerably exceeds £2,000,000 per week, and as the Treasury cannot hope to sell its bills on the market under 5 per cent., it is evident that the Government must soon come upon the market for money."

AMERICAN MINISTER OFFENDED

Reported that He Has Asked to Retire from The Hague to Avoid Unpleasantness There.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—The Daily Mail publishes the following dispatch from Antwerp:

"The British and American Ministers at The Hague have asked permission to retire to Antwerp, with a view of avoiding personal unpleasantness during the anti-English attitude of the Dutch.

"There is no foundation for the reports on the Continent that the diplomatic relations between Great Britain and the Netherlands are strained."

RUMOR OF THE QUEEN'S DEATH.

Denial Given Out Says She Is in Excellent Health.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—A baseless rumor that the Queen was dead and a report that Kimberley had surrendered were circulated today.

Later the official information was given out that the Queen is in excellent health and that there is no indication of the surrender of Kimberley.

The Queen, it was added, passed a quiet day at Windsor. She took an airing in the afternoon. It is said her Majesty may leave Windsor for Osborne, Isle of Wight, Dec. 29.

Mr. A. J. Balfour dined with the Queen this evening.

HOW GEN. BULLER LOST THE DAY.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—A correspondent of The Daily Mail, telegraphing from Frere Camp, Natal, Dec. 15, and describing the Tugela River battle, says:

"The Boers in great force occupied a strong, intrenched position, commanding the river and reaching back about 800 yards from its further side. Gen. Hart's brigade, on the left, first attempted a crossing under a murderous Nordenfeldt and rifle fire. The Royal Dublin Fusileers, the Royal Enniskillen Fusiliers, the King's Own Scottish Borderers, and the Connaught Rangers crossed with superb and unflinching gallantry, but the position on the other side was found utterly untenable.

"The British suffered heavily from a perfect hail of artillery and shrapnel, while their own artillery was very badly mauled. They were, therefore, obliged to recross the river.

"On the right Gen. Hildyard's brigade,

THE PLYMOUTH GOES ASHORE.

Fall River Liner, with Six Hundred Passengers Aboard, Strikes a Reef Off Riker's Island.

The big sidewheel steamer Plymouth of the aFll River Line, one of the largest vessels of her type in the world, went ashore on a reef on the north side of Riker's Island at 8:30 o'clock last night. She had about 600 passengers aboard at the time A hole about five feet in diameter was stove in the boat wel forward and she made water rapidly.

The Captain appeared to have lost his bearings on account of the fog, which was almost impenetrable at the time of the accident. To make his task of piloting his boat all the more precarious the tide was low. There was considerable excitement among the passengers, but Capt. Simmons and his crew assured them that there was no danger.

A boat was lowered, and several of the crew, under the first mate, put off to Port Morris, whence the report of the accident was sent by telephone to the company's offices, at Pier 19, North River, foot of Murray Street.

The steamers Maine, City of Worcester, and several freighters owned by the New York and New Haven Railroad were chartered by the Fall River Line officials and dispatched with several tugs to the disabled steamer.

Such of the passengers as desired were taken off, but the majority decided to remain on the Plymouth and be towed back with her to her pier. This, it was said, was entirely feasible. At 1:45 o'clock this morning the Plymouth was lying on her keel, listing slightly to port. She had two fathoms of water fore and aft and about eight feet amidships.

An official of the line said last night that the Plymouth was valued at $1,000,000. Since her companion steamer, the Priscilla, was laid up for the Winter, the Plymouth has been handling the traffic between this city and Fall River alone.

She left her pier at 5:30 o'clock last night and her slow time to Riker's Island was due to the fog.

The damage to the steamer could not be estimated, but it will be considerable.

The dimensions of the Plymouth are: Length on water line, 351 feet 8 inches; length over all, 366 feet; molded beam, 50 feet; depth, 21 feet. She was launched in 1890.

AMERICAN PRISONERS FREE.

Gen. Young Believes They Are in the Hands of Our Troops—Lieut. Gillmore Is with Them.

MANILA, Dec. 19.—9:20 A. M.—It is officially announced that Gen. Young reports that he believes the American prisoners, including Lieut. Gillmore, are now in the hands of the United States troops.

Lieut. Col. Howze and Major Hunter have been operating with small commands in North Ilocos Province, and it is supposed that one of these has effected the release of the Americans.

The report has not yet been verified.

GEN. ALGER DRAWS A CONTRAST

Believes Work of British War Office Places His Services in a Favorable Light.

DETROIT, Dec. 18.—Ex-Secretary of War Alger has been watching the Transvaal war with more than ordinary interest, and so far, he says, he has found only cause for congratulation in contrasting the work of the British War Office with his own. He said to-day that the people of the country could judge for themselves of the work done in our late war.

Gen. Alger said:

"It must be remembered that this country was much less prepared for war than England. The War Department had not a single ship. Our army was yet to be organized. We had no money, and could do nothing until Congress made the appropriation of $50,000,000. We took more men to Cuba, Puerto Rico, and Manila than the English have sent to Africa. We had to equip them. We had to enlist them and muster them in. We had to do a thousand things which the British have not been obliged to do.

"As for South Africa being further away from England than Cuba," Gen. Alger said, "distance matters little when the men were once aboard ship." The General said he intended to prepare a history of the work of the War Department during the war with Spain.

WASHINGTON'S MAD DOG SCARE.

It Continues, but No One Seems to Know How It Began.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—The mad dog scare in Washington continues, although it is impossible to find the person or persons who have encountered the dog or dogs. Last week 467 dogs were captured as a result of the increase of the pound master's force. On Saturday the District Commissioners asked the Health Officer to submit a written report on the subject. The Health Officer's report confesses his inability to discover the original dog or dogs, but says that there seems to be no doubt that it or they exist somewhere in the District.

A proclamation will be issued by the Commissioners announcing the existence of a state of hydrophobia, and requiring all dogs to wear muzzles. Sixty-seven of the 467 dogs captured have been released. One of them belonged to the wife of a Senator, who went to the pound and treated Poundmaster Einstein to a bit of her mind. She said that her husband would have a bill introduced to abolish the pound.

CADETS WILL STOP HAZING.

West Pointers Have Determined to Practice It No More.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Dec. 18.—By unanimous vote the cadets have resolved to stop hazing at the Military Academy. The decision was reached when it became evident that Col. Mills would use all his powers to suppress it.

The movement began in the first class, and all the other classes soon followed its example. During the past Summer hazing had been unusually severe, and the utmost vigilance of the authorities was necessary to keep the cadets within bounds.

Col. Mills notified the battalion that hazers would receive no mercy from him. The first one caught happened to be a second class man, who had just returned from a year's suspension for the same offense. He was hazing Cadet U. S. Grant, 3rd, when detected. Fifteen minutes were given to him to quit the academy. His classmates saw the danger of continuing hazing, and they willingly accepted the first classmen's suggestion that it should be stopped.

The authorities are delighted at the good sense displayed by the cadets.

DAY OF PANIC AND FINANCIAL WRECKS

Securities Fall Many Points and Millions Are Lost.

FAILURES ALARM TRADERS

Produce Exchange Trust Company and Allen & Co. Suspend.

BANKS OFFER MONEY

Proffered Loans of $11,000,000 Aid the Stringent Money Market.

Government Now to Give Assistance—False London Rumors Contribute to the Excitement on the Stock Exchange.

Much the worst panic that Wall Street has seen since the memorable crash of 1893, commonly known as the "Cordage Smash," came upon the Street yesterday, and when the day was over market values had declined millions upon millions of dollars, men who but a few hours before had counted their money by the thousands were ruined, and gloom was everywhere. In many respects, indeed, it was probably the worst single-day panic the Street had ever known. Only three stocks in the entire list, and those scarcely dealt in at all, managed to stand the storm and make any gain, while all the others—standard railway stocks no less than doubtful industries—went down and down until in not a few cases net losses were represented by double figures. After yesterday's experience Wall Street men, recalling the troubles following President Cleveland's Venezuelan message in 1895, and the opening of the Bryan free silver campaign in 1896, were inclined to talk of those times as days of comparative quiet.

As in 1893, so now, overspeculation in industrials may be said to be the prime factor in causing the general demoralization, though there were many other contributing and incidental causes. But while in 1893 the industrials were relatively few, now they are many; and it is for that reason that fear is entertained in some quarters lest the worst may not be over.

The day opened under gloomy conditions. The English market, owing to last week's reverses in South Africa, was depressed and Americans were weak; Boston's financial difficulties produced alarm regarding the situation here; while rumors vague and uncertain—and the more potent for evil because of their very vagueness and uncertainty—were heard of probable and pending failures. And so, under these fear-begetting circumstances, with brokers and traders disheartened by the losses of last week, the market opened feverish and unsettled. After the first half hour of trading, however, nothing serious developing, the market assumed a more buoyant tone, and prices actually were beginning to look normally firm.

FAILURES AND FALSE RUMORS.

Suddenly as a bolt from the blue in its effect, notwithstanding the many reports of the week previous respecting the condition of the concern, came the announcement of the suspension of the Produce Exchange Trust Company. At once the Street took on that form of hysteria which only the Street can assume, with the consequence that the ruthless sacrificing of stocks was immediately begun. For a time it looked as if there would be no end to it; but good buying extraordinarily good under the circumstances—put a stop to the decline, and conditions once again became normal. This temporary restoration of confidence was aided greatly by the statement that a number of the Clearing House banks had decided to lend money all day at a regular 6 per cent. rate.

But the rally was only momentary. Scarce had the better feeling manifested itself than the announcement came of the suspension of Henry Allen & Co., together with wild talk of other failures. Then the lifting cloud descended again upon the Street, and prices broke more rapidly than before. Some little time later some of the banks upon whom speculators had been depending to live up to their promise to lend money at 6 per cent., began to call in their loans, and at the same time demanded at the rate of 186 per cent. for new loans. And, as though this were not enough, rumors were circulated that Quen Victoria had died and that Ladysmith had fallen, signifying that on the morrow there would be a panic in the English market. Of course the rumors were false, but they served their purpose. Confusion worse confounded followed, and men in the Street veritably ran amuck.

On the floor of the Exchange, which all day had been a perfect bedlam, the scene was wellnigh indescribable. Brokers—and the room was alive with them as it had not been in years—gathered at the various trading posts and shouted and shrieked and sold, all the while prices falling, falling, falling. Stocks were dumped on the market by the wholesale, and where there was no ready buyer the quotations went down until a purchaser was found. Often between sales prices dropped a point or two at a time.

BANKERS TO THE RESCUE.

The situation finally became so alarming, even the best stocks sharing in the decline, that at about 2:30 o'clock the strong moneyed interests of the Street felt that something must be done. J. P. Morgan & Co. first came to the rescue by offering $1,000,000 at 6 per cent., and shortly after $10,000,000 was offered, as the result of the meeting of a committee of bankers. Call money rates immediately became normal, and stocks began to rally, with the result that in the last fifteen minutes of the day's trading some of the quotations appreciated 4 and 5 points. Had it not been for this final rise, the losses, significant and disastrous as they are, would have been much greater.

Unfortunately, the rally came too late for many speculators, whose margins and money had been exhausted, while many others had long before sacrificed their holdings in order to save a little something from the impending ruin. As on other panic days, the slaughter would not have been so great had not the contagion of fear spread; but spread it did, and even to strong holders.

Reviewing the declines, the stocks that stand out foremost are the local traction stocks, American Sugar, American Tobacco, Consolidated Gas, Continental Tobacco, Federal Steel, Tennessee Coal and Iron, People's Gas, and United States Leather. Other stocks, it is true, were decidedly erratic, but these were conspicuously so. American Tobacco fell an extreme of 20¾ points, Metropolitan 20¼, People's Gas 12, American Sugar 10, Continental Tobacco 11¼, Consolidated Gas 11, Tennessee Coal and Iron 17, Federal Steel 12¼, and United States Leather preferred 8½.

SOME REMARKABLE DECLINES.

The remarkable features of the declines are indicated by the following table, showing the astonishing range of prices in the few hours of business:

	High.	Low.	Close.	Net Loss.
American Sugar	131⅞	120	125	5
American Tobacco	99	78¼	83	16
Baltimore & Ohio pf.	74⅝	68	69	5⅝
Brooklyn Rapid Transit	78	65½	73½	4
Consolidated Gas	179	168	173½	6⅛
Continental Tobacco	31¼	20	22½	9
Federal Steel	52	39⅜	45	6½
Great Northern	166	159	159	7½
Metropolitan	167½	147	156	11
Manhattan	96¼	88	91	5¼
New York Central	128⅜	120	121	7
People's Gas	103⅜	91	94	9
Southern Pacific	37	30¼	33⅜	3½
St. Paul	118⅝	113¼	114½	3⅝
Tennessee Coal & Iron	81	64	70	10
Third Avenue	123	117⅜	117⅜	8⅝
United States Leather pf.	73	64½	66	7⅜

More significant still will these figures appear if the declines are figured up in dollars and cents. Taking the amount of Sugar that was traded in yesterday—say 105,000 shares—the net loss in market value was over $500,000. In the case of American Tobacco, with 75,000 shares traded in, the loss was $1,200,000; in the case of Metropolitan Street Railway, with 25,000 shares, over $275,000; in Brooklyn Rapid Transit, with 99,000 shares, $396,000; in Federal Steel, with 47,000 shares, $310,500; in New York Central, with 12,000 shares, $84,000; in Southern Pacific, with 110,000 shares, over $380,000, and so on. When, however, the entire capital stock of each company is considered, and the market quotation of each share is cut down anywhere from $5 to $16, a tremendous shrinkage in market value is developed.

OTHER STOCKS SUFFERED.

While those mentioned were the conspicuous declines, there were others that were nearly as significant, as will appear from the subjoined list of losses of two points or more scored by other stocks. As the figures show, even such standard railway stocks as St. Paul, Chicago and Great Western, Great Northern, Northwestern, New York Central, and Pennsylvania could not withstand the blighting influences of the decline. The figures follow:

Coal Stocks—Jersey Central, 2; Lackawanna, 8; Delaware and Hudson, 3½; Reading common 3¼, first preferred 2½, second preferred 4; Hocking Valley preferred, 3; Wheeling and Lake Erie second preferred, 4½.

General Railroad Stocks—Ann Arbor, 7⅞; Atchison preferred, 3½; Baltimore and Ohio common, 3; Baltimore and Ohio preferred, 5¾; Canada Southern, 4⅜; Canadian Pacific, 3½; Chesapeake and Ohio, 2½; Burlington, 5¾; Chicago Great Western, 2½; preferred A, 2; preferred B, 4½; debentures, 5; Monon, 3½; St. Paul, 3¾; preferred, 3; Northwestern, 8½; Rock Island, 6⅞; Omaha, 5; Chicago Terminal Transfer preferred, 4¾; Big Four, 4⅜; Colorado Southern first preferred, 5; second preferred, 2½; Denver and Rio Grande preferred, 4; Erie first preferred, 6½; Great Northern preferred, 7½; Illinois Central, 3; Iowa Central preferred, 4; Louisville and Nashville, 3⅝; Missouri Pacific, 2; Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie, 2¼; Missouri, Kansas and Texas, 2; New York Central, 7; New York, New Haven and Hartford, 2; New York, Ontario and Western, 2½; Norfolk and Western, 2½; preferred, 2¼; Northern Pacific, 5¾; preferred, 4⅜; Pacific Mail, 4⅜; Pennsylvania, 2¾; Pan Handle, 4¾; preferred, 2¾; Pullman's Palace Car, 6; Rio Grande Western, 6; Southern Pacific, 3½; Southern Railway preferred, 3½; Union Pacific, 2⅜; preferred, 4¼.

Steel and Iron Stocks—American Steel and Wire, 2⅜; preferred, 6; American Tin Plate, 2; preferred, 3; Colorado Fuel and Iron, 4½; General Electric, 4; National Steel, 2½; preferred, 2; New York Air Brake, 14; Pressed Steel Car, 4½; preferred, 10¾; Republic Iron and Steel, 2⅜; preferred, 2½; American Car and Foundry, 2¾; preferred, 4; American Smelting, 3¾; preferred, 7.

Industrials—American Cotton Oil, 2¼; American Linseed Oil preferred, 3; Glucose Refinery, 3; Continental Tobacco preferred, 6½; International Paper, 2; preferred, 4⅜; United States Rubber, 3⅝.

Gas Stocks—Brooklyn Union Gas, 4; Lacelede Gas, 2½; preferred, 3½.

Copper Stocks—Anaconda, 9.

OVER 1,500,000 SHARES SOLD.

As to the number of shares sold, it was one of the biggest, if, indeed, not the biggest, on record, the total being something over a million and a half. In the first hour of trading alone 465,000 shares were dealt in, while in the first two hours the total was about 880,000. At one time there was a lull, but at the close the buying and selling were on such an enormous scale that it was not until 3:10 o'clock that the last quotation was ticked off the tape, while not a few brokers remained on the floor of the Exchange until after 3:30 o'clock adjusting their accounts.

Of the three stocks that scored gains little is to be said. They are: American Ice, which rose ½ point on sales of 300 shares; Chicago and Eastern Illinois, which appreciated 1¾ points on like sales, and Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis preferred, whose gain was 2¾ points on a sale of 100 shares.

The Consolidated Exchange suffered along with the Stock Exchange, securities tumbling there in the same way. The aggregate of transactions was large, and many speculators were hard hit. The Exchange got off without any failures, however. Similar conditions prevailed on the Cotton Exchange, where the excitement was great and all options tumbled more or less. The Coffee Exchange had a notably dull market, characterized by weakness.

As to the outlook for to-day, except among professional bears, hope is expressed that the demoralization is ended, but the growing hesitancy of conservative bankers to continue loans where doubtful industrial stocks are held as collateral is taken in some parts of the Street to signify that there may be a further calling of loans today, and a consequent further enforced liquidation with declining quotations. On the other hand, the action of J. P. Morgan & Co. in lending $1,000,000 at 6 per cent. shortly before the close of the market, when money rates were 186 per cent., together with the decision of the bankers to lend $10,000,000 at ordinary rates had an appreciably good effect, which, it is believed by many, will be so continuing that its influence will be plainly seen in to-day's market.

The certainty that the Government will come to the rescue, as announced last night in a dispatch from Washington, is another important encouraging factor. Secretary Gage promises to place $30,000,000 or $40,000,000, if necessary, in Government depositories.

What J. P. Morgan himself thinks—and it is he whom the Street credits with breaking yesterday's panic—is best told in his own words to a reporter when approached on the subject: "I think everything will come out all right."

TRUST COMPANY'S FAILURE.

Features of Its Management Which Displeased Edwin Gould—Payment in Full Promised.

The New York Produce Exchange Trust Company suspended payments and closed the doors of its office in the Standard Oil Building yesterday. While the disaster was not wholly unexpected, its announcement on the Stock Exchange was coupled with reports, declared wholly unwarranted by those affected by them, of the impending failure of several important firms and corporations. Its result was to demoralize the Stock Exchange, and the Stock Exchange house of Henry Allen & Co. was caught unprepared for emergency and forced to announce its suspension.

The following notices posted on the doors of the Produce Exchange Trust Company's offices announced its plight:

The Board of Directors of the Produce Exchange Trust Company has deemed it to the best interests of its depositors and stockholders to suspend payments pending the readjustment of its affairs. The following special committee, viz., Edwin Gould, C. P. Armstrong, George R. Bidwell, Edwin A. Maher, and Frank Brainard, has been appointed by the Board of Directors to take charge of the property and affairs of the company, and are in possession thereof for the Board of Directors.

ALMON GOODWIN,
WILLIAM NELSON CROMWELL,
Counsel for the Committee.

The Produce Exchange Trust Company has suspended payments pending an examination and an adjustment of its affairs. The condition of the company shows ample assets to pay all its obligations.

The immediate cause of suspension is its inability to convert its securities into cash in time to meet the sudden and abnormal demand made upon it.

MR. GOULD DISSATISFIED.

He was so dissatisfied with the result of his investigations that he on No. 17 resigned as Vice President and Director, but rescinded his action when assured that attention would be given to his views. At that time he was willing to subscribe $500,000 to put the company on a stable footing. On Dec. 5 he wrote to the Executive Committee of the trust company:

On Wednesday, Nov. 29, I made an informal statement to the Executive Committee to the effect that I had lately been able to examine the loans and other assets of the company more fully than I was able to do before my election as Vice President, and that I found matters in connection therewith for which I did not care to assume responsibility.

Although the subject had been mentioned to me previously, my election as Vice President at the meeting of Sept. 20 was a surprise, and before I was familiar with the business of the company. Since then I have been able to make only a superficial investigation, but the result has been unsatisfactory to me.

The item which has appeared in our statement as "other bonds," consisted chiefly in the shares of an underwriting syndicate. It has been changed so as to be more in accordance with the facts. I find that large sums of money have been tied up in aiding the underwriting of certain industrial enterprises until the amount so invested, together with what we have agreed to furnish if called upon, equals nearly, if not quite, the combined amounts of our capital and surplus. Most of this is uncollectible if needed, is due at indefinite times, and with certain privileges of renewal to the borrowers.

What changes shall be made I leave to the judgment of the Directors, and I shall be glad to work with them upon any plan looking to the betterment of the condition of the company between now and the next annual meeting if the board shows any desire to improve matters. Very truly yours,

EDWIN GOULD.

P. S.—I should like to have this letter spread on the minutes of the Executive Committee and read to the Board of Directors at its next meeting.

BANK EXAMINER'S REPORT.

This was not the only danger signal exhibited to the Directorate of the company. F. D. Kilburn, Superintendent of the Banking Department of the State of New York, who yesterday was at the offices of the trust company in the discharge of his duty, made this report, on an investigation made by Examiner A. C. Judson:

A special examination of the Produce Exchange Trust Company was made by the Banking Department on Dec. 7. This examination was because of rumors in regard to the company which were in circulation in and about Wall Street. It was completed on Dec. 9, and I had an interview with the President, Mr. Beall, and the Vice President, Mr. Scudder on that day in reference to the company's condition. I told them that they were in a precarious condition, and that immediate steps should be taken to fortify themselves against large withdrawals, which, I believed, would result on account of the rumors about the company. I criticised the so-called "syndicate loans" very severely, and pointed out the fact that they had not sufficient quick assets with which to meet the demand that would probably be made.

I learned last night that Mr. Beall did not communicate my suggestions to his Board of Directors and, except one or two who had learned something from other sources as to its condition, none of the Directors were informed of the true condition until Saturday afternoon or yesterday evening. The result was that not sufficient time remained to make arrangements, which I believe otherwise could have been made, to tide the company over. I have no doubt that all depositors will be paid in full.

The statement of the Produce Exchange Trust Company as of Nov. 21, 1899, showed resources of $13,899,356.08, including cash in hand and in banks, $3,254,347.45; New York City bonds, $2,514,172.50; other stocks and bonds, $837,075.16; demand loans on collateral, $2,703,322.22; time loans on collateral, $3,391,982.48; bills purchased, $1,063,632.69, and accrued interest, $44,823.58. Its liabilities were stated as: Capital, $5,000,000; undivided profits, $164,146.93, and deposits, $8,735,209.15.

Its officers are President Beall, Vice Presidents Gould and McIntyre, and S. D. Scudder; Secretary and Treasurer, S. L. Chamberlaine, and Assistant Secretary and Treasurer, W. M. Laws. The Directors are Charles P. Armstrong, Amzi L. Barber, Frank Brainard, Turner A. Beall, George R. Bidwell, Charles A. Deshon, A. Goepel, Edwin Gould, H. Irvine Keyser, Edward R. Ladew, Thomas A. McIntyre, Henry A. McGee, W. Willis Merrill, J. W. Middendorf, Edward A. Maher, S. D. Scudder, John A. Shibley, John P. Truesdell, C. M. Warner, John Skelton Williams, and E. F. C. Young.

BANK AND TRUST COMPANY PART.

Rumor was last evening busy with the International Banking and Trust Company, which has been regarded as an ally of the Produce Exchange Trust Company. This may have been due to the decision of the Seventh National Bank not to continue to clear for the International. At any rate, President Browne of the International issued this statement as authoritative:

The Produce Exchange Trust Company holds no stock of the International Banking and Trust Company, nor has the International Banking and Trust Company any money due it or on deposit with the Produce Exchange Trust Company, except $50,000 in the ordinary course of business.

It is only necessary to look at the list of the Directors of the International Banking and Trust Company to see how uncalled for such a rumor was.

The examination to-day revealed that the Produce Exchange Trust Company had scattered through its loans less than 1,000 shares of International Banking and Trust Company stock, which appears in small lots in various loans to individuals in no way connected with the International Banking and Trust Company in the ordinary course of business.

The balance sheet of the International Banking and Trust Company, as made up by an examination yesterday, shows:

New York City bonds	$980,000
Deposits in New York banks, less $50,000 in the Produce Exchange Trust Company	562,000
Demand Loans	647,000
Time loans	484,000
Bills purchased	470,000
Due by sundry banks	236,000
Cash in office	41,000
Total	$3,430,000
Demand deposits in other New York banks	489,000
Total assets	$3,919,000
Deposits	2,321,000
Excess assets	$1,598,000

RELATIONS OF THE CONCERNS.

A Wall Street bulletin explaining the relations between the two companies said:

The Produce Exchange Trust Company became interested in the stock of the International Trust and Banking Company in this way. When the last named increased its capital stock its managers induced the Produce Exchange Trust Company to underwrite $300,000 of the new issue, on condition that if the company had to take the stock, the proceeds should remain with the Produce Exchange Company at 3 per cent. interest. The company had to take the stock and has since been holding the purchase money on deposit and paying interest on the same.

W. H. Kimball, President of the Seventh National Bank, declared late last evening that the action of his bank was taken merely in the ordinary course of business, and was in no sense an act of hostility toward the trust company.

"In this panicky time," he said, "all trust companies and other concerns are under suspicion, because, in case of trouble, the liquidation of their affairs would take place through us as their clearing agent. The International Banking and Trust Company is abundantly able to take care of itself. Our action was taken at the meeting of our Board of Directors to-day, and had been in contemplation for some time.

"There is nothing in the action which will in any way operate against the trust company's ability to obtain another clearing agent. The trouble in the stock market had nothing to do with the action, nor was it in any way connected with the failure of the Produce Exchange Trust Company. The notice gave to the trust company the required twenty-four hours to make the change. The clearing of the trust company's business tomorrow morning will be made through the Seventh National Bank, for which the trust company has, as usual, made ample provision. It does not need a clearing agent. Most trust companies do not have clearing agents anyway."

President Browne of the International Banking and Trust Company, when seen at his residence last night, added this to his previous statement: "Beyond the convenience, it is immaterial whether the Seventh National Bank clears for us or we clear for ourselves. However, we shall immediately have a new Clearing House bank, much larger than the Seventh."

SEABOARD AIR LINE DEAL.

Thomas F. Ryan, in answer to an inquiry as to an interview with John Skelton Williams regarding his holdings of stock in the Seaboard system, published in a morning newspaper, said: "At present I have nothing to say on the subject."

Mr. Ryan, asked what knowledge he had of the relations of what is known as the Williams or Seaboard Syndicate with the Produce Exchange Trust Company, replied: "I have no knowledge of the relations existing between the syndicate and the trust company, and would not discuss the subject, under the circumstances if I had any such knowledge."

A dispatch received last night from Baltimore reports J. William Middendorf of that city, a Director of the Produce Exchange Trust Company, as saying: "The company was interested as a subscriber to the syndicate formed for the purpose of financing the proposed reorganization of the Seaboard Air Line, but its suspension will in no way impede the progress of that reorganization, which is now practically an accomplished fact."

Thomas A. McIntyre, when asked about the failure of the Produce Exchange Trust Company, said: "I have nothing to say. They owe us nothing; we owe them nothing. We are not affected by the failure, and what I say for McIntyre & Wardwell I say for myself personally."

President Snyder of the Western National Bank said that the Produce Exchange Trust Company owed the bank nothing, had never borrowed a dollar from the bank, and had a very handsome balance to its credit.

The Produce Exchange Trust Company was a designated depository for State and municipal moneys and for savings banks and State banks' funds. At the office of City Chamberlain Keenan it was said that the city had about $150,000 on deposit with the trust company. Deputy Chamberlain Campbell remarked: "In my opinion the city will not be a loser. I am told that every cent is secure. The city often had a half million on deposit with this company."

A dispatch from Baltimore quotes President Gordon of the International Trust Company of Maryland, which had relations with the Produce Exchange Trust Company, as saying: "A small reciprocal amount has been kept for some months between the two institutions, but the International Company has now on deposit, after squaring the account, a net balance of $24,000 due the Produce Exchange Company, the balance having always been on that side since the account was opened."

CINCINNATI MONEY SENT EAST.

One-Half of the Reserve Funds Loaned to New York.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 18.—"One-half of the reserve funds of Cincinnati banks have been loaned in the New York markets," said a Director in three banks to-day, "and at 7 and 8 per cent interest. This shows the city's prosperous condition. Money here ranges from 4 to 6 per cent."

Vice President Kellogg of the Third National Bank to-day said: "A great deal of Cincinnati capital has gone East. Different trusts have paid hundreds of thousands to individuals in Cincinnati to buy them out of their various businesses, and this money has been turned into the banks, and we have found a market for it in the East. Cincinnati is very prosperous; never more so.

"Money jumped to 100 per cent. in New York to-day, but it will not affect the Cincinnati market except to call more money to New York."

President Hinsch of the Fifth National said he had heard of money going East. "Cincinnati is one of the easiest money markets in the world," he said, "being unusually prosperous at present."

HENRY ALLEN & CO. SUSPEND.

Amount Involved May Be $1,000,000—Firm Experienced a Similar Disaster in 1893.

The Stock Exchange firm of Henry Allen & Co., which did business as commission brokers and bankers at 14 Wall Street, was forced into a suspension yesterday by the rapid downward course of the stock market. The announcement made for them from the rostrum of the Stock Exchange by Chairman Kennedy was: "We regret to announce the fact that we are unable to meet our contracts."

Under the rule of the Exchange the contracts of the firm were openly closed on nearly 11,000 shares, and about 10,000 shares were disposed of on the floor through private settlement. The shrinkage through their operations amounted to about $140,000. The transactions included buying and selling contracts and were for the following stocks: North American, Northern Pacific, common and preferred; General Electric, Pennsylvania, Louisville and Nashville, Southern Pacific, People's Gas, "Big Four," Brooklyn Rapid Transit, Union Pacific common, Leather, Continental Tobacco, Burlington, Rock Island, Manhattan, Baltimore and Ohio preferred, Ontario and Western, American Tobacco, Atchison, common and preferred; Texas Pacific, Denver and Rio Grande, American Car and Foundry preferred, Rubber common, Missouri Pacific, Sugar, New York Central, American Tin Plate common, and American Tobacco.

At the offices of the firm no statement is beyond that the suspension was not likely to be permanent was given out. The Street estimate was that the amount involved in the embarrassment was from $750,000 to $1,000,000, and that there was little doubt that the assets would meet the liabilities. The firm has enjoyed an enviable reputation, and after the announcement of its suspension received many offers of substantial assistance.

PROBABLY NO ASSIGNMENT.

Henry Allen, the senior partner, was with his lawyer, C. H. Brush, during the day. Mr. Brush said of his client's plight: "I was in the office of Allen & Co. at 10 o'clock this morning and then there appeared to be no necessity for an assignment. Now I do not think that it was necessary. The firm is examining into the condition of its affairs. It took the first step necessary in notifying the Stock Exchange of its embarrassment. I do not think there will be an assignment. The members of the firm have a host of friends, and I would not be surprised if they saw them through. The suspension was caused by the sudden shrinkage in stock values and inability to reach important clients out of town."

Allen & Co. kept their account at the Bank of the State of New York. Its President, Richard L. Edwards, said: "This firm has a big balance to its credit. Its banking affairs were in the best of shape. This morning there appeared to be no more reason for its suspending than for you or me to suspend. But it couldn't get money it should have had quick enough. I hear it will pay everything, and I hope it's so."

The present firm of Henry Allen & Co., founded Feb. 28, 1896, consists of the senior member and his stepson, Edward L. Norton, the Stock Exchange member. The former firm of the same name was compelled on May 4, 1893, to make an assignment by the slump in National Cordage from 37 to 18¾, which carried the market down. With Allen & Co., R. L. Smyth & Co. and Schuyler Walden were caught in the bear market maelstrom. Deacon S. V. White failed the next day, and several Consolidated Exchange concerns met with disaster. Allen & Co. settled their affairs honorably, and when they started anew they prospered.

DEFENDANTS IN A BIG SUIT.

Henry Allen & Co. are defendants in a sensational civil suit brought against them by James N. Veazey of Cincinnati to recover a sum which is estimated at about $1,000,000. The matter is now in the hands of Hamilton Odell of 35 Nassau Street, as referee.

Veazey was Superintendent of the sales department of Tullidge & Co. of Cincinnati, one of the largest whisky firms in existence. His testimony before the Congressional investigation of the affairs of the Whisky Trust six years ago was instrumental in breaking up that great combination.

Mr. Veazey asserts that at that time Henry Allen & Co. entered into an agreement with him that if he would keep them in constant touch with all that went on before the committee in Washington, they would give him 50 per cent. of whatever sum they might realize as a result of this information.

He declares that on some days he sent them as many as 400 telegraphic dispatches, and besides was in constant telephonic communication with them. As a result of these efforts Allen & Co. have been said to have cleared a profit of about $2,000,000 by their operations in Wall Street. They offered him a small sum as his share, he says, and he commenced action for an accounting against them through Hoadly, Lauterbach & Johnson. The matter came up in the Supreme Court about six weeks ago.

When the plaintiff's evidence was all in a motion was made to dismiss the case on the ground that the action was contrary to public policy and therefore void. Counsel for both sides made arguments, and were instructed to submit briefs to the referee, which they promised to do by Jan. 1. Neither side has as yet done so.

Edgar M. Johnson of Hoadly, Lauterbach & Johnson said yesterday that, while the failure of Henry Allen & Co. was apt to make a great difference in the sum they might ultimately recover, it would make not the slightest difference in the prosecution of the suit.

RELIEF FOR MONEY MARKET.

Action of J. P. Morgan & Co. and the Committee of Bankers—Treasury to Deposit Funds.

Aside from the failures, which contributed principally to the production of yesterday's panic, the most important events of the day were the offer of $1,000,000 at 6 per cent. by J. P. Morgan & Co. and the meeting of bankers at the Clearing House, which resulted in an offer of $10,000,000 at the same rate. These offers quieted the call money market, in which the rate had risen to 186 per cent., representing a commission of one-half of 1 per cent. a day, in addition to the regular rate of 6 per cent. Under their influence call money closed at 8 per cent.

When matters were at about the worst point Frederick D. Tappen, President of the Gallatin National Bank, and J. Edward Simmons, President of the Fourth National Bank, hastily summoned the Presidents of the leading banking institutions of the city, and about 2:20 P. M. they met informally in the Clearing House, twelve in number.

There were present, besides Messrs. Simmons and Tappen, both of whom are members of the Clearing House Committee, President E. H. Perkins, Jr., of the Importers and Traders' Bank; President James T. Woodward of the Hanover National Bank, President Henry W. Cannon of the Chase National Bank, President James Stillman of the National City Bank, President George F. Baker of the First National Bank, President George C. Williams of the Chemical National Bank, President W. A. Nash of the Corn Exchange Bank, Vice President Richard Delafield of the National Park Bank, President Stephen Baker of the Bank of the Manhattan Company, and President Mason of the Bank of New York.

CONTRIBUTION OF $10,000,000.

They discussed the situation and promptly agreed to put $10,000,000 into the market, each bank contributing in proportion to the balance it could spare. One of the bank Presidents mentioned said afterward that the banks contributed from $500,000 to $3,000,000 each. Another said the general run of contributions was about equal—something under $1,000,000.

The money was immediately offered to the loan crowd on the Stock Exchange through Howard P. Frothingham. It found the money rate then about 50 per cent., and the offer of this large sum promptly brought it down to about 6 per cent., though it rallied slightly before the close of the day's business. The situation had been somewhat relieved before the arrival of this $10,000,000 by the loan of $1,000,000 made by the house of J. P. Morgan & Co. This, followed by the prompt action of the banks, gave the money rate nearly as sensational a tumble as its ascent had been. Of the $10,000,000 offered at least $8,000,000 was taken by the loan crowd.

Deputy Assistant Treasurer Maurice L. Muhleman at the Sub-Treasury, in discussing the situation of the money market yesterday referred to the fact that the Government had still some $5,000,000 worth of bonds to buy out of the $25,000,000 which it recently decided to purchase as a means of relieving the money market. "If money is as tight as it is thought," he said, "it is surprising to me that the price of all these bonds is not forced down to the point where the Government has agreed to buy them, as the money obtained by their sale could be so advantageously loaned in the open market. It may be that it is not so much stringency that accounts for to-day's money troubles as the unreliable character of some of the securities on which it is sought to borrow funds."

The call has been issued for a meeting of bankers at the Clearing House at 11 o'clock this morning to consider the money situation and take steps to relieve it.

ACTION OF SECRETARY GAGE.

The following is the text of a dispatch received last night from Washington, conveying the promise of the Treasury Department to take steps to relieve the money situation:

"The Secretary of the Treasury announced at the close of business to-day that he would increase the funds in depository banks now existing, and would designate new depository banks, which may apply and qualify themselves by deposit of United States bonds as the law requires. To such banks the incoming receipts from internal revenue, estimated at about $1,000,000 per day, will be distributed. The large balance in the Treasury will enable the Government to deposit to a total of thirty or forty millions, should so much be applied for."

The promised action of the Government was one of the uppermost topics of discussion last night at the up-town hotels. "Thirty millions," said ex-Senator Jacob A. Cantor, at the Hoffman House, "is a mere drop in the bucket. One hundred millions is needed. I see no reason for the panic; but it is here, and we must do the best we can."

"The whole trouble," said a bystander, a gentleman prominent in public affairs and possessing large means, "is that the revenues of the Government are too large and money needed in business is being hoarded in the Federal Treasury. When Mr. Cleveland was President, bonds were sold to get money, but now the Government has the money, but cannot find the means to put it in circulation. At this time of the year capitalists buy bonds to escape taxation, and the average bondholder is not a philanthropist. The trouble which culminated today began last September, when money was sent West and South to move the crops. Wall Street expected that money back, but it did not come because the West and South needed it in legitimate business, due to the general prosperity."

GHOST SCARE, SAYS MR. DEPEW.

The Senator Deprecates the Alarm Over the South African War.

United States Senator Chauncey M. Depew was at the Holland House last night. Talking with a reporter, he said:

"A singular illustration of either modern apprehension of the horrors of war, or hysterical nervousness over nothing, is the panic in securities and the distress of the public over the losses in the battles in South Africa. In all the battles there, of which so much has been made, there have been 1,000 killed, 3,000 wounded, and 2,000 taken prisoners and missing. This is the net result of four battles, which, the headlines say, are the bloodiest in history, and, Wall Street says, unparalleled.

"Those of us who remember the civil war, and were more or less in it, recollect 23,000 killed and wounded on our side in the battle of Gettysburg. We remember about 10,000 a day, killed and wounded, in the battles of the Wilderness for seven days in succession. The country met these horrors with perfect calm. By calmness, I mean that while the distress was great with all people for the terrible loss of life and the frightful suffering of the soldiers, business did not lose its head.

"With $240,000,000 of gold lying idle in the National Treasury to-day, with the business of the country in every department of activity more prosperous than ever before in our history, with Europe piling up her indebtedness to us at the rate of about $125,000,000 a week, which must be paid in gold or its equivalent, with the war in the Philippines practically over, the political economist and financial writer of the future will say that the panic at the close of 1899 was the biggest ghost scare in the annals of history."

POLITICIANS ON THE PANIC.

Some of Them Said to Have Been Hard Hit—Talk of the Cause and the Political Effects.

At the up-town hotels there were manifestations of feverish excitement yesterday. Around the stock boards and tickers groups of men stood eagerly watching the chalking of quotations or the running of the tape. Every now and again there was an exclamation denoting disappointment or despair. According to reports in circulation, many politicians from up the State have been hard hit. They would not admit it, but their countenances in some instances were gloomy enough to confirm the rumors.

The causes and effects of the panic, especially with reference to its bearing on the political situation, were freely discussed. In one group were seen ex-Senator J. Irving Burns of Westchester and Charles S. Wilbur, Commissioner of the Federal Census. They did not agree as to the origin of the trouble.

"I think we need more money," said Mr. Wilbur.

"We have money enough," replied Mr. Burns. "The gold reserve in the Treasury on Dec. 1 was abnormally large, and the figures show that money in this country has increased from about $19 to $25 per capita since 1896."

Col. Atterholt of Akron, Ohio, is regarded as a well-informed financier. Talking with a reporter at the Albemarle, he said: "I have been expecting something of this sort. Wall Street is generally a few weeks ahead of the West, and I am fearful that unless there is a speedy rally, there are serious times ahead."

An Ohio capitalist who makes his home at the Fifth Avenue Hotel and is largely interested in many enterprises, said, when the promise was given not to use his name: "Let the component parts of the industrials go in on their own securities. Then they will be on a basis to invite competition and on a footing fair and equitable to all concerned. There will be no furries then, and investors will be secured against these revolutionary periods in the stock market. It is likely that in the future the consolidation of individuals will be in the nature of a mutual compact among themselves, without the aid of New York promoters, who have always inflated the capitalization beyond that which is considered safe in order to secure a round recompense for themselves.

"In order to consolidate an industry, it has appeared to be necessary to have the aid of some outside influence, as the manufacturers themselves are jealous of one another. This gave a new field to promoters, mainly in this city, who have acquired millions of these stocks."

Among politicians, there were many who said that a great depression in Wall Street securities would mean a rise of Bryan stock. John W. Bookwalter of Ohio, who is at the Holland House, said:

"I predicted this break months ago. We must have an increased circulating medium or we must decrease the volume of business. There is not enough money to do the business of the country. We are about to adopt another financial measure, but that will not afford a remedy. Gold is being recognized as the money standard of the Western world. Paper is not money, and we have not gold enough."

RUSSELL SAGE IS CHEERFUL.

He Talks Hopefully, Especially of the Gas War and Manhattan.

Russell Sage was seen after the close of the market yesterday, and seemed undisturbed by the exciting events of the day. He thought that one good result might be expected from the day of panic—a bettering of the gas situation. In response to a question as to how negotiations were progressing for a settlement of the gas war he said:

"Well, they are always going on. Every day, I believe, is a step in advance, and we are gradually getting to a position where there will be an end of rate-cutting. This tumbling of stocks to-day will do something to further the movement. It will tend to bring the people interested to a realization of the folly of cutting one another's throats."

Mr. Sage was asked what he took to be the cause of the panicky condition of the market.

"I lay it to the fact that people had bought stocks at fictitious values," said he, "and began to see that their holdings were not worth what they had paid for them, and so made an effort to get out of them quickly. That started the movement."

In response to a question about the dividend which the Standard Gas Light Company recently omitted to declare, Mr. Sage said: "That will come along all right. It will be paid in due course. It belongs to our stockholders, and they will get it."

Mr. Sage expressed his continued confidence in Manhattan, and said that the possibility of having to get out of Battery Park in a few days was not worrying him. "I don't think they will make us get out," said he. "I think some consideration will be shown for the large traveling public, which depends on the Manhattan Railway Company for daily transportation."

CLEVELAND INVESTORS LOSE.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Dec. 18.—Cleveland investors lost quite a good deal of money yesterday on account of the big break in stocks in Wall Street. Some estimate the loss at more than $1,000,000, but this, it is thought, places it too high. Those who make the estimate show that the promoters of a good many of those companies on which the stocks broke live in Cleveland. Therefore these men back the industries heavily.

On Sunday the reports received here were to the effect that rock bottom had been reached and that, as all the concerns were making immense profits, the stock must go up despite any prospective stringency in the money market. This occasioned a great deal of ordering and a good many thousands of dollars were placed. The stocks went from five to six points lower during the day than at the opening, and all of the Cleveland money went to the New York bears.

STOCK PANIC IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 18.—This was the most exciting day in years on the Baltimore Stock Exchange. Trust stocks were hammered unmercifully on account of the failures. The bottom dropped out of the trust company stocks, in which there has been more or less of a boom for nearly a year. The slump carried prices down anywhere from 1 to 15 points. Support seemed to have been entirely withdrawn. Even at the low level substantial interests were slow about according the market support.

In many instances the lowest prices of the year were recorded. International Trust led the downward movement with an extreme decline of 13 points. Mercantile Trust broke 12 points, Continental Trust 8 points, Maryland Casualty 4 points, United States Fidelity and Guarantee 7 points, Fidelity and Deposit 5 points, and Maryland Trust 5 points. Many weak accounts were wiped out during the day. Some brokers forced speculative clients to sell. They adopted this course for self-protection, as many of their calls for additional margin were not heeded.

There were declines as high as two points between sales. In some respects it was the most exciting day in the history of the Stock Exchange, and the only reason that liquidation was not heavier was because there was no market to absorb the offerings. Conservative financiers characterized the scare as foolish.

STUDENTS RIOT IN DUBLIN.

Attack Mansion House And Tear Down Green Flag—Cheer Mr. Chamberlain in the Streets.

DUBLIN, Dec. 18.—The Trinity College students to-day made a demonstration at the Mansion House, where they tore the green Corporation flag to shreds and caused other damage, the police being forced to intervene.

The students numbered about 150. They beat the caretaker, who attempted to protect the Corporation flag.

At the college the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred on Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, the British Secretary of State for the Colonies. There was a brilliant assemblage at the ceremony. The undergraduates gathered on the college grounds and sang patriotic songs. Then they sallied to College Green, cheering vociferously and carrying the royal standard and the union jack. The latter was captured by the police, much to the annoyance of the students, who returned to the college in an ugly mood.

The students made a desperate effort to recapture the union jack, but the police were too strong for them. In the meantime a hostile crowd had assembled on College Green and more stringent measures were taken to keep the students within the gates.

Mr. Chamberlain and his wife and Lady Betty Balfour, when driving to the college, were cheered at some points. But there was a noticeable difference of opinion among the crowds lining the streets. While the procession was passing from the Provost's residence to Examination Hall the cheering was deafening. The students lined the passage and held aloft union jacks, under which the procession passed. Mr. Chamberlain appeared to thoroughly enjoy the demonstration. As the procession entered the hall all the people present rose and cheered Mr. Chamberlain.

At the close of the ceremony Mr. Chamberlain, in response to the cries of the students, said they had met under very disappointing circumstances. If the arrangements had been recent, he added, he would not have chosen the present occasion to receive the honor from the university. Their minds, Mr. Chamberlain continued, were solemnized by the serious news from South Africa, but England had always been accustomed to hold her own in adversity. He was old enough to remember the Crimea and the earlier period of the Indian mutiny, when England met with greater disasters than she had just experienced, but eventually the nation sprang to its feet and recovered its equanimity, and no doubt it would do so again.

In conclusion, Mr. Chamberlain exhorted the students, now that he was one of their doctors, to practice the virtues of toleration and patience.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—The papers are ridiculing the Daviti-O'Brien "fiasco" at Dublin, as the attempt to hold a pro-Boer meeting there yesterday is termed. They point out that they "prudently kept within the walls, where a member of the audience directly incited the murder of Mr. Chamberlain by alluding to his visit to the Castle in the words, 'there was one man shot there before.'"

All the advertised speakers are charged with having "played hide and seek with the police," with the exception of Miss Maud Gonne, "who bravely faced the music, but was of course protected by her sex."

WARREN TO REINFORCE METHUEN.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—According to a dispatch from Cape Town, Gen. Sir Charles Warren and his staff have started for De Aar. This seems to indicate that the Fifth Division will be sent to reinforce Lord Methuen, a decision which will meet with general approval, as the opinion is almost everywhere held that it would be useless to waste any more time by frittering away men between the various columns.

The Morning Post, in a rather alarmist article, remarks upon the difficulty of deciding such a crucial matter, and says:

"Besides three Generals in the field, all of whom need to be reinforced, there is the rebellion in Cape Colony to be considered. This makes four pressing calls on the Fifth Division. The trouble is, Who is to decide and on what principle?"

The Morning Post, reviewing the various positions of the beleaguered commanders and garrisons, asserts that the relief of Ladysmith is the most important emergency and that a victory in Natal would change the whole face of affairs. It also points out the urgent need of having the navy in readiness to move at any moment to protect the line of communication with South Africa, suggesting that "a quarrel with some foreign power might come any day, without any British intention to have one."

NEW YORK APPLAUSE CAUSES JOY.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—The Daily News, comments upon the spontaneous response to the Government's appeal for volunteers from all parts of the empire.

It says the most remarkable scene of all recorded from the United States was the demonstration in favor of the British in the Church of the Messiah, in New York City, during the discourse of the Rev. Dr. Minot J. Savage on Sunday.

Boers Blow Up a Bridge.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—A dispatch from the Modder River, dated Saturday, Dec. 16, says the Boers have blown up the railroad culverts two miles north of Gen. Methuen's camp.

WAR CAUSES GRAIN TO ADVANCE.

CHICAGO, Dec. 18.—Indications that the war in South Africa has reached a proportion sufficient to actuate a marked improvement in the foreign demand caused a sharp advance in wheat to-day, May closing 1¾c over Saturday. Other grains were influenced by wheat, May corn closing ¾c and May oats ½@¾c higher.

The small world's shipments, the decrease on passage and other statistics rather bullish were completely overshadowed in the wheat pit by the foreign news. May wheat opened ½@¾c over Saturday at 69¾@70c. Shorts covered, but offerings were not liberal and the price advanced to 70¼@70¾. From this point the market early dropped off to the initial figures on selling against privileges, as the price was far above calls. But this was regained, and from that point to the close the advance was persistent.

DR. ANDREWS SEES WORLD AT WAR

CHICAGO, Dec. 18.—"If Great Britain is ultimately successful in South Africa, the powers of the world will unite to resist her advance. A coalition will be formed against British domination, and when this war of the nations comes, which side will the United States take? We must take one side or the other. That will be a sad day for our Nation. Yet I say we never have got into a scrape yet that we did not get out of. And, as a prophetic American, I tell you we never shall."

The foregoing statement was made by Dr. E. Benjamin Andrews, ex-President of Brown University and now Superintendent of the Chicago public schools, in his address on the "War in South Africa," at the Bethel African Methodist Episcopal Church last evening. The occasion was the Men's Sunday Forum Meeting, and Dr. Andrews startled his hearers by the declaration that international war was inevitable and would follow the success of Great Britain in the Boer war. He announced that from the moment Kruger's followers surrendered, England necessarily would come in conflict with other powers in carrying out its plans of colonization.

He declared that clashes would follow the attempt to build the Cape to Cairo Railroad, and that the contemplated effort of Great Britain to build a railroad from the Suez Canal to Bombay, which would give that nation a direct means of throwing munitions of war into the lands about the headwaters of the Euphrates, would be resisted.

The address of Dr. Andrews was heard by an audience that packed the chapel. Several times he referred to the wrongs of the African people, both in the United States and in Africa, and his words brought out great cheering.

HIBERNIANS TO RAISE $1,000,000.

Movement Started in St. Louis to Aid the Boers.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 18.—At a meeting of the County Board of the Ancient Order of Hibernians the Boer-British war was discussed at length, and the members decided to start a movement to raise $1,000,000 for the purpose of equipping and transporting troops to South Africa to aid the Boers in their fight for independence.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the Ancient Order of Hibernians, recognizing the great importance of the success of the Boers in their war in the Transvaal against the hereditary enemy of the Irish race, urgently request our National President to call a meeting of the National Directory for the purpose of causing $1,000,000 to be subscribed by the members of the order in America, to be applied in equipping and transporting men for the South African war and otherwise aiding the gallant Boers in their fight for liberty, the destruction and dismemberment of the British Empire, and the advance of the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

We further urge that this sum be raised by a popular per capita assessment of $10, and that immediate action be taken for the collection of this fund.

CHICAGO, Dec. 18.—John T. Keating, National President of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, said to-day that the plan to raise $1,000,000 in the organization to aid in fitting out troops to help the Boers in their fight with the British met with the enthusiastic indorsement of every member of the order. Speaking of the movement Mr. Keating said:

"Personally, I am in hearty accord with it. We have more than 200,000 members, and if each member gives $5 toward the fund it would not be difficult to raise the proposed $1,000,000."

NOVEL TEACHINGS OF THE WAR.

German Critic Says Value of Militia Is Shown.

BERLIN, Dec. 18.—The situation in South Africa and its reflex influence on European politics continue to occupy the German press. An influential military writer in the Berliner Tageblatt says:

"The British, for the near future, will be confined to the defensive in all three seats of war. They will be unable to overcome the Boers even after receiving all available aid from home and from the colonies unless they adopt Boer tactics themselves, which they are unable to do. In a military sense the Boer war has already been productive of novel teachings, especially showing that war is well possible with militia."

GEN. FRENCH FORCED TO RETIRE.

Superior Boer Artillery Drives British Troops Back.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—A dispatch to The Daily Mail from Naauw Poort, Cape Colony, dated Dec. 16, says:

"The Boers brought a big gun to bear on the British near Vaar Kop. The British pieces were too small to reach the enemy; and, after an intermittent artillery duel, Gen. French withdrew under shell fire, but without losses, to Arundel."

GATACRE'S GUIDES FOUND DEAD.

Men Who Misled the British Shot on Battlefield.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—A dispatch to The Daily Mail from Frere Camp says that the bodies of two of the guides who misled Gen. Gatacre at Stormsberg were found on the battlefield.

The men had been shot.

To Build a Big Organ Factory.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Dec. 18.—The negotiations between the Garwood Land Improvement Company and the Organ Trust for the location of the consolidated factories of the latter at Garwood have been successful, and work will be started this week on the construction of buildings that will give employment to 800 skilled mechanics when the factories are in operation, which will be within a year. One of the considerations of the contract entered into between the trust and the land company is that the name of the town shall be changed to either Aeolian or Vocalion.

SOCIETY AT THE OPERA

The Wealth and Fashion of the Metropolis on View Last Night.

RICH COSTUMES AND JEWELS

Great Auditorium Presented a Brilliant Scene, with Prominent Women in Their Smartest Gowns.

The second marked event of the Winter social season—the opening of the opera—occurred last evening. Although the evening brought the usual scenes, an array of wealth and fashion in the boxes, and a house in which nearly every seat was taken, and in which hundreds of men and women stood in the spaces back of the parquet the performance through, the atmosphere of the great house was not a warm one, and there was something lacking which made the event appreciably less brilliant than last year

The cause of this dimmed brilliancy was not difficult to discern. The anxious faces of the men who restlessly moved from box to box and who were during the acts gathered in the corridors to discuss not the new tenor, not the music, but Wall Street, told the story. The memories of a day of financial panic and the fears of what to-day may bring were too vivid to be allayed by varied colors, flashing lights and jewels, the smiles of beauty, and Gounod's matchless melodies. So close are the relations of the marts of finance to the world of society that even those who hold great fortunes felt and saw that a chill was in the air.

But as Nero fiddled when Rome burned, New York society tried to throw off the memory of its losses of yesterday and its fears for to-day, and made a brave if forced showing of wealth and gayety.

Although this Winter there are many prominent families in mourning, notably the Vanderbilts, the Goelets, and a branch of the Belmonts, all owners of boxes in the parterre, there were no empty places, and the "glittering horseshoe" showed an unbroken circle of fashionable women, beautifully gowned and with regal jewels, while the tier above was but a repetition of the one below.

In fact, the entire house was filled, although not as crowded as on the first night of last year, and the women in the orchestra chairs and the parquet and also in the dress circle and even the upper balconies were nearly all attired in handsome evening toilettes, which made the scene, as always, a fascinating one. All the leaders of fashion wore their most becoming gowns and made a dazzling display of jewels, and during the intermissions those in the audience not in the most fashionable parts of the house seemed to enjoy the spectacle of New York society on parade quite as much as they did the woes of the fair Juliet and her gallant Romeo, as told by the melodic genius of Gounod.

The parterre showed a few new faces, and there were also new subscribers in a few of the parterre and second tier boxes and in the parquet. But the majority of all the old operagoers were there, many of them filled with reminiscences of other seasons, and even with stories of the days of opera houses where society was wont to gather long before even the Academy of Music and its predecessor, the house in Astor Place, were built.

As usual, the fashionable part of the audience was late in arriving, and it was only after the curtain descended upon the second act that the sudden flash of lights revealed that the social part of the annual function was at its full. From almost 8 o'clock the approaches to the opera were crowded with many women, evidently dressmakers and milliners who came to see the latest fashions

There was not very much revealed in the quick flight from the carriage to the lobby, but there was quite a study in wraps, which, like last year, were extremely handsome and showy. There was a great quantity of costly fur used in the adornment of these garments and a lavish use of the richest materials.

THE ASTOR BOX.

Mrs. Astor arrived just at the close of the second act. As usual, Mr. Harry Lehr sat in the box from the beginning of the performance. The entrance of the Astors created a veritable sensation. Mrs. Astor wore a black velvet gown brocaded in white and all her famous diamonds, including a stomacher of these precious stones, a band of black velvet around her neck sewn with enormous brilliants and a diamond coiffure with white plumes. Mrs. John Jacob Astor was absolutely radiant in a gray gown most elaborately embroidered in silver and jewels.

It was worn quite décolleté, and in her hair and on her neck she wore superb diamonds. The Astor box drew all eyes, although there were some very remarkable and striking costumes in the house. Among these were the black velvet, trimmed with diamonds, of Mrs. Starr Miller; the gowns of silver mail worn by Miss Van Nest and Mrs. Charles Carroll Jackson; Miss Clews's very vivid pink gown, Mrs. Edmund T. Baylies's frock of a most remarkable shade of green, and the lavender frock and wonderful pearls of Lady Colebrook.

SOME BOXHOLDERS' GOWNS.

The gowns worn last evening were of unusual beauty, and the use of spangled and elaborate embroideries added to the general effect. In Gen. Thomas's box No. 1 were Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, who wore a very light shade of Nile green simply made and diamonds, and Miss Thomas in gray embroidered in silver, with a large corsage bunch of pink roses.

In Box No. 3 were Mrs. R. T. Wilson in gray brocade and diamonds, Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies in bright apple-green velvet with a diamond star and a tall green feather, and Mrs. Orme Wilson in mauve and diamonds. Mr. R. T. Wilson, Mr. Edmund L. Baylies, and Mr. Orme Wilson were the men in the box. In Box No. 5 were Mrs. George Peabody Wetmore in black and white, Miss Wetmore in pink, and Senator George Peabody Wetmore.

The Astor box, which comes next, has already been described. In Box 9 were Mrs. Stanford White, in white satin and diamonds, and Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson, in black tulle; Mr. Charles Dana Gibson, and Mr. Stanford White.

Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Harriman, Mr. William Harriman, and Dr. Lewis Rutherfurd Morris.

In Box 13 were Mrs. Lloyd Bryce in white, with shoulder straps of pink velvet; Miss Bryce in white, with a large pink bow in her hair, and Mrs. Richard Hunt in pale pink. In Box 15 were Miss Iselin in gray, and Mrs. Beresford in yellow satin and diamonds.

In Box 19 was Miss Barbey, in white, with a large bow of orange velvet on the shoulder, and Mrs. Pierre Lorillard, Jr., in black. In Box 21 was Mrs. Benjamin Brewster in black. Box 24 is that of Elbridge T. Gerry. Mrs. Gerry wore a black gown embroidered heavily in iridescent jet and hung with diamonds. She had a white feather in her hair. Miss Gerry was in blue, and Miss Mabel Gerry in pink. Mrs. John Sloane and Miss Evelyn Sloane were in Box 25. Miss Sloane was in lavender and wore a large bouquet of violets. Mrs. Fordyce Barker and Miss Barker were in Box 27.

In Box 29 were Mrs. Charles Carroll Jackson, Miss Van Nest, and Mrs. Alexander Van Nest. Both Mrs. Jackson and Miss Van Nest wore most striking costumes of silver cloth which fitted perfectly to the figure and silver ornaments. Mrs. Van Nest was in white and diamonds. In Box 31 were Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock was in lavender and Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., in white.

In Box 35 were Mrs. Pierpont Morgan and the Misses Morgan. Mrs. Heber Bishop, in black; Miss Bishop, in white, and Mrs. James F. D. Lanier, in black, were in Box 34, and in Box 32 were Mrs. Luther Kountze, in black and diamonds, and the Marquise de Tallyrand-Perigord, who wore a striking costume of black velvet and a tiara of diamonds and diamond ropes, and a large star or net corsage.

In Box 30, that of William C. Whitney, were Lady Colebrook in mauve, embroidered profusely in silver and ropes of pearls, and Mrs. Almeric Paget in pink, Sir Edward Colebrook and Almeric Paget. In Box 28 were Mrs. Bayard Cutting in white velvet and Miss Cutting in white. In Box 24 were Mrs. Theodore Frelinghuysen in mauve and diamonds. Mrs. F. S. Witherbee, in mauve, embroidered in silver and diamonds, and Mrs. Watts Sherman in black velvet, with corsage ornaments of diamonds and diamond aigrette, were in Box 22.

Mrs. Ogden Mills had a beautiful gown of pink satin embroidered in silver, which was fastened with pink roses. In her hair she wore a large diamond ornament. With her was Miss Crocker of California, in white. She wore a very becoming coiffure of pink roses. Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, in mauve, sat in the back of the box.

Mrs. H. Pembroke Jones had Box 18. Her gown was of light gray embroidered in silver, and she wore superb diamonds. With her was Mrs. Charles Oelrichs, who was in white, with a large bow of pink ribbon in her hair, and Mrs. Willie Jay, who only remained a short time. Mrs. Jay was in white and wore a superb garniture of diamonds and emeralds. In Box 16 were Mrs. Levi P. Morton in black, and the Misses Morton, one in pink and one in white.

Mrs. Starr Miller, who was with her sister-in-law, Mrs. George Henry Warren, wore an extraordinary gown of black velvet with shoulder straps of diamonds and a diamond necklace. Her hair was worn in the same style as affected by Mrs. T. Suffern Tailer, and it was crowned with a great eight-pointed tiara of diamonds. Mrs. George Henry Warren wore black velvet and diamonds, and a diamond crown, very small, in the shape of the one worn on state occasions by Queen Victoria.

Mrs. Henry Clews, in Box 12, wore a beautiful white gown with shoulder straps of green velvet and diamonds. Miss Clews, who was with her, had a very vivid pink gown and pink roses, and in her hair she wore a velvet ornament of the same kind. Mrs. William Goadby Loew, who was Miss "Queenie" Baker, was with Mrs. Baker, in Box 10. Her gown was white, with garniture of pink roses and diamonds.

In Box 8 were Mr. Cornelius Bliss and his family. Mrs. Bliss wore gray and black and Miss Bliss was in white. In Box 6 were Mr. Schuyler Parsons and Miss Parsons. Miss Parsons was in white, with white roses. In the August Belmont box was Mrs. James Speyer, in very light blue and diamonds. In the box were also Mr. Murray Young, Mr. Speyer, and Mr. Frederic Baldwin.

In Box No. 2 were Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Juilliard. Mrs. Juilliard wore black and silver brocade.

THE GRAND TIER BOXES.

On the Grand Tier, in Box No. 37, were Mrs. Sanford Bissell and Miss Julia Wells. They had with them as guests Mrs. Ferdinand Wilmerding, Adjt. Gen. Corbin, Herbert Livingston Satterlee, and Everett J. Wendell. Miss Wells was in gray satin, embroidered with jewels, and Mrs. Sanford Bissell wore yellow satin, with a garniture of nasturtiums, jewels, and diamonds.

In Box 39 were Mrs. Frederic Goodridge and her daughter, Mrs. Gouverneur Carnahan; in Box 41 were Mrs. Westervelt, who had with her as guests Mrs. Belle Neilson, James K. Gracie, G. M. Tooker, and Leonidas Westervelt. Mrs. Westervelt was in black, Mrs. Neilson wore an empire gown of black and white with garniture of roses; Miss E. L. Breese was in Box 45, and in Box 47 were Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Riker.

F. B. Jennings and family occupied Box 49 and Jacob H. Schiff was in Box 51, and Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Thompson and Miss Sara Gibbs Thompson in Box 53. Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Poore and Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Converse occupied Boxes 36 and 38, respectively. In Box 30 were Mr. and Mrs. Talbot J. Taylor, formerly Miss Jessie Keene, and there were rumors in the house during the evening that Mr. James R. Keene was also in this box. Mr. Jefferson Coddington had a party in Box 46. Among those in the stall boxes were Mrs. Henry L. Burnett, in pink, and Mr. and Mrs. James L. Martin. Mr. and Mrs. John C. Cowdin, and Mrs. Francis M. Banks.

Among others in the orchestra seats and other parts of the house were Mr. and Mrs. Victor Sorchan, Mrs. Robert G. Remsen, Miss Remsen, Miss Elizabeth Remsen, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Peters, Mr. and Mrs. McCoskry Butt, Mrs. Henry Draper, Mrs. Peter Hayden, Mr. and Mrs. James Hude Beeckman, Mr. and Mrs. Albert E. Shattuck, Mrs. Burke Dodge, Miss Dodge, W. Emlen Roosevelt, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Haggin, G. G. Frelinghuysen, Henry Livingston, Dr. J. P. Munn, Mr. and Mrs. Brayton Ives, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Postley, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sturgis, Mr. and Mrs. Ralli, F. E. Pearsall, Mr. and Mrs. Percival Kuhne, Thomas Cushing, Miss Edith Cushing, Tracy Dows, Mrs. Grace Townsend Gray, Harry Sands, Percy Bramwell, Wainwright Parish, Clinton Adams.

Isidor Wormser, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Myers, Judge and Mrs. C. H. Truax, R. W. Tailer, E. N. Tailer, Mr. and Mrs. George L. Rives, Miss Whiting, Mr. and Mrs. Robinson Smith, Warren Delano, Jr., Edward M. Shepard, F. A. Constable, Eliot Gregory, Mr. and Mrs. Isidor Wormser, Jr., Worthington Whitehouse, Charles Pfizer, Creighton Webb, Harry Batcheller, William C. Schermerhorn, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel W. Bridgeman, H. C. Beadleston, R. De Foores, Mr. and Mrs. Paul D. Cravath, A. P. Montant, Bruce Price, E. R. Post, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Butler Duncan, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Bloodgood, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Hendricks, Mrs. Gouverneur Kortright, Mrs. James Andariese, Mr. and Mrs. H. K. Porter, M. and Mme. Chartran, Mrs. C. B. Wetherell, and Miss Sackett.

FEATURES OF THE PERFORMANCE.

M. Alvarez, the Tenor, Appears as Romeo and Is Much Applauded.

When Signor Mancinelli ascended to his chair of state and began to beat the rhythm of the prelude to the opera, the well-known and well-liked "Romeo et Juliette" of Gounod, the scene was so familiar that it was hard to believe that any time had elapsed since the same work had been performed before in the Metropolitan Opera House. But when the ballroom scene was disclosed to the eyes of the audience it was at once apparent that something had happened since last season. The scenic attire was new. It was the old scene, but it was so disguised in handsome new paint that only its general outline betrayed it. A similar and more elaborate surprise awaited the audience in the balcony scene, which was performed in a new and elaborate set of real beauty. A handsomer scene of the kind has not been presented in New York.

The liberality of Mr. Grau in giving us new scenery was excelled by his generosity in providing a new orchestra. Evidences of its superiority to the old one were not lacking, but it will not be necessary to discuss them in detail at present. There will be operas in which the work of the orchestra will play a more conspicuous part than it does in "Romeo et Juliette." Another matter which was noticeable immediately after the rise of the curtain last night was that the chorus had been subjected to some musical training. The passage expressive of admiration of Juliet was sung with more shading than heretofore, and it may be said at once that the work of the chorus throughout the evening was less rude than it used to be in the same opera.

With evidences at the beginning of the season of an intention on the part of the manager to improve the general background of the performances we may set on the Winter of 1899-1900 with reasonable hope that at least some of the slovenlin ss in the mise-en-scène which has too often been noticeable at the Metropolitan will disappear. This is a matter of grave importance. If our operatic institution is ever to rival those of Europe, we must have good orchestra, good chorus, and good mounting, and signs of advance in these matters should be hailed with delight.

The cast last night was one that could be equaled only by Mr. Grau himself. It would have graced the Grand Opera of Paris in the heyday of the fame of Gounod, and it was consistent with the dignity of a house in which many famous triumphs have been seen. The only important newcomer was M. Albert Alvarez, principal tenor of the Paris Opéra, who made his first appearance in this city, but not in America. First impressions of such artists as this are not always to be trusted, yet it seems safe to say that Romeo will prove not to be this gentleman's happiest achievement. A man of splendid presence, an actor of unsurpassed grace and much eloquence, an experienced routinière, and the possessor of a very fine voice, M. Alvarez was most effective in those scenes which permitted him to give full freedom to the volume of his tones.

His vocal method will call for further discussion, but the first impression made by it is that it is decidedly unfavorable to the delivery of such repressed and refined music as that of the balcony scene. The duet was beautifully sung, but the soliloquies were neither noble in tone nor absolutely true to the pitch. In the duel scene M. Alvarez had his opportunity, and he sang with splendid power, arousing the audience to great enthusiasm. He was recalled many times.

The other début was that of M. Illy, who sang Mercutio in a manner which might be described by his name, were that not bad English. The other principal singers were old friends. Mme. Eames made her reappearance as Juliet, and was accorded the hearty welcome which she deserves from this public. She was in good voice, although the best quality of her tones was not heard till the balcony scene. This she sang very poetically indeed, and with a warmer color in her voice than she has been wont to reveal. It may not be amiss to add that again her lovely appearance aided the illusion of the scene very greatly.

M. Plançon was again the familiar Capulet of old, and M. Edouard de Reszke was the Frere Laurence. These two stalwart and sonorous bassos maintain their hold on the public favor, and they earn the laurels which they wear. M. Plançon's voice has had a more velvety surface than it had last night, but his art had all of its usual dignity and elegance. M. Edouard de Reszke was in good voice and sang superbly. Mlle. Olitzka was an acceptable Stephano, and the other small parts were tolerably performed. On the whole, then, the season began with a generally good presentation of a lovely opera. Thus the enterprise is once more successfully under way. The pecuniary outlook is certain, and the artistic features of the season may henceforward be discussed at leisure and with freedom.

NEW THEATRICAL BILLS

Mansfield Revives Bernard Shaw's American Drama.

DUDGEON'S SELF-SACRIFICE

Other Changes of Bill—Gossip About Plays and Actors—In the Various Places of Amusement.

Bernard Shaw's smartly ironical drama called "The Devil's Disciple" wears very well for a piece of its character, and the performance of it given at the Garden Theatre last evening by Mr. Mansfield and his company was obviously enjoyed by the audience. To be sure, people who do not know the play continue to be misled by the idea they receive, because of Shaw's imperfect stagecraft, that Anthony Anderson is a coward who runs away to save his neck and leaves another man to die in his stead. This spoils the effect of the play for many, who thus fail to catch the author's point of view and are surprised by the dénouement.

But the wit of the dialogue has not begun to dim, and with Mansfield to act the sentimental cynic and heroic blackguard, Dick Dudgeon, the piece is likely to last some years yet. Mansfield's denotement of Dick's various and ill-assorted traits is always graphic, and in the closing scenes is remarkably facile and interesting. He cannot be said to win sympathy, but probably the author would regard the actor who did as much as that for his gruff and overfrank hero as a bad artist who misinterpreted him.

The supporting cast is not as good as it used to be, but Miss Edith Evelyn acts Judith well, and Mr. Kingdon is fairly good as Burgoyne. The actor who was most applauded last night, after the star, was Mr. Prince Lloyd, whose bad diction and lack of resource, however, were painfully apparent in the rôle of the purposeful Parson. Mr. Andrews, as the lout, and Miss Monk as the stern and bitter widow were as effective as ever.

PLAYERS TO HURRY FROM LONDON.

Boer War Drives "The Belle of New York" Company Home.

The depressing effect which the war in South Africa has had upon theatrical enterprises in England, more particularly in London, has prompted the management of the Shaftesbury Theatre, where "The Belle of New York" has been doing a phenomenal business for two years, to close the house after next Saturday night's performance.

The entire company will sail for this country on the first steamer it can board. Upon its arrival here it will be reinforced by Phyllis Rankin, Harry Davenport, and Dan Daly, and enter upon a week's engagement at the Casino, beginning Jan. 15. A tour of the United States, playing one or two nights in all the large cities, will follow. The revival of the play on Jan. 15 will necessitate a postponement of "Little Red Riding Hood," which was intended for production on this date.

"Carmen" at the Murray Hill.

"Carmen," an adaptation by John M. Morton from Prosper Mérimée's novel of the same title, is the revival which the members of the Donnelly Stock Company are appearing in at the Murray Hill Theatre this week The performance was in every respect satisfactory, the principal characters all being well played, and the scenic effects adequate.

Theatres and Music Halls.

THEATRE COMIQUE.—"Hoddy Dotty," with its many improvements, is distinctly a better attraction that it was the opening week.

MANHATTAN THEATRE.—Miss Anna Held continues in her successful attraction of "Papa's Wife." Its final days are still a great way off, the patronage being extraordinarily large.

EDEN MUSEE.—"Till's" Marionettes began their holiday engagement last evening. They presented a Christmas fantasy and a modification of "Blue Beard." In addition there were new moving pictures.

DEWEY THEATRE.—"The French Ball" and "A Female Seminary" were the titles of the burlesques given yesterday. The olio served to introduce Lowry and Rice, Josie Flynn, the Two Judges, Edson, a trick dog; the Sisters Revere, Dillon Brothers, and Nellie Hanly.

HUBER'S MUSEUM.—Francisco Lentine, a three-legged boy, is the chief attraction this week. Victorine, a sword swallower, is another leading feature. Lee Hang Fee, a Chinese magician; Herr Drayton, a cannon-ball juggler; Setuka, and others are also in the bill.

PROCTOR'S PALACE.—Yesterday's audiences appeared to find ample enjoyment in the programme, which included Jennie Yeamans, Gertrude Mansfield and Caryl Wilbur in a comedietta called "Color Blind," Watson, Hutchings, and Edwards; Doherty's poodles, Ward and Curran, Dick and Alice McAvoy, May Cook, Wilson and Leister, and Arthur Rigby.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.—James A. Herne's play "Shore Acres" was presented before a large audience last night. The company is a capable one. In the part of Nathaniel Berry, created by Mr. Herne, Charles G. Craig was exceptionally good. The play has a homely sort of realism that appeals strongly to the west side patrons of this house, especially about the Christmas season.

KEITH'S UNION SQUARE THEATRE.—In the programme yesterday a great many excellent features were shown, those especially interesting being Joseph Hart and Carrie De Mar, who appeared in a rather clever sketch. "The Girl with the Auburn Hair" continues to attract attention. Others in the bill were Mme. Adelaide Herrmann, the Smedley Sketch Club, Smith and Campbell, the Van Ankens, and Frank Cushman.

PROCTOR'S THEATRE.—In the programme presented yesterday there was an unusually large number of excellent comedy features, the particularly interesting ones being John C. Fox and Miss Katie Allen in a farce, Harry Howard's ponies and monkeys, Pauline Moran and Turner's pickaninnies, Conway and Leland, Halladay and Ward, the Kalateschnoscope, and the Freeze brothers.

HURTIG & SEAMON'S MUSIC HALL.—A large audience and an excellent bill marked the first night's performance at this house. The programme presented Lillian Burkhart in her sketch, "A Passing Fancy"; Charles Wayne and Anna Caldwell in their farce, "To Boston on Business"; Hastings and Wright, Okabe's troupe of Japanese, C. W. Littlefield, the Patterson brothers, De Veaux and De Veaux, and McMahon and King.

KOSTER & BIAL'S MUSIC HALL.—The change from extravaganza to straight vaudeville has evidently met with the approval of the patrons of this treatre, which was very evident from the large audience present last evening. The programme, which was one of the best offered at this house in a long time, included Clivette, Cushman Holcomb, and Curtis, an operatic trio; Binns and Binns, the Beaumont Sisters, Miss Marie Dressler, assisted by Adele Farrington, Helen Marvin, and many others.

HARLEM OPERA HOUSE.—"The Great Ruby," was revived at this house last night for the first time in New York since the play was withdrawn from Daly's Theatre last season. The audience was evidently pleased with the melodrama, almost every one of the big scenes being heartily applauded, and every act had its curtain calls. The cast included Miss Isabel Urquhart as Lady Garnett, White Whittlesey as Prince Kassim, George Heath as Captain Dalrymple, and Louis Massen as Sir John Garnett.

SOL SMITH RUSSELL ILL.

He Was Unable to Conclude His Performance in Chicago.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 18.—Sol Smith Russell was unable, on account of sickness, to complete the first act of "Hon. John Grigsby," at the Grand Opera House to-night. Mr. Russell made the announcement himself. So like an imaginary plea to a jury were his remarks, and so in keeping with the character of an early-day lawyer in Illinois, which he was portraying in the play, that the large audience failed to grasp his meaning until his last sentence was pronounced and he announced that he would return to his hotel and obey the instructions of his physician.

Mr. Russell's trouble is mental paralysis. He was unable to play last week, and spent the time in Minneapolis, his home. The engagement here is canceled. He went on the stage to-night against the advice of his doctor.

"Miss Hobbs" Pleases London.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—Charles Frohman presented Jerome K. Jerome's comedy, "Miss Hobbs," now running at the Lyceum Theatre in New York City, at the Duke of York's Theatre, London, this evening. Play and company met with a cordial reception. The principal rôles were taken by Miss Evelyn Millard, Herbert Waring, and Miss Agnes Miller.

BLACK TO FIGHT FOR PAYN.

Editorial Demand for the Superintendent's Reappointment—The Threatened Opposition to the Governor.

Gossip over the name of the man most likely to be nominated by Gov. Roosevelt to succeed Louis F. Payn as Superintendent of Insurance, and the discussion of the prospect of Payn being able to prevent confirmation by the Senate of any nomination other than his own, still continue to be the favorite pastime around Republican headquarters. Interest in the matter was heightened yesterday by an editorial which appeared in The Troy Daily Times, which is regarded as the personal organ of ex-Gov. Black, who appointed Payn to his present position. After commending the manner in which Mr. Payn has administered the business of the Insurance Department, the editorial, in part, declared:

Superintendent Payn deserves reappointment because the interests of the State, and of the insurers and insured in the State, will be best served by such an act. Superintendent Payn deserves reappointment because he has earned it.

Moreover, such a reappointment would be in harmony with Gov. Roosevelt's own promises as to his attitude toward faithful servants of the public.

The opportunity has come to Gov. Roosevelt to uphold one public servant who has done his duty well, and to keep his public pledge.

The Glens Falls Times, owned by ex-State Treasurer Colvin, in a recent issue also made an editorial demand for Payn's retention in office.

At headquarters it was said that these public announcements indicated that the friends of ex-Gov. Black were ready to oppose Gov. Roosevelt in the Legislature this Winter, and in next year's convention, if he refuses to reappoint Payn.

Reports from Albany yesterday declared that the Governor was considering some twenty names in his effort to find a man to succeed Payn. Among them are ex-Senator Persons of Buffalo, ex-Attorney General Hancock of Syracuse, and Emmett Rhodes of Auburn.

MR. WOODRUFF'S CANDIDACY.

Kings County Organization Indorses Him for Vice President.

The Republican organization of Brooklyn yesterday afternoon, through the Executive Committee, officially indorsed the aspirations of Lieut. Gov. Timothy L. Woodruff for the Vice Presidential nomination.

Mr. Woodruff resigned as Chairman of the committee and Michael J. Dady was chosen in his place. Mr. Dady was re-elected Chairman when the committee organized prior to the last campaign, but immediately afterward resigned. This move was made that Mr. Woodruff might become the head of the Campaign Committee as Chairman of the Executive Committee.

ROOT AND THE VICE PRESIDENCY.

H. C. Payne Says Sentiment Is in His Favor All Through the West.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 18.—Henry C. Payne of Wisconsin, speaking to-night of the Vice Presidency, said:

"Sentiment around Wisconsin, and in fact all through the West, is pronounced in favor of Secretary of War Root. The Western States, while they would naturally prefer a Western man ordinarily, are a unit for the Secretary, and in order to have him in the position are perfectly satisfied to let the nomination come East. I am satisfied that Mr. Root will be nominated, and I base my belief on what I have seen and heard in the past few months. Of coufse there is no doubt about McKinley's renomination, and I should not be surprised to see both him and Secretary Root named by acclamation."

TO OUST MR. DAVENPORT.

Alleged Plan to Get Office for a Republican.

It was said in Brooklyn yesterday that another attempt was being planned to legislate William B. Davenport, the Public Administrator, out of office. Efforts in this direction have been made before, but they have failed of their purpose. A bill, it is said, is being prepared for introduction at Albany, designed to make the office a salaried one. The bill, according to report, will be so worded that it will temporarily suspend the office, and when re-established Register Howe will have the appointment of a new man for the place.

This is declared to be an indication that the scheme is to oust Mr. Davenport that a Republican may get his place.

GRUBER'S BLOW AT QUIGG.

Anti-Platt Leader's Plan to Take Away Election Patronage.

At the meeting of the Republican County Committee, to be held next Thursday night, Abraham Gruber, the anti-Platt leader in the Twenty-first Assembly District, says he will introduce a resolution, which, if it is passed, will take from President Lemuel Ely Quigg much of the election patronage which he now has. At present the list of Republican Inspectors and clerks of election is made up by the President of the County Committee. Gruber wants to give the executive member or the delegation to the County Committee from each district the right to name these election officers.

Gruber and Quigg are political enemies, and the former claims that Quigg has inspired a fight against his leadership in the Twenty-first District. The object of this contest, according to Gruber, is to defeat him for election as a delegate to the National and State Conventions next year.

REPUBLICAN CLUB TICKET.

No Opposition to the Regular List, Including Senator Depew, Expected.

The Republican Club at its regular monthly meeting last night received the report of the Nominating Committee, which has made up the regular ticket for officers for next year. The election will be held on Monday, Jan. 15. There is no talk of opposition to the re-election of Senator Chauncey M. Depew as President, and indications point to but one ticket, which is as follows:

President—Chauncey M. Depew; Vice Presidents—First, Louis Stern; Second, Charles H. Treat; Third, P. C. Costello. Recording Secretary—Pratt A. Brown; Corresponding Secretary—Alfred R. Conkling; Treasurer—J. Edgar Leaycraft.

Executive Committee, (to serve until January, 1905)—William M. K. Olcott, Robert B. Kenyon, William Leary, John Sabine Smith, and James W. Spaulding; to serve until January, 1904—Robert C. Morris; to serve until January, 1902—Edward C. Jones; to serve until January, 1901—William Einstein.

Committee on Membership, (to serve until January, 1903)—J. P. Marshall, Henry C. Piercy, and Donald McLean.

Committee on Library and Publication—Herbert H. Gibbs, James T. Nicoll, Alfred L. M. Bullowa, Henry A. Uterhart, Henry Melville, Judah L. Taintor, Edward W. Harris, Edward F. Brush, and I. Albert Englehart.

Committee on Finance—Lyman G. Bloomingdale, Seth M. Milliken, Thomas H. Hubbard, Louis Marshall, and Alfred R. Shattuck.

GAYLE ELECTED TO CONGRESS.

Wins in Seventh Kentucky District Over Fusion Candidate.

Special to The New York Times.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Dec. 18.—By a majority of from 2,800 to 3,200, June Gayle (Silver Democrat) was elected to-day to Congress from the Seventh District, to succeed the late Evan Settle. The election passed off without incident in the eight counties composing the district, and the vote fell about 33 per cent. short of the usual totals. In no county was any particular interest taken in the election.

The opposition candidate was W. C. Owens, the nominee of the anti-Goebel Democrats, who was also supported by the Republicans. The fusion failed to bring the desired result, for while the Republican leaders were active in Owens's behalf, the mass of the party did not seem to care to choose between Democrats whose only difference of opinion is with reference to State politics. The Democratic vote was heavier in proportion than the Republican vote, though it also was light. The anti-Goebel Democrats nearly all voted. Owing to rains and heavy roads the full vote of all the counties has not been received, but the only question is the size of Gayle's majority.

Mr. Harburger Re-elected Leader.

The members of the County General Committee of the Tenth Assembly District of Tammany Hall met for organization last night, and elected the following officers: Frederick Wiemann, Chairman; William Sohmer, First Vice Chairman; John P. Koch, Second Vice Chairman; Louis Arnstein, Recording Secretary; Andrew Lang, Corresponding Secretary; George C. Schneider, Financial Secretary; Adam Pregenzer, Treasurer, and Philip Straub, Sergeant at Arms. Julius Harburger was re-elected a member of the County Executive Committee.

Engineers and State Licenses.

The Metropolitan Council of Steam Engineers, representing 12,000 members of sixteen engineer and firemen organizations, met last evening at 110 East One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street and passed a resolution condemning the proposed bill to have all engineers hold State licenses. Under the proposed bill, the council says, any man, so long as he can pass the examination, will receive a license, while under the present law only an engineer who has served five years as a fireman can secure one.

STARS FOR LETTER CARRIERS.

Stripes Not to be Used Hereafter to Designate Length of Service.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—Postmaster General Smith has just issued an order providing that length of service shall hereafter be indicated on the uniforms of letter carriers not by stripes, but by stars. One black silk star will mean that the carrier has served five years; two black silk stars, ten years; one red silk star, fifteen years; two red silk stars, twenty years; one silver star, twenty-five years; two silver stars, thirty years; one gold star, thirty-five years, and two gold stars, forty years.

To distinguish substitute letter carriers from regular carriers who have not received their first star, each substitute carrier must wear a black cloth bar, a quarter of an inch wide and one and a half inches long, half an inch above the black braid on each sleeve.

PRINTING OF DUTCH RECORDS.

Bill to be Introduced at Albany Appropriating Money for the Work.

Special to The New York Times.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Dec. 18.—Antiquarians and lawyers in this part of the State are interested in a project to have the early Dutch records in Ulster and Albany Counties, now stored in the County Clerk's office in Albany and Kingston, printed verbatim.

Former Judge Alphonso T. Clearwater of Kingston has interested many prominent people in the scheme. State Historian Hugh Hastings is also in favor of it. Assemblyman Snyder of this county is to introduce a bill at the coming session of the Legislature calling for an appropriation for the translation, compilation, and printing of the records.

It is estimated that to translate and print the records will cost at least $100,000. The sale of copies of the records would, however, reimburse the State to some extent.

It is believed that the State of New York would be doing a great service to students of history all over the world by carrying out this project.

Mrs. H. A. C. Taylor's Will.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, Dec. 18.—The will of Mrs. Charlotte T. Taylor, wife of Henry A. C. Taylor, was offered for probate in the Newport Probate Court to-day. She bequeaths her house, at Twenty-third Street and Lexington Avenue, and her cottage here to her husband and her children. The latter are Henry R. Taylor, Moses Taylor, and Harriett Richmond Taylor. All the property bequeathed to Mrs. Taylor by her mother, Harriett Fearing, and her father, Daniel B. Fearing, and all her jewelry are equally divided between the three children.

THE REPUBLICAN CAMPAIGN.

Perry S. Heath, Chairman of Committee on Organization and Literature.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—Senator Hanna, as Chairman of the Republican National Committee, to-day named the Committee on Organization and Literature. Perry S. Heath is Chairman, and the other members are Controller Charles G. Dawes and Senator Shoup, Chairman Hanna and Secretary Dick being ex-officio members.

Mr. Heath held a similar position in the campaign of 1896. It has been understood for some time that he was to have an active part in the management of the campaign of 1900. He is one of the young Republicans who have come to the front in politics in recent years, and his work in 1896 was particularly acceptable to the leaders. After the election he was appointed First Assistant Postmaster General. Mr. Heath was asked to-day about the work of his committee during the next campaign, and replied:

"When Chairman Hanna and Secretary Dick return from their holiday visit home, there will be a meeting of the committee, and then the work will be mapped, out. Meanwhile there is nothing I can say about it. As far as my selection is concerned, I am particularly gratified. It is an honor I did not expect."

Mr. Heath said he did not intend to leave the Post Office Department, and that there was nothing in his coming political work which would interfere with his duties there. Headquarters will be opened in Washington early in January, it is understood.

THE WESTERN MARYLAND SALE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 18.—Mayor Hayes today completed the preliminary arrangements for forcing the sale of the Western Maryland Railroad. He stated the company's total indebtedness to the city, including unpaid interest, is over $8,000,000. The principal of debt, less the sinking funds, amounts to approximately $4,485,000.

Mayor Hayes's determination to force the sale of the road has aroused tremendous opposition in business circles. President Hume Smith of the Chamber of Commerce and President Summerfield Baldwin of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association came out to-day strongly against it. The business of the road has been improving and business men contend that the city should not let it slip out of its hands unless paid the full value of it.

The Mayor's opposition to President Hood, through whose management the property has been improved, is sharply criticised in business and financial circles. It is said that should the Mayor succeed in forcing the retirement of Mr. Hood from the Presidency, Mendes Cohen, a prominent civil engineer, will succeed him. Mayor Hayes has been officially informed that there will be at least one other bid than that of the New York syndicate headed by President Waterbury of the Manhattan Trust Company.

Estate Divided into 16,288 Shares.

Special to The New York Times.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Dec. 18.—The estate left by a miser, which is valued at $35,000, will be divided into 16,288 shares in order to carry out the provisions of the law, for there are no closely related heirs. The amount of the war tax is now being calculated, and, owing to the remoteness of the relationship, the percentage of the Government will be large. The estate is that of Peter Leitschuck and his wife. The husband died in 1898 and the wife last January. No heirs appeared, but Attorney Charles G. Hulsewede found many distant relatives in Germany and the far Northwest. There are so many of these that 16,288 is the common multiple of their shares. The net result will be about $1.50 a share, some getting perhaps a few hundred dollars each, but the greater number a very small sum.

ARRIVAL OF BUYERS.

WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S

OPEN EVERY EVENING THIS WEEK EXCEPT SATURDAY

Wanamaker's in New York

The Fourth Christmas

OUR holiday sales gauge business growth. In the beginning of this business there was a Christmas. The magnitude of our first Christmas sales surprised us. They were encouraging but humiliating. We were not proud of the way the business was handled. But that belongs to the past. This is the third holiday season since. And we have an honest pride now. Each day marks cumulative gains in sales, organization keeps the business moving quietly and steadily. Visitors are synonymous with buyers, and the quick throngs in the aisles tell how many they are. New York has a congenial atmosphere for the Wanamaker methods. But even yet our people blunder sometimes, they're human—can't help it.

Mr. Cooley's office—4th avenue and 10th st.—is the Wanamaker Clearing House. If you think you have a grievance tell it to him or his office.

Life at All Points

How a store like this touches life at a thousand points is an interesting abstract question. The important query is, how will it touch you to-day?

We don't spend money on general advertising. Our cash goes into daily interests. That gives vitality to our printed news—and you cannot afford to miss it. The chances are that you—whoever you may be—cannot read this without finding something, perhaps many things, that are directly personal to yourself.

Music Cabinets---Many Bargains

Sixty styles are shown—$5 to $95. Modest pieces of simple oak to elaborate affairs in vernis-martin. And here's a hint to the alert shopper and to the still undecided seeker for suitable holiday presents: Many of the cabinets are reduced to-day.

Some mahogany finished pieces are $5 to $10, though yesterday $7.50 to $15.
Of mahogany at $20, $22 and $44; regularly $35, $34 and $66.
Vernis-martin cabinets at $30, $45 and $50, that have been priced at $45, $67.50 and $76.50.

Held for delivery to your order, if requested.

Fourth floor.

Places to Visit.

The Little Salon in the Millinery Store, in which are shown the dashing styles of next spring's printed Foulard and India Silks. In silks the year 1900 is already here. Second floor.

The Rotunda, where holiday visions are illustrated in panoramic form. First floor.

The Hall in which Mr. Halsey-Stirling's marvelous reproductions of the paintings in the National Gallery, London, are shown at 10:30 and 11:30 a. m. and 3, 4:30, 8 and 9 o'clock p. m. Third floor.

The Oriental Corner, Third floor.

The Picture Gallery. Recent additions of important pictures from the last Paris Salon, (several of them have taken medals and honorable mention,) increase the interest in this popular collection. Fifth floor.

Holiday Bazar of miscellaneous things. Fifth floor.

Women's Jackets Seven dollars and a half. Think seriously of that sum.

Remember that it concerns one hundred jackets—two lots, fifty each.

Lot One—Shown first to-day. Cloth, heavy black cheviot with diagonal boucle curl; very sightly. Lining, stout satin of durable texture. Style, fly front, dipped forepart, notched collar; jaunty and the latest. Value at $15.

Lot Two—Collection of kersey and cheviot in several styles; only a few of each. Were it otherwise $12 would be the least price for any of them. All new.

This century group of jackets will surely find one hundred new and happy owners before our closing bell rings to-night.

Second Floor, Broadway.

Furs for Girls They've been neglected heretofore — their elders receiving the almost exclusive attention of the makers and dealers. Even the little bits of girls have received more consideration. Now we've prepared for this ignored class. Here are some sets—round muffs and cluster scarfs with tails—warm, pretty, inexpensive.

Electric Chinchilla, $7.50 a set.
Blue Mouflon, $7.50 a set.
Natural Badger, $10.
Nutria, $10.
Electric Seal, $7.50.
Krimmer, $13.50.
At $5 to $7.50—Scarfs of Alaska Sable trimmed with tails.
At $10—Natural Mink scarfs trimmed with tails.
At $8.50—Natural Lynx Scarfs trimmed with tails.

Second Floor, Broadway.

Silk Handkerchiefs and Mufflers A silk handkerchief is sometimes silk only in part—and in name—a fraud. As in our handkerchiefs of linen, so in these of silk—purity. When we offer initialed silk handkerchiefs at 25c, it is still true. They're pure silk, and are exceptionally good value, price considered. And there are most excellent sorts at 50c and 75c. There's a large stock—all of it good.

Men's and women's all silk mufflers at 75c., $1 and in short upward steps to $5.

Broadway.

Dress Goods. Positively Important

Fine Black Mohair; Imported Wool Poplins, Granites, Whipcords and Rayetine; woven and printed Flannelettes; Cotton Dress Patterns. Large lines of all the foregoing are offered to-day at prices that indicate reckless cheapness. Follow the detail carefully. These goods are for retail sales only and not for the trade.

At Fifty Cents
Very fine high lustre black Mohair, fresh and perfect. Present value and price after this lot is sold, 75c.

At One Dollar
All-wool Poplins, various colors, very fine qualities, reduced to-day from $1.50.
All-wool Granite Cloth, extra fine quality; many colors, reduced to-day from $1.50.
Whipcord Covert Cloths of the $1.25 grade.

At One Dollar and a Quarter
A choice variety of Whipcord Covert Cloths, in various colors, of the $1.50 and $2 grades.

At Ninety Cents a Pattern
1,000 10-yard Dress Patterns, of latest styles for next spring, fine printed Percale. Price yesterday, $1.25. On sale at 9:30 A. M. Not more than three patterns to one buyer.

At Seven Cents
Woven Flannelette, a very large variety of fancy plaids and checks. Reduced in price for to-day's sales.

At Nine Cents
Printed Plaid and Polka Dot Flannelette in very large variety. The reduction is large and the price is below the cost at the mill.

At Two Dollars
Choice Satin Rayetine just reduced from $2.50.

All of the foregoing are fresh and desirable and each price is far less than the goods can be reproduced at to-day. There is a paradox in big reductions on a rising market.

Rugs Oriental Rugs have had the floor in our late merchandise discussions. It was right. We have many of them to show as you may readily discover.

When our place stepped into the rank of the best carpet stores (how few there are!) the public flocked here for Smyrna Rugs, and before we knew it we were leading the retail trade in them. That's interesting, and the stock now here ought to make the following good reading:

1 ft. 6 in. x 2 ft. 10 in., 90c and $1.15.
1 ft. 9 in. x 3 ft. 9 in., $1.25 and $1.65.
2 ft. 2 in. x 4 ft. 6 in., $1.75 and $2.25.
2 ft. 6 in. x 5 ft., $2.25 and $3.
3 ft. x 6 ft., $3.25 and $4.25.
4 ft. x 7 ft., $5.50 and $7.
6 ft. x 9 ft., $14.50.
7 ft. 6 in. x 10 ft. 6 in., $22.50.
9 ft. x 9 ft., $25.25.
9 ft. x 10 ft. 6 in., $27.50.
9 ft. x 12 ft., $28.50.
9 ft. x 15 ft., $42.

Algerian Rugs, English mohair. And you'll never know their beauty and their cheapness if you depend on types to tell you.

24 in. x 56 in., $3.50. 36 in. x 36 in., $3.
30 in. x 63 in., $4.50.

Leamington Rugs, Wilton Rugs, both English and American are here, also Prestwicks, Axminsters, Ingrain Art Squares. Try us and find if there are any rugs that we cannot show you.

The Animal Rug that you want awaits you. Bears, Leopards, Tigers, Wild Cats glare at you in make-believe but harmless fashion. Their skins are gentle as lambskins as they surrender them to your floor and make a luxury of foot steps.

Third floor.

Tapestry Single Pieces Stop. Think about it a little bit. You rave over tapestries of the middle ages or the later artistic periods of French household art. You can rave just as much over the French loom products of the period. Remember that and then come here. Prices of the former are fabulous, of the latter within the reach of the slender purse. And they furnish as does nothing else. They are going thus:

First, there's a series of four panels entitled "The Chase," 41x93 in.; they have been $30; price $22.50. Will be sold separately.
An allegorical subject, 41x92 in., was $57. Price $42.50.
Some painted panels, various good subjects, are now $50 and $60 instead of $75, others at $25 instead of $35 and $45.

Third floor.

Lace Curtains The unselfishness of the man who manages this upholstery store is again apparent in to-day's offering. He reduces prices during the holiday season—right when the goods are most wanted. These fine lace curtains are without a blemish in themselves. Yet there is a fault—the meagreness of the stocks. Two pair lots mostly, and they're intolerable. The penalty is an ill wind to the curtain stocks, though profiting you.

Real Arabian Lace Curtains at prices a quarter less than former fair figures—$12.50 to $75 instead of $17.50 to $90.
Real Renaissance—eleven patterns of these beautiful French laces. $7.25 to $25.50 a pair regularly. Prices $5.50 to $18.50.
Irish Point—standard goods in ten attractive patterns; ecru; were $6 to $8 a pair. Choice at $5.

Third floor.

Flannelette Sacques Some at 50c each—pretty and good. Pink, blue or red. Full front, fitted back. Pinked ruffles on collar, sleeves and bottom of sacque. Ribbon at neck.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Men's House Coats The Men's Furnishing Goods Store attracts many seekers after gifts for men. They linger beside the house coats, they buy house coats.

Our House Coats for men are made by experts that know their business. Originality and exclusiveness are always sought for in men's house coats, but are seldom found elsewhere—always found here. Prices $3.75 to $16.50. Tricots, velveteen, tweeds, cheviots and all the other fabrics.

Men's Bath Wraps of Elderdown A choice collection of styles from a firm that weaves the cloth and makes the garment complete. That tells the story of cheapness—we add, that qualities and styles are elegant.

$4—Fancy striped single-faced cloth.
$5—Fancy plaid, heavy, single-faced cloth.
$6—Neat plaid, heavy, double-faced cloth.

If you buy, your friendship for us will be increased.

Men's Store, Ninth and Broadway.

Down Pillows Down Pure clean down, muslin case, tapestry cover—the result Down Sofa Pillows. Were yesterday and still should be $1.75, $2 and $2.25. But the "should be" shall not be and they go down to the simple cheapness of

One Dollar and a Half and we can't afford to print another word about them.

Third floor.

Pillow Shams They've been bought extensively in previous seasons — presumably for gifts. We put these up suitably for giving. From 65c, for those of good quality cambric, up to $15 for exquisite specimens.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Umbrellas and Our Umbrella Buyer Our umbrella buyer is very ambitious. His umbrellas and their handles are personlly collected from Paris, Vienna, Berlin, London, New York, and Philadelphia. His determination was to show the most comprehensive and most elegant umbrella stock in America—and that ambition is satisfied, the stock is here.

Umbrellas at $28. And at fifty cents. Also every grade between.

The next thing is to sell them. That will be done if you read this. Here are some points—

$3—Silk umbrellas for men and women, 26 and 28 in.; choice variety of fancy handles.
$3.75—Extra quality silk umbrellas for men and women; fancy handles; value $5 at least. This lot of umbrellas is choice, attractive and very cheap.
$5—Men's dress suit case umbrellas, also a very choice selection of umbrellas at the same price—handles of pearl with and without silver. White ivory with gold decoration; Whangee sticks with silver trimming, and other styles.
Gun metal handles for umbrellas to order, from $6 to $13.50.
Sets of umbrellas and canes to match, in cases, with handles of ivory, silver, stag horn, $16.50 to $36.

Our business is merely to bring you and the umbrellas together. Then you'll do the rest.

Fourth Avenue.

An Important Book Offer

Tissot's Life of Christ, a work of wondrous beauty and inestimable value, may be yours at little cost. There are thousands to whom ownership of this greatest religious work of modern times was doubtless a consummation devoutly to be wished. Yet the original cost—$160—placed it far beyond their reach. Through the Wanamaker-Tissot Club, Tissot's Life of Christ is now attainable upon easy terms: Upon acceptance of your application for membership—dependable upon your references—you pay an initial fee of $1. Thereafter $3 a month for a stated period—the total being about a fourth the price at which the work was published.

Four sumptuous volumes, containtng 500 illustrations, one-quarter of which are exact reproductions of Tissot's beautiful paintings; Tissot's notes during his ten years' travels and labors in the Holy Land; explanatory drawings, and 365 compositions from the four Gospels.

What more appropriate gift upon the approaching day devoted by all Christendom to commemoration of His nativity than this, His life, in such elegant form!

The Shoe Sale Continues

Brisk selling every day and all day. The purchase was a large one, and the prices are small enough to keep up a lively interest. Bargain shoes for men, women and children, yet practically the same sort of goods that are selling in many another store at a third and a half more than the prices here. Can't tell of each particular bargain. Judge of attractiveness of the store-ful by these sample offerings:

Men's $3.50 Shoes at $2.30. Box-calf, patent leather, enameled leather.
Men's calfskin and kidskin Shoes at $1.80.
Men's slippers at $1.25—values run from $1.50 to $3. Sizes broken.
Men's Slippers at 90c—ten sorts, black and russet.
Black Felt Slippers with felt soles, 50c.
Children's spring-heel Shoes with patent leather or kid tips—8½ to 10½ at 80c. 11 to 2 at 95c.

SILVER MEN CRY FOR AID

Free Coinage Republicans Formulate an Address.

CURRENCY BILL IS DENOUNCED

Believers in the White Metal Urged to Rally to the Support of Those Who Are Fighting Gold.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—After the passage to-day by the House of the Financial bill, the Silver Republican leaders in the city held a meeting and adopted an address setting forth their views as to its effect. The address is as follows:

"To the members of the Republican Party who still believe in bimetallism:

"The passage by the House of Representatives to-day of the Gold Standard and Bank Currency bill exactly as agreed upon by the Republican caucus and without the opposition of a single Republican vote marks the culmination of a policy long carefully pursued by certain influences in control of the leadership of the Republican Party and justifies the action of the men who in 1896 refused to remain in that organization after the adoption of the St. Louis platform.

"The Republican National platforms of 1888 and 1892 had been unequivocally in favor of bimetallism and the use of both gold and silver as standard money. Nevertheless it was apparent several months before the assembling of the National Convention of 1896 that the machinery of the Republican Party had passed wholly into the hands of the banking and creditor interests and that it was the purpose of the latter to commit the party to the advocacy and achievement of the gold standard. Against this danger the undersigned and many other Republican bimetallists at that time vainly attempted to arouse the masses of the party. The politicians and newspapers privy to the scheme denounced our fears as unfounded or simulated, and, by skillful use of catch words and generalities, succeded in forestalling any widespread comprehension of their designs. When the convention met, a similar ingenuity governed the framing of the declaration on the money question.

QUOTES FROM THE PLATFORM.

"Its essential part was as follows:

"We are therefore opposed to the free coinage of silver except by international agreement with the leading commercial nations of the world, which we pledge ourselves to promote, and until such agreement can be obtained the existing gold standard must be preserved. All our silver and paper currency must be maintained at parity with gold, &c.

"It is strange that so manifest an insincerity should have deceived anybody. Clearly, if the gold standard was desirable, the free coinage of silver was undesirable, however secured. If the gold standard was right, free coinage of silver must be wrong. Nobody could intelligently and honestly demand the international free coinage of silver and at the same time express such emphatic satisfaction with the gold standard as an alternative. As a matter of fact, this declaration was intended as a definite assurance to the speculative banks and their allies that the Republican Party, if successful in the election, would proceed with all politic speed to the establishment of the single gold standard in all its rigor. The promise to 'promote' the international free coinage of silver was never meant to be observed in good faith, yet it proved 'a good enough Morgan until after the election.' Relying upon it, forced as it was throughout the West and central portions of the cuntry by the editors and orators of the Republican Party, millions of voters were held in line for the ticket, for, as stated in the Republican campaign 'Text Book for 1892,' the Republican Party was 'a bimetallic party.'

SAYS BRYAN WOULD HAVE WON.

"No one whose political judgment has the slightest weight may deny that a frank pronouncement for the gold standard in that platform, or a straightforward interpretation of it by the Republican candidate for President as meaning the gold standard and nothing else, would have elected Mr. Bryan by an overwhelming majority. To construe the election of 1896 as a mandate by the American people for the establishment of the gold standard is to appropriate political goods under false pretenses.

"As soon as the election was over and the fruits of this chicane had been gathered the great Republican newspapers began to discard their convenient ambiguities about 'sound money' and 'honest money,' and to claim the rest as a definite verdict in favor of gold. These utterances increased in volume and precision as the advent of the new Administration approached. The President also, although not able to at once form the habit of directness in speech, soon showed by his actions that he no longer considered the pre-election construction of the platform to be binding. His appointment as Secretary of the Treasury of perhaps the most conspicuous gold standard advocate among the great bankers of the country was obviously not especially designed to 'promote' any kind of bimetallism. To be sure there was sent abroad the alleged International Monetary Commission. Unless the hoax was to be openly confessed this was the least the President could do. But for fear that after all foreign Governments might take the procedure seriously he sent to Congress in July, 1897, at the very moment when his commission's proposals were before the English Cabinet, a special message recommending the so-called Indianapolis Monetary Convention plan, with its programme of the single gold standard, retirement of the greenbacks, and extension of the powers, privileges, and immunities of the National banks. Meantime his Secretary of the Treasury was declaring in interview after interview, most of which were carefully reproduced in Europe, that bimetallism of any kind, international or otherwise, was not only impossible, but undesirable. Of course, no serious negotiations were possible after all this. The international commission became an international joke. 'It folded its tent like the Arab, and silently stole away.' Its distinguished and discomfited Chairman sought early opportunity in the Senate to explain its failure in a speech, in which neither his diplomatic artifices of rhetoric nor his denunciation of the Secretary of the Treasury could hide the responsibility of the official head of the Administration. The remainder of the programme entered upon at St. Louis has been obediently pursued. The international agreement for the free coinage of silver having failed to be 'promoted,' steps are now taking to insure that the gold standard shall be 'preserved.'

FATE OF SILVER DOLLARS.

"The present bill 'preserves' it with a vengeance. The vast bonded debt of the country now payable in 'coin,' that is, either in gold or silver, is to be made payable in gold alone. Nearly half a billion of standard silver dollars, heretofore not redeemable in anything, not constituting a burden on either the gold reserve or the credit of the Government, but forming a large percentage of our basic money, are hereafter to be redeemable in gold, thus increasing tremendously the strain on that metal and becoming an 'endless chain' with which to pull gold from the Treasury and affording the final destruction of the silver dollars as money and their forced sale as bullion, after the manner of the German procedure of 1872. The greenbacks, the best paper money the world ever saw, the product of the patriotism and statesmanship of the Republican Party in the days of Abraham Lincoln, are to be virtually destroyed by being changed into gold certificates, to be locked up in the Treasury and paid out only for gold. The tax on the circulation of the National banks is to be reduced and the amount of the bank currency they may issue on Government bonds deposited is to be increased from 90 per cent. to par of the bonds, thus making their business enormously more profitable, opening the way to an immedfate possible inflation of bank notes, not legal tender, excellent for getting into debt on, but unavailable for getting out of debt with, to the extent of $800,000,000, and placing the regulation of the volume of money, and hence the determination of prices and the burden of debts, absolutely in the power of the banks and the creditor class. The inevitable tendency among these banks will be toward a uniformity and co-operation of management, the result of which will speedily be the erection of a great bank-money trust more powerful than all other trusts and combines, and ultimately, if the Republican Party should remain in power, irresistible and unresisted by the Government itself.

CALL OUT FOR HELP.

"Thus, fellow-citizens, the scheme we denounced in 1896 is nearing consummation. The policy that was denied by the Republican Party in that campaign stands now confessed. Millions of you who voted the Republican ticket in 1896 would not have done so had you believed your party destined so soon to be the agent of the forces that now dominate it. Millions of you were bimetallists in 1896 and remain so to-day. Now that the promises then made to you are clearly seen to have been insincere, now that as a consequence of the deception practiced upon your honest confidence, your country is about to be handed over to the ownership and control of the great speculative banks and their associated trusts and combinations; may we not appeal to you to come to the rescue of the liberties of the people and their imperiled institutions? In the Spring of 1897 the undersigned took the steps leading to the organization of the silver Republican Party. Against the betrayers of the Republicanism of Abraham Lincoln that party resolved to wage unending war. To-day the necessity for its work is more evident than ever. Come with us and help us. We believe that the highest devotion to the Republic is that your once venerated demands that you oppose to the uttermost the present tendencies of the party which still wears the name, but has forsaken the principles of its heroic days."

This is signed by Charles A. Towne, Chairman committee; Henry M. Teller, R. F. Pettigrew, Frank J. Cannon, Edgar Wilson, Charles S. Hartman, John Shafroth, and Fred T. Dubois.

CIVIL SERVICE LAW VIOLATED?

National League Will Seek to Show 75 Per Cent. of Recent Appointments Illegal.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 18.—That 75 per cent. of the National civil service appointments made since President McKinley's famous order of May 29, 1899, removing 10,000 positions from the classified service, have been in defiance of the law will be the purpose of the National Civil Service League to attempt to show in a circular prepared which it is to issue shortly, sanction for its publication having been given at the annual meeting of the league which was held in Indianapolis last week.

Edwin Burritt Smith, a prominent member of the league, who returned from Indianapolis to-day after having attended the sessions of the body, is authority for the foregoing statement. Mr. Smith said that a startling indictment of the Administration would be set before the public soon.

Speaking of the meeting at Indianapolis, Mr. Smith said that the McKinley order called for severe criticism at this meeting of the league, and that it was a difficult question with which the organization had to deal.

BERNARD QUARITCH IS DEAD.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—Bernard Quaritch, the famous art dealer and vendor of rare books, died yesterday in his eighty-second year. He had a world-wide reputation among bibliophiles.

For the best part of half a century Bernard Quaritch held his position as the greatest dealer in old books in the world. "The Napoleon of the Book Trade" was one of the many titles bestowed on him by collectors, to whom his word was law, so far as the value or rarity of a volume was concerned. It is no exaggeration to say that he made in great measure the modern market for scarce books. His methods were the same as those of a financier. He would "corner" a certain line of books, and then bull the price on them until the public followed his lead. But he was something more than an astute dealer. He had a true love for his business and a marvelous knowledge of the history of books; while, if he desired a volume, no price was ever too great for him to pay.

Mr. Quaritch was born in Germany, the son of a Prussian officer who had engaged in civil employment. He found himself in miserably reduced circumstances at his father's death, which occurred when he was a child, and after struggling for some years he went from Berlin to London. After two years' stay there he went to Paris, where he attained his first real insight into the old book trade.

Quaritch's stay in London had convinced him that there was the best market for rare and costly things, and after remaining in the French capital for a few years he went back to England in 1845, and became an employe of the late Mr. Bohn, with the avowed object of becoming "the first bookseller in Europe." He achieved his object in an astonishingly short space of time by study and unremitting toil and his genius for his trade.

A visit to Mr. Quaritch's book shop in Piccadilly was something which few Americans could forego if they desired to see all the sights of London. From the outside one could gather absolutely no idea of the treasures within. There was the name "Quaritch" in faded letters over the entrance, and behind a dirty window a few unimportant volumes. But within one found room after room of a big building crammed with the greatest treasures of bibliography—first editions of the classics, Aldines, Elzevirs, Shakespeare folios and quartos, illuminated manuscripts, splendid bindings, everything that is rare and curious and desirable to the collector. And Mr. Quaritch was equally interesting with his books. His mind was a perfect encyclopaedia of knowledge of bibliographical lore. Let the question be put to him as to the rarity of any particular volume, and he could almost invariably tell what it was worth, where it was printed and when, how high was the tallest copy, and where the specimens known to exist were to be found.

As to another side of his character, perhaps the best description is that which was given several years ago in The World of London:

"Mr. Quaritch's good deeds few know, nor would he care to have them set forth; but when homes have been broken up he has made new ones, where help has been sorely needed he has given it; he has been a father to the fatherless, and provided for young children, now middle-aged men and women, and all, if not secretly, quite unostentatiously; and he has so endeared himself to an unusually large number of people that when he dies—which heaven send may be many years hence!—a good deal of light and warmth will pass away from this dim, chilly world, leaving it sensibly darker and colder to many when the old bookseller is gone and Bernard Quaritch is no longer at home at 15 Piccadilly."

DRUG CLERKS' SHORTER HOURS.

Retail Druggists and Their Employes Reach An Agreement.

The Manhattan Pharmaceutical Association, at its regular monthly meeting last night in the College of Pharmacy, ratified an agreement with the members of the New York Pharmaceutical Clerks' Association, the Kings County Clerks' Association, and the German Drug Clerks' Association, whereby the latter agree to work 140 hours in two weeks. The clerks have the privilege of working 76 hours one week and 64 the following week, if they prefer.

It is said this agreement practically concludes the agitation which has been going on for several months for shorter hours for drug clerks.

MR. SULZER'S NEW VENTURE.

When Congressman William Sulzer went to Alaska last Summer rumor connected his trip to the Far North with the movements of a woman, who, it was said, was intent on marrying him. Mr. Sulzer denied this report, saying that his journey was merely for the purpose of relaxation and recreation, and his friends were content with this explanation. Yesterday, however, one of Mr. Sulzer's friends asserted that while in Alaska the Congressman had secured options on gold mines which promise to make him wealthy, and that he had taken in as his partners Senator William A. Clark of Montana and Senator John P. Jones of Nevada. The location of the mines was not made known, but it was said that Mr. Sulzer had no immediate intention of retiring from politics.

Trolley Car on Fire on the Bridge.

Trolley Car No. 1,703 of the Seventh Avenue line took fire on the Brooklyn Bridge about 6:40 o'clock last evening, and was brought to a sudden standstill by the motorman. The women passengers, of whom there were about six, screamed and hurried from the car with the same number of men who were aboard. No one was hurt, and the car was pushed to the Park Row curve by another car, and afterward to Brooklyn again. A fuse had burned out.

Austria's Ministry Resigns To-day.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—A special dispatch from Vienna announces that, in consequence of the paralysis of parliamentary business due to persistent Czech obstruction, the Austrian Cabinet, headed by Count Clary Aldringen, which was formed last October to succeed the Ministry of Count Thun-Hohenstein, will resign to-day.

CURRENCY BILL IS PASSED

Final Vote on the New Measure Shows 190 to 150.

ELEVEN DEMOCRATS VOTE AYE

Republicans Stand as a Unit—Wheeler and Stallings of Alabama and Smith of Maryland Not on Record.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—The Currency bill was passed to-day by the House by a vote of 190 to 150. It had the support of every Republican in the House and of eleven Democrats—Messrs. Clayton, Driggs, Fitzgerald, Levy, Ruppert, Scudder, Underhill and Wilson of New York; Mr. McAleer of Pennsylvania, Denny of Maryland, and Mr. Thayer of Massachusets. All the other Democrats voted against the measure or were paired against it except Mr. John Walter Smith, Governor-elect of Maryland; Mr. Stallings of Alabama, and Gen. Joseph Wheeler of Alabama. Hr. Stallings has not been present in the House this session, owing to illness, and one of his colleagues announced that if present he would have voted in the negative. Gen. Wheeler is serving in the Philippines. Mr. Smith is, therefore, the only member of the House who did not go on record upon the bill to-day.

Almost every seat in the hall was occupied when the House convened. Mr. McRae (Dem., Ark.,) came over from Atlantic City to vote and Mr. Chickering (Rep., N. Y.,) was present on crutches. Mr. Bartlet (Dem., Ga.,) who sustained a severe accident some time ago, was also present on crutches.

Neither a motion to recommit nor an offer of a substitute was in order by the terms of the special rule under which the House was operating.

Mr. Gaines (Dem., Tenn.,) asked if it was in order to recommit with instructions to report back a free coinage bill.

"It is not," replied the Speaker. The bill was then read a third time and placed upon its final passage.

"I demand the yeas and nays," said Mr. Overstreet (Rep., Ind.,) in charge of the bill. Members rose on both sides en masse to second the demand.

"Evidently a sufficient number," said the Speaker. "The Clerk will call the roll."

The rol call was followed with great interest. There were no demonstrations when the Democrats who broke away from the majority of their party voted in the affirmative. The Clerk called the names a second time of the Democrats who declined to respond on the first roll call. Every Republican voted for the bill.

When the Speaker announced the passage of the bill by a vote of 190 to 150 the Republicans broke into cheers.

MORGAN ASSAILS THE TRUSTS.

Alabama Senator Demands that Vast Combinations of Capital Be Restricted.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—Mr. Morgan (Dem., Ala.,) called up his resolution (to prohibit combinations between corporations to control inter-State commerce and transportation) and addressed the Senate upon it.

Mr. Morgan dealt in the beginning with the legal aspect of trusts, and the difficulty of reaching them through the enactments of State Legislatures or of Congress. He regarded the evils called trusts as all included in the combinations of persons to control trade What an individual could accomplish in trade was regarded as legitimate, but when great corporations were aggregated together to control any given branch of trade or commerce or transportation, it became evident that the rights of the people were likely to be infringed. It had for years been a serious problem before the law-making power to control these combinations, and upon the solution of that problem would, in his opinion, depend much for the people.

Mr. Morgan declared that all the advantages which had been gained by the trusts had been obtained at the expense of the people, and particularly of labor.

"I desire to know," he added, "whether this Congress will respond to the almost despairing demand of the people for relief."

Mr. Morgan referred to the control obtained by certain trusts of the coal and iron lands of his own State of Alabama and of Tennessee. These lands had, he said, passed into the maws of the trusts, but had not passed from under the control of the States. He declared that the Legislatures of those States never would consent to the holding of those lands by trusts, and intimated that measures would be taken by the representatives of the people to protect their interests.

Mr. Morgan spoke briefly, his argument being directed particularly to the members of the Committee on Judiciary, to which, at the conclusion of his speech, his resolution was referred.

QUESTIONS ALLEN'S CREDENTIALS.

Senator Chandler Objects When Nebraskan's Name Comes Up.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—In the Senate to-day Mr. Thurston (Rep., Neb.,) presented the credentials of his recently appointed colleague, ex-Senator W. V. Allen, and they were read.

Gov. Poynter's commission named Mr. Allen as Senator until his successor should be elected and had qualified. To this Mr. Chandler (Rep. N. H.,) took exception, pointing out that Mr. Allen could hold his seat only until the Legislature should meet.

"Of course," said Mr. Chandler, "that part of the credential must be regarded as void."

PETTIGREW WOULD THANK SCHLEY

South Dakota Senator Offers Resolution in Congress.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—Senator Pettigrew of South Dakota to-day introduced a joint resolution tendering to Rear Admiral Winfield Scott Schley and to the officers and men under his command the thanks of Congress "for highly distinguished conduct in conflict with the enemy, as displayed by him in the destruction of the Spanish fleet off the Harbor of Santiago July 3, 1898."

The resolution was referred to the Commitee on Naval Affairs.

GRIDLEY'S MOTHER'S PENSION.

Bill Introduced in Congress to Grant an Increase.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—Among the bills introduced in the Senate to-day was one by Senator McMillan (Rep., Mich.,) increasing the pension of Mrs. Anne Gridley, mother of the late Charles V. Gridley, who commanded Admiral Dewey's flagship, the Olympia, in the battle of Manila Bay.

A few years ago Mrs. Gridley was granted a pension of $20 per month for services as a Union nurse during the civil war. For a few years past she has occupied a clerkship in the Land Office, but her impaired health and advanced age render it probable that she will not be able to render clerical service very much longer.

Representative Gardner (Rep., Mich.,) introduced the same bill in the House.

Commend Gold Congressmen.

The Manufacturers' Association of New York at its monthly meeting, held at its rooms, 198 Montague Street, Brooklyn, last evening, adopted a resolution commending the Long Island Congressmen who voted for the Currency bill and disapproving of the action of Congressman May in voting against the measure. Following the business meeting there was an interesting "stag" Christmas entertainment.

Ex-Senator Gray Confirmed.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—The Senate today confirmed the nomination of George Gray of Delaware to be United States Circuit Judge for the Third Judicial Circuit.

CONGRESSIONAL NOTES.

Among the House bills introduced yesterday was one by Mr. Grosvenor, (Rep., Ohio,) for pensioning all who served ninety days in the war of the rebellion.

A bill was introduced in the Senate yesterday by Mr. Platt of Connecticut to establish a division in the Treasury Department for the regulation of insurance in the several States.

As the Utah witnesses in the Roberts case could not reach Washington until late yesterday, the House investigating committee had no session; it will meet against this morning

Senators Chandler, Allison, and Bacon were appointed yesterday members of the committee to attend the unveiling of the statue of Daniel Webster in Washington Jan. 18, 1900.

The announcement of the death of Representative Bland of Missouri, which occurred last Summer, was made yesterday in the House by Mr. De Armond, (Mo.,) and the House out of respect to Mr. Bland's memory immediately adjourned.

Senator Sullivan yesterday introduced a bill authorizing the acquisition of the right of way for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal by the Government of the United States, and giving power to the President to negotiate with Great Britain for the abrogation fo the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

A repetition. The bulk of our Handkerchief stock came from the Macy factory at Belfast. This is the only store that sells Handkerchiefs without having to pay a tribute to the middleman. YOU save his profit—and more. For instance:

Men's All-linen Hemstitched Handkerchiefs, an immense quantity, representing unequalled values. The prices are 9c, 12c, 21c, ranging up to 94c.

Men's All-linen Handkerchiefs with embroidered initials, remarkably fine qualities at 19c, 29c and 49c.

Men's All-linen Handkerchiefs, half dozen in fancy box; you can't match them anywhere without paying a third more than we ask; 72c, $1.19 and $1.49 per box.

Women's All-linen Hemstitched Handkerchiefs, 7c to 29c. With embroidered initials, 12c and 24c. All-linen embroidered, 24c to $2.09. All-linen with embroidered initials, six folded in fancy box, $1.24.

Two sales of pre-eminent importance are now going on in the Annex. The first involves five hundred cases of Sherry, Madeira, Burgundy and Bordeaux Wines—Rums and Gins secured at sacrifice prices from John Osborn's Sons & Co. after they had gone into voluntary liquidation. You may buy them here at retail for less than regular wholesale rates.

The other event concerns Cigars. We are selling choice imported and domestic brands at under prices. Qualities that gift Cigars should be—rich, flavorous and satisfying.

Fans—all the pretty, dainty kinds. White and tinted feather fans, with chased pearl sticks; black and gray, with sticks of fine tortoise shell. Ethereal gauze—spangled, tinseled and be-laced. Others are exquisitely hand-painted. You could choose a score of things and do worse than a fan.

Hints from the Furniture. For a man: Shaving Stands, $8.99 to $22.67, or Morris Chair, forty styles, $2.49 to $74.99, or Library Table, $3.99 to $99.99. For a Woman: Desk, $2.34 to $54.99, or Music Cabinet, $8.24 to $40.38, or Work Table, $7.74 to $37.49, or Fancy Rocker, $1.49 to $22.49, or Gilt Chair, $1.99 to $64.99.

Notwithstanding weeks of unparalleled selling we still show a large and attractive line of Oil Paintings—$13.48 to $106.99. Don't pass the Photo Medallions, 17c. to $6.74, and the Pastel Landscapes, gilt, bronze and burnished gold frames, $1.69 to $9.98.

* * *

Screens, solid oak and mahogany frames, three panels, mounted with denim, decorated with graceful empire and colonial designs, effectively appliqued. Manufactured to retail at $15.00. They fell into our hands so we can make the price $9.98.

* * *

Men enjoy Smoking Tables as ardently as women enjoy Work Tables. That's a choice suggestion for both men and women. There's a splendid display of Smoking Tables on second floor of the Annex—walnut, cherry, mahogany and oak—$1.29 to $6.98.

$4.98.

Want to spend that amount for a woman's present? Then go to the Lace Department. You'll find two very special items. Of course, you can buy either of them elsewhere—if you'd as lief pay $8.00 as $4.98.

Fifty Real Duchesse and Duchesse and Point Lace Handkerchiefs—fine sheer linen centres, deep edges and elegant patterns, $4.98.

Plaited Liberty Chiffon Capes, made with full ruff collar, ribbon streamers $4.98.

WILLIAM HENRY LEE DEAD.

Well-Known Hotel Man Succumbs to a Stroke of Apoplexy.

William Henry Lee, one of the best known hotel men in the country, was found dead in bed at his residence, 18 West Thirty-second Street, yesterday at noon. He had been in ill-health for the past two months. Dr. John A. Irwin, Mr. Lee's physician, said death had probably been caused by apoplexy. Mr. Lee had probably tried to summon help when taken ill, and, in getting up, had fallen against a dresser in the room and had received a slight scalp wound.

Mr. Lee was fifty-five years old, and up to two months ago was the manager of the Imperial Hotel, when he resigned his position and opened a boarding house. During his career he was manager of the Windsor Hotel, destroyed by fire; the Victoria and Vendome, of this city; the Richfield Springs Hotel, Richfield Springs; Indian Harbor Hotel, Greenwich, Conn.; the Ponce De Leon, in Florida, and several other hotels. He leaves three sons and a daughter.

WARNED BY SECRETARY ROOT.

War Department Clerks Told Not to Divulge Information.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—Secretary Root has issued an order calling the attention of War Department employes to the rules forbidding the divulging of information regarding the business of the department. He reminds them that the Revised Statutes prohibit the giving of any information to aid or assist in the prosecution or support of any claim against the United States. He also calls attention to War Department orders of May 15, 1894, which direct that no information shall be directly or indirectly communicated respecting the business or records of the department to any person not on duty in the department bureaus without the express authority of the Chief of the bureau concerned.

"The official records and business of the department," says the Secretary, "are strictly confidential, and are not to be disclosed to any one nor made the subject of conversation out of the office, or in the office except so far as necessary to the proper discharge of the public business. The provisions of this circular must be strictly observed, and any violation of it will be reported for the action of the Secretary of War."

Last Hearing in Haights' Suit.

The hearings in the application of Mary L. Haight for a divorce from Henry L. Haight, both deaf-mutes, were closed yesterday and Justice Giegerich reserved decision. Ex-Justice Van Wyck, as counsel, put in very little evidence for the defendant. Mr. Haight was merely placed on the stand to deny various statements made by witnesses for Mrs. Haight.

PRISONER SHOT IN COURT.

Dr. S. M. Jenkins Probably Mortally Wounded at Dallas by Brother of One of His Alleged Victims.

DALLAS, Texas, Dec. 18.—The trial of Dr. S. M. Jenkins, charged with murder, came to a sudden and tragic end to-day, when Hugh Wheat, twenty-eight years of age, a brother of Mary Wheat, one of the doctor's alleged victims, shot and probably fatally wounded the prisoner in the crowded courtroom.

Court had just convened. The State introduced as the first witness Hugh Wheat, who walked into the courtroom with his hat on, came up to the railing where the defendant sat, pulled a pistol, and shot Dr. Jenkins in the back, the ball passing near the spinal column, inflicting what is believed to be a mortal wound.

After Wheat fired he dropped the pistol and ran toward the door. John Halligan, brother-in-law of Jenkins, picked it up, and fired at Wheat, missing him. Wheat and Halligan were arrested, but the latter was released on bonds of $5,000.

Staten Island Train Kills a Boy.

John Where, the nine-year-old son of William Where of 21 Merseread Avenue, Port Richmond, was killed by a Staten Island Rapid Transit Railroad train on the trestle between Port Richmond and West Brighton last night. He had been sent to Starin's shipyard by his father, and was on his way out when hit by the train.

JUSTICE-ELECT A DEFENDANT.

Daniel E. Finn's Deputy Sheriff Days Recalled by Suit for Fees.

Daniel E. Finn, Justice-elect of the First District Municipal Court, is the defendant in a suit being tried before Justice Freedman, in the Supreme Court, brought by Amelia Gorman, as executrix of the estate of John J. Gorman, ex-Sheriff. The suit involves about $1,000, the amount of certain keepers' fees incurred while Mr. Gorman was Sheriff and Mr. Finn was a deputy. His chief, in 1891, placed him in charge of the Kaldenberg Company's property. Finn detailed Thomas Hanna and Augustus Moyer to guard it and they were kept at the place for 100 days.

On account of a conflict between the receiver, Clarence Lexow, and the Sheriff, neither of the keepers received his fees. They sued Sheriff Gorman and obtained a judgment against him. The Sheriff contended that Finn, and not he, was responsible for the keepers' fees. The present action is the result.

In his defense of the suit, Finn insists that he was instructed by Sheriff Gorman to place the keepers in charge of the property, and that these instructions were given as the result of the advice of William E. Stillings, who was counsel to the Sheriff.

Mr. Stillings, on the witness stand yesterday, denied that he had ever given such advice to Sheriff Gorman. The trial will be resumed to-day.

Suspect Foul Play in O'Hea's Death.

The body of John O'Hea, thirty years of age, employed with Hecker Brothers, at the foot of Rutgers Street, was found yesterday morning in a yard at the rear of 58 Scammel Street, where the man lived. It is not known how he met his death, but the police suspect foul play. O'Hea was making preparations to return to his widowed mother in Ireland.

USED MISS GOULD'S NAME.

Alice L. Snyder Charged with Swindling in Dressmaking Investment.

Magistrate Flammer yesterday held Alice L. Snyder, forty-six years of age, of 161 West One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Street, in $1,000 bail for trial on a charge of swindling several women out of money. Mrs. Florence Monroe of 121 West Forty-fourth Street testified that she answered an advertisement inserted in a newspaper by Miss Snyder, who wanted a partner in a dressmaking enterprise, which was to be patronized, so Miss Snyder claimed, by Miss Helen Gould, from whom she had a letter. Mrs. Monroe put in $500, which she had earned as a nurse for the late William Webb, a shipbuilder. Mrs. Emma L. C. Van Winkle of 117 Prospect Place, Brooklyn, testified that she bought a half interest in the same establishment for $200, supposing also that Miss Gould was to patronize the establishment. Mrs. Elizabeth H. Mitchell of 53 Seventh Avenue, Brooklyn, said that she paid $200 for an interest, and all the women who appeared against Miss Snyder asserted that she exerted some magnetic influence over them. The dressmaking establishment never amounted to anything, and they all lost their money.

Mrs. Van Winkle showed the Magistrate the following letter she received from Miss Gould when she suspected Miss Snyder of trying to defraud her:

597 Fifth Avenue.
April 13, 1899.

Mrs. E. L. C. Van Winkle:

Dear Madam: Your letter of April 11 has reached me, and in reply I would say that all I know of Miss Alice Snyder is that many years ago her husband had business connections with my father, during the course of which my father had to communicate with Mr. Snyder by letter. Subsequently finding that Miss Snyder was in need of money, I offered to pay certain sums for such of my father's letters as she held in her possession. I also gave her some sewing to do, but have never met her personally and cannot vouch for her business ability, as I know nothing about it. Very truly,
HELEN GOULD,
per J.M.L.

MISSISSIPPI STEAMER BURNED.

City of Kansas Destroyed at New Madrid, Mo.—All Passengers Escape.

NEW MADRID, Mo., Dec. 18.—The steamer City of Kansas of the Memphis and Cincinnati Steamship Line was burned to the water's edge early to-day while lying at the foot of Main Street.

All the passengers escaped, but a large amount of cotton, with considerable other freight and baggage, was destroyed. The total loss is estimated at $50,000.

The fire started in the front cabin about 1 A. M., when all the passengers and most of the crew were asleep. They were quickly awakened, and all gained the shore in safety, just in time to escape the flames. The landing stage was burned away, but planks were run out to the shore, and most of the passengers crossed on these. Some of them had been awakened so suddenly that they had not time to dress. A number of passengers on the opposite side of the boat jumped into the water. Fortunately, it was not deep there, and they waded ashore.

The State of Kansas was bound up to Cincinnati from Memphis, which place she left last Saturday, with her cabins well filled with passengers and a heavy load of freight, consisting of 1,600 bales of cotton and miscellaneous merchandise.

Several Hurt by Collapse of Bridge.

WILMINGTON, Del., Dec. 18.—Fifty men and two teams were dropped into the Brandywine River this evening by the parting of the cables of a suspension bridge at Kentmere. No one was killed, but a dozen persons were more or less seriously hurt. The bridge was suspended fifteen feet above deep water, and the weight of the large number of men who were returning from work at the Brandywine granite quarry caused the bridge to collapse. Several men clung to the cables until help reached them, while others swam to the shore. A horse was drowned.

THE MUNN ENVELOPE

"The only practical and valuable addition to an envelope since the day when gummed flaps took the place of sealing wax."

The Munn Wired Envelope presents in simple form a solution of the whole vexed problem of envelope opening, and marks an epoch in the history of time and labor-saving inventions.

It is one of those little things, the value of which impresses at sight, and which goes to mark the difference between convenience and inconvenience in business life.

The Munn Envelope contains every quality of the ordinary envelope, WITH ADDITIONAL QUALITIES:

"You can open the Munn Envelope with a KNIFE, While you cannot open the ordinary envelope with a wire."

The Munn Envelopes once used will become indispensable to bankers and merchants doing a large business through correspondence, as checks and valuable papers enclosed in them will be safe from mutilation by the sharp letter openers usually employed.

The mere question of the time saved in getting at the day's mail is an important item. The wires of half a dozen Munn Envelopes may be pulled while you are inserting a knife blade under the tightly gummed flap of a single ordinary envelope. The wire is also a protection against the tearing of an envelope in the mails, and as such must recommend itself equally to the banker or business man and the manufacturer who mails large numbers of checks and important papers.

The Munn Wired Envelope is a free insurance on its contents.

The Munn Wired Envelope is to the ordinary envelope of to-day as this latter is to the rudely-sealed piece of paper which was folded round letters fifty years ago.

Aside from the feature of the wire, these envelopes will be found of superior quality and excellence of finish, as they can only be made by the highest grade machines and the most skilled operators. Entirely new machinery had to be invented and constructed for the manufacture of these envelopes, and the present plant represents the result of trained thought and unlimited expenditure, a fact which is of interest as an earnest of the superiority of its output.

From one thousand to one hundred thousand envelopes can be delivered, printed to order, within 24 hours.

CITY ENVELOPED IN FOG

Rear End Collision on Brooklyn Fifth Avenue Elevated Road.

THREE BOYS WERE INJURED

Ferryboat Columbia's Passengers Frightened in a Crash with Tugboat—Traffic Delayed.

The heaviest fog that has visited New York and vicinity thus far this Winter hung over the landscape yesterday like a great yellowish blanket. It acted as a serious deterrent to rapid or any other kind of transit. Under its all-pervading and depressing influence every living thing was made more or less anxious and unhappy, except a few London tourists, and even their comfort was marred somewhat by envy and homesickness. The fog was in all respects quite as good an article of its kind as the London make.

Traffic was thrown out of gear for the entire day. On all the elevated roads in Manhattan and Brooklyn men were stationed along the tracks to prevent accidents. At switching points the track guards used whistles to prevent collisions. Delays were the rule everywhere. The surface road cars moved slower than usual, and there were frequent blockades. In the harbor and along the waterfronts throughout Sunday night and yesterday the air was filled with the screech of fog whistles and the tolling of ship and ferryhouse bells.

Ships that passed in the night the Fire Island signal station got lost in the fog and remained in unknown locations for many hours before being reported at Quarantine. Few vessels scheduled to sail yesterday passed out, and still fewer arrivals passed in. Ferryboats felt their way across the rivers and bay at long intervals, and bumped into each other frequently. Tugboats and other harbor craft either remained tied up or groped blindly along at a snail's pace. Along shore the fog caused much vehicular commotion and picturesque profanity. Wagon poles were intertwined into dimly outlined truck wheels or thrust their iron-shod noses into inoffensive tailboards. Commuters from the suburbs were delayed alike by train and boat, and in many cases arrived at their places of business one or two hours late.

The first collision reported during the day was from the Brooklyn Fifth Avenue Elevated Railroad at 8:15 o'clock in the morning. A north-bound train was just leaving the Ninth Street station when the train following came out of the fog at considerable speed and its motor car jammed into the rear car of the forward train, shattering the platforms and the woodwork near the ends of both. Three boys standing on the rear platform of the forward train were injured. George Traner, twelve years old, of 443 Fifty-seventh Street, Brooklyn, was injured in the hip and back and suffered from a severe shock. Alexander Rodman, fourteen years old, of 287 Seventeenth Street, had his foot jammed and badly cut and finger lacerated. Bert Clark, fourteen years old, of 274 Forty-seventh Street, was slightly injured about the body.

Thousands of Brooklynites unwilling to trust themselves on the ferryboats took the bridge cars, which were consequently congested for hours.

On the Sixth Avenue and Third Avenue Elevated Roads the morning express trains ran so slowly and were so much delayed that more than a thousand passengers were unable to crowd aboard those which did arrive and were forced to take the local trains, which ran at a snail's pace. The stations were jammed with passengers.

The second collision of the day was on the water. The Wall Street ferryboat Columbia was crossing to the New York side with about 700 passengers, when she bumped violently against the tugboat Robert Haddon. Both boats had altered their course somewhat after discerning each other, and as a result no further damage was done than a scraping of paint, a violent keeling, and a semi-panic among the ferryboat passengers. Three of the deck hands of the tug became so frightened that they jumped on the ferryboat.

Another collision on the water was that between the Erie ferryboats Passaic and Susquehanna. The latter was badly damaged, about thirty feet of the women's cabin being torn away. There was no one in the cabin, and no one was injured. The collision occurred at the entrance to the ferry slips on the New Jersey side. The Passaic was crowded with passengers, but there was no panic.

The steamer John E. Moore could not go to Ellis Island at all. The boat leaves at 7:30 o'clock in the morning regularly, and at that time there were seventy-five workmen and twenty-five employes of the Immigration Department at the Battery waiting for the boat. They were unable to go to the island, and the night force of workmen at the island, employed on the new buildings, was unable to return to New York.

The Maine Steamship Company's steamer Manhattan, which was due here at 7:30 o'clock on Sunday night, pased City Island at 6 o'clock that evening, but did not get to her pier until 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

The Mount Hope of the Bridgeport Line, which was due at 3 o'clock yesterday morning, got in at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

The fog, which came on the city early Sunday evening, lifted somewhat during the early afternoon yesterday, but settled down again before nightfall.

At the Weather Bureau the officials said that it was due to the sudden shifting to the east of the winds, which had been blowing steadily from the north and west for several days. The barometrical pressure is also very high.

LARCENY IN STAGE LESSONS.

Rosenberg Convicted on the Story of His Pupil, Who Owns Up to 30 Years, but Has Aspirations.

Mrs. Alma Morgan Kenney, a well-dressed, statuesque blonde, who is an elocutionist, and has aspirations toward a stage career, was the principal witness against Max Rosenberg, who was tried yesterday before Judge Blanchard, in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions, on a charge of grand larceny. According to her story, Rosenberg, who represented himself as an actor, had promised to bring her out as a star in a new version of "Cleopatra." He was to advertise her, and give her lessons in the dramatic art as well. Mrs. Kenney paid for these services in several installments of $50 each, but claims that she received no adequate return for her money.

Under cross-examination by Emanuel Friend, the defendant's counsel, she said that Rosenberg had given her six lessons. "They lasted about fifteen minutes each," she said, "and I paid for them all."

"And did you consider yourself fitted to go before the public?" asked the lawyer.

"I certainly did," said the witness.

"Why did you allow yourself to be advertised as an English actress," asked Mr. Friend, "when you had never been in England?"

"It was against my wish," said Mrs. Kenney.

"How long have you been an elocutionist?" asked Mr. Friend.

"Ever since I was a young girl of fifteen Summers," said the witness.

"How long ago was that?"

Mrs. Kenney refused to answer.

"Was it twenty years?" asked the lawyer.

Mrs. Kenney sniffed disdainfully and remained silent.

"Thirty years, then?" asked Mr. Friend.

"It might be fifty years," said the witness, with considerable asperity.

When Judge Blanchard ordered her to answer the question, she owned up to having been an elocutionist for fifteen years. "Now that you know my age," she said, "I hope you are satisfied."

Rosenberg's defense was a general denial, and a statement that the complainant had received a return in advertisements and lessons for the money given him. He was convicted of grand larceny. According to Assistant District Attorney Honey, who prosecuted him, he has been convicted three times before of the same offense, as well as on a charge of bigamy.

W. D. McCrackan the Speaker.

W. D. McCrackan, M. A., author of "The Rise of the Swiss Republic," and other works on Switzerland, addressed the annual banquet of the Swiss Club last Saturday night, and not the Rev. Dr. Henry M. McCracken, Chancellor of the New York University, as was stated in the news report of the banquet which appeared in THE NEW YORK TIMES the following morning.

DETECTIVES WORKED UNASKED.

Saw an Advertisement of the Loss of a Pin, Found It and the Thief, and Then Told the Owner.

Martin D. Knapp of 2,961 Seventh Avenue, on the night of Dec. 10, while riding in an electric car, had a valuable diamond horseshoe pin stolen by men who were standing near him on the platform of the car, at One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street and Eighth Avenue. He did not report the loss to the police, but put an advertisement in a newspaper. Detective Vallely saw the advertisement, and with Detectives Cain, Stripp, and Milburn started out to find the stolen property.

While standing in front of the Marlborough Hotel a few days ago Detective Vallely overheard several cabmen jesting about a handsome pin which Cabman Hiram Frost of 520 West Twenty-eighth Street was wearing. The detectives questioned Frost, and he said he had bought the pin from a man named "Teddy." Frost gave a description of "Teddy," and the detectives came to the conclusion that he was "Teddy" Miller, whose picture is No. 4,005 in the Rogues' Gallery. Frost was taken to Police Headquarters, where he identified the picture of Miller as that of the man who had sold the pin to him. Then the detectives began a search for Miller.

On Sunday evening the detectives located Miller and a man named George Simpson, another alleged crook, and arrested both of them. Frost was taken to Police Headquarters again, and identified Miller, and then the detectives called on Mr. Knapp for the first time. He had given up his pin as lost, and was startled when told what had been done in the case. He went to Police Headquarters and identified Miller as one of the men who had jostled him on the car the night his pin was stolen.

Miller was arraigned yesterday before Magistrate Mayo, in the Jefferson Market Police Court, and held in $1,000 bail for examination. The detectives are looking for his accomplices, whom they say they know.

TO PROSECUTE "STEERERS."

District Attorney After the Men Who Prey on the Relatives of Petty Criminals.

District Attorney Gardiner, whose attention was called yesterday to the practices of a class of men known as "steerers," who infest the Criminal Court Building, has decided to take immediate action against them. Judge Cowing will charge the Grand Jury to-morrow in regard to their operations, and as many of them as possible will be indicted. The District Attorney's office will use all its influence for speedy convictions and heavy penalties in these cases.

The sources of income to the "steerers" are the poorer classes of people and the foreigners, whose relatives are on trial for petty offenses. They represent themselves as lawyers having great influence with the Judges and the District Attorney's office, and offer to get minor criminals out of trouble or to have their sentences mitigated for a fee. Their victims see them moving about the courtrooms with the air of persons in authority and holding short conversations with the Judges and lawyers, and readily accede to their demands for money.

The conversations which take place between the Judges and the "steerers" are generally as follows: The "steerer" goes up to the Judge and says, "Good morning, Judge." The Judge answers him, and the "steerer" manages to make a few remarks about the weather before the Judge escapes. The "steerer" then returns to his victim and tells him that he has settled his case with the Judge, and the victim gratefully pays over $50 or $75. Some of these leeches are able to get the court calendars in advance, and spend the evenings visiting the houses of the relatives of the people scheduled for trial.

On Saturday a "steerer" was overheard talking to a woman whose son was to be tried for a petty offense. "If I don't help you," said the "steerer," "your son will get two years. Give me $50, so that I can take the District Attorney out to dinner, and he will only get one." The woman would have paid the money gladly if she had not been warned. Yesterday her son was sentenced to six months' imprisonment, the maximum penalty for his offense.

FATHER RITCHIE'S ILLNESS.

Recovers from the Sudden Attack in His Pulpit Sunday.

The Rev. Arthur Ritchie, rector of the Church of St. Ignatius, West Fortieth Street, was seized with a sudden attack of illness while preaching in his church on Sunday evening, and was obliged to discontinue his sermon.

Father Ritchie had officiated at the morning service without showing any signs of being ill, and he appeared quite well until about half way through with his sermon in the evening. He spoke as usual extemporaneously. He suddenly broke down. Finding that he was utterly unable to concentrate his mind on the sermon he gave out the offertory hymn, and after this and the benediction the congregation dispersed.

The illness of the rector caused great alarm among the members of the church, and for a time it was rumored that Father Ritchie was seriously sick. There was only a small congregation present, on account of the bad weather, but yesterday morning the news of the occurrence soon spread, and many inquiries were sent as to the his condition. The sexton had been asked on Sunday evening to send for a physician, but Father Ritchie would not allow this, saying that he would recover in a few hours.

Inquirers yesterday received the intelligence that Father Ritchie was quite well again, and had gone to Nyack to attend to his regular duties in connection with the home founded by the congregation of St. Ignatius's Church there for poor persons. Mr. Ritchie has a room at the home, and slept there on Sunday night.

This is not the first time that Father Ritchie has been attacked in the same way. About a year ago he was forced to give up officiating at a service for a like cause, and some time before that he suffered from a similar attack. The sudden break-downs are attributed to strain from overwork, Father Ritchie being indefatigable in looking after the church and its various affiliated institutions. The attacks, his physician says, do not denote any serious condition.

Father Ritchie is one of the best-known clergymen of the High Church party in this city. He was ordained a priest in 1873, and came to New York from Chicago after the death of the Rev. Dr. Frederick C. Ewer, the first rector of the Church of St. Ignatius, in 1881.

MILL HANDS' GREAT HARVEST.

The Large Increase in Wages in New England Factories.

From The Boston Herald, Dec. 13.

Figures from the pay rolls in the manufacturing towns of New England tell a story of unexampled prosperity in those industrial centres. The two great industries that lead the procession of prosperity are the cotton and the woolen, and in both of these the advances recently made, or that take effect to-day, or that begin with the new year, as happens in the various places, carry the wages of the employes beyond the boom rates of 1893. The result is that millions of dollars more will be paid to the working people next year, and there appears to be no indication of any disturbance of the existing conditions for some time to come.

Fall River, the great centre of cotton mills, adds about $2,000,000 to her annual pay rolls for 28,207 persons employed. This is in addition to the restoration of the old rate last April.

Lowell's cotton mill operatives begin work to-day on the new schedule, which adds 10 per cent. to their wages and $20,000 a week to the pay rolls.

New Bedford reports that 13,000 wage-earners are now receiving the largest wages ever paid there.

Lawrence operatives will to-day know exactly what the extent of the advance promised them by the various mills is, but it is expected to average about 10 per cent for the 18,000 persons employed in the various mills.

The increase in wages for the 12,000 employes of the cotton mills of Manchester, N. H., goes into effect to-day, and adds about $6,725 to the weekly pay rolls.

Reports of the same tenor come from the other great factory centres of this State, from Rhode Island, Maine, and New Hampshire, and, while in some cases no uniform rate of advance is given, the mills are busy, and the people are prosperous.

VENEZUELAN PORT REOPENED.

Maracaibo Retaken by Government Forces and Commerce Resumed.

Señor Elias Gonzalez Estevez, the newly appointed Venezuelan Consul General, who assumed charge of the Consulate here yesterday, received a cable dispatch from his Government announcing the recapture of the City of Maracaibo. The dispatch adds: "Port has been reopened to commerce."

Maracaibo was taken by the rebels about two weeks ago, and the latter have been in control until now. As a consequence the port was closed to shipping by the Government to prevent the insurgents from collecting customs duties. Three thousand men under Gen. Julio Sarria were sent from Caracas by Provisional President Castro to retake the place.

The appointment was announced yesterday of Señor José Antonio Veluttini as Vice Consul of Venezuela in this city. The latter is a son of Gen. J. A. Veluttini, a former President of the Venezuelan Senate and at present Commander in Chief of the Government forces in the Department of the East.

CARACAS, Venezuela, Dec. 18.—President Castro's troops have occupied Maracaibo, ousting Gen. Hernandez's party without fighting. This has produced a good impression throughout the republic.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—A dispatch to Señor Pulido, the Venezuelan Chargé, states that the revolution is crushed and Hernandez's force is completely destroyed. Details are not given of the forces engaged and the number of casualties. The engagement occurred on the 14th inst., and is the one referred to by Minister Loomis. Señor Pulido regards the information such as to justify the belief that the disorder in Venezuela is at an end and that peace will be restored.

Castro's Government Recognized.

CARACAS, Venezuela, Dec. 18.—Spain, Italy, and Germany having to-day indicated their recognition, President Castro's Government has now been formally recognized by all nations.

CHILD IN A MANHOLE.

Sudden Disappearance and Fortunate Rescue of Lena Doll.

While on her way home from school yesterday afternoon, Lena Doll, nine years old, who lives at 348 West Thirty-ninth Street, suddenly disappeared from the side of her sister Minnie with whom she was walking. The children attend a private school in Forty-second Street, near Seventh Avenue, and had progressed as far as Ninth Avenue Minnie turned around to speak to her sister and found that she was missing. She heard her crying, however, and walking back a short distance saw her sister being carried out of a manhole by a workingman.

When she had been lifted to the sidewalk the child said that she was watching her teacher, who was on the opposite side of the street and did not see the opening in the sidewalk.

Two men were at work in the sewer when the girl fell into it, and they quickly brought her to the surface. She escaped injury and ran home with her sister.

F. W. DEVOE APPOINTED.

To be a Member of the New York and New Jersey Bridge Commission.

ALBANY, Dec. 18.—Gov. Roosevelt has appointed Frederick W. Devoe of New York City a Commissioner of the New York and New Jersey Bridge, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Charles M. Vail.

Frederick William Devoe was born in this city Jan. 26, 1828. He entered business as a clerk when fifteen years old. He became junior partner in the firm of Raynolds & Devoe in 1852, and in 1864 organized the firm of F. W. Devoe & Co. Since 1890 he has been President of the F. W. Devoe & C. T. Raynolds Company, paint and varnish manufacturers. He has at various times acted as President of the Board of Education, of the Greater New York Commission, and of the New York Juvenile Asylum.

FIVE HURT IN HOBOKEN FIRE.

Early Morning Blaze Destroys a Double Tenement House.

A fire at which one person was seriously hurt, four persons slightly injured, and several heroic rescues were made by police and firemen, occurred in Hoboken early yesterday morning. The burned building was 118 Jefferson Street, a double four-story brick tenement house, occupied by seven families, aggregating thirty-five persons.

Those injured were Lizzie Kirschoff, eleven years old, who had a severe fall and who inhaled so much smoke that her recovery is doubtful; Sophia Kirschoff, her sister, thirteen years old, suffering from shock; Dennis Sullivan, overcome by smoke; Margaret Bruder, forty-seven years old, ankle sprained; John Schultz, fourteen years old, badly bruised.

The fire originated in the cellar and is supposed to have been caused by tramps, who had free access to the place. It was discovered by Frank Kirschoff, father of the two injured girls. He warned his family and the other tenants and then sent in an alarm.

By the time he got back to the house all the tenants were astir, but the flames had made great headway, and when the firemen and police arrived it was seen that the house was doomed. Policeman Barrone and Fireman McMahon carried Mrs. Sullivan and two children down from the third floor. Dennis Sullivan, the head of the family, insisted that his daughter Julia was still in her room. It was while he was trying to find her that he was overcome. After Barrone and McMahon had carried him out it was found that Miss Sullivan had escaped and taken refuge at the house of a neighbor.

After Kirschoff ran out to give the alarm his wife and children made their way out. Lizzie fled by way of the fire escape. It was enveloped in smoke, and, after fighting her way nearly to the bottom, she became unconscious and fell. She was taken to St. Mary's Hospital. Sophia was overcome on the stairs, and fell half way down the second flight, when she was caught by a fireman. He carried her to a window, and she was taken down a ladder. John Schultz and Mrs. Bruder were injured by falling down stairs. All the other tenants escaped without injury.

None of the tenants saved any of their effects. The total loss is $7,200. The building, owned by William Helke, was valued at $6,000, and was fully insured.

Slight Fire on the Ship Orinoco.

A fire did about $100 damage aboard the steamship Orinoco, lying at the foot of East Nineteenth Street, last evening. The Orinoco which belongs to the Quebec Steamship Company, has been undergoing repairs. The fire started where boilermakers had been at work over the boilers. There was no fire in her furnaces. One fire engine and the fireboat Robert A. Van Wyck put the blaze out, leaving the vessel listed at an angle of about ten degrees from the water pumped into her.

Bottle Worth $400 Gone.

Christopher Gedner, a Pole, sixty-seven years old, of Madison Street, Flushing, kept $400 in gold in a bottle, which he buried in his cellar. He saw the money was unmolested last week, but when he went after it yesterday to send to a sister out West to pay a mortgage on a house it was gone. Gedner says his sister will now lose the property.

UNDUE INFLUENCE PRESUMED.

Burden of Proof on the Proponents in a Death Bed Will Case.

The contest over the will of Christine Ehminne, which was tried before Surrogate Arnold, was decided by Surrogate Varnum yesterday adversely to the proponents. The will offered for probate was claimed to have been made by Mrs. Ehminne on the 24th of April, 1896. She was a German woman, seventy years old, comparatively ignorant, and without known relatives. She had been seriously ill for some time, from pleurisy and pneumonia. The instrument was claimed to have been executed one hour before her death, and when she was weak and feeble, almost in extremis, and prevented from collapse only by hypodermic injections of brandy, strychnine, and musk. She was too weak to write, and could only make a cross, when her hand was guided.

In a will made eleven years before, when she was in perfect health, and which the Surrogate holds to have been properly executed, she described the beneficiary as her "so-called sister." In the will of 1896 she ignored that beneficiary and named the lawyer who drew the will, an entire stranger to her, as her executor. She gave a legacy of $1,000 to a washerwoman, with whom she had but slight acquaintance, but who was then nursing her, and the rest of her estate, amounting to nearly $20,000, was given to a female doctor, whom the Surrogate describes as of somewhat questionable character and standing.

This woman, who lived in the same tenement, had very little acquaintance with the decedent, and was a person as to whom the evidence showed Mrs. Ehminne had expressed her fear and dislike. It did not appear, the Surrogate said, that there had been any estrangement between her and her "so-called sister," who, with her husband, had rendered her many kindnesses.

Two experts had testified that under the circumstances the decedent could not have been mentally competent. The Surrogate holds that the burden of proof, in view of this evidence, was on the proponents, and under the peculiar and suspicious circumstances shown the burden of proof was shifted to repel the presumption of fraud and undue influence.

INDICTED FINANCIERS PLEAD.

American Investors Co.'s Officials Deny Larceny Charge—Corr Arrested.

Pleas of not guilty to indictments charging them with larceny were made by Daniel J. Pierce, G. Percival Stewart, and Francis Wolfe Brown, before Judge Cowing, in Part I. of General Sessions, yesterday. They were held each in $10,000 bail for trial.

Pierce was arrested in Brooklyn on Sunday. He and Brown are Directors of the American Investors Company, of which Stewart was President.

Nicholas F. Corr, who is said to be an associate of Stewart, was arrested yesterday and locked up in Police Headquarters. Corr is thirty-two years old and lives at 115 West One Hundred and Fifty-second Street. He posed as cashier, First Vice President, and Treasurer of the Financial Agency Company. He was arrested at the office of the American and Union Ice Company, in Twenty-fourth Street, near Seventh Avenue, on one of the six bench warrants issued on Dec. 15. He is charged with grand larceny.

HOUSE COMMITTEES NAMED

Assignment of Members Announced by Speaker Henderson.

IMPORTANT PLACE FOR PAYNE

The New Yorker Is Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee—Is Also on Insular Affairs.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—Speaker Henderson to-day announced the committees of the House of Representatives. It proved to have very few surprises, as the Speaker preserved the time-honored custom of following precedent as to old members, leaving them in their old Chairmanships and places, and gradually advancing them as vacancies occur. The important new Chairmanships are those of Mr. Brosius of Pennsylvania, Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee; Mr. Grosvenor of Ohio, Chairman of Merchant Marine and Fisheries; Mr. Southard of Ohio, Chairman of Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and Mr. Cooper of Wisconsin, Chairman of the newly formed Committee on Insular Affairs.

The new members of the Ways and Means Committe are McCall and Long, Republicans; Newlands, Silver, and Cooper, Democrats. Appropriations and Foreign Affairs also get a considerable amount of new blood. Military Affairs has the largest new membership, six Republicans and three Democrats. The membership of the Insular Committee is notable in being a "committee of Chairmen," the heads of Ways and Means, Appropriations, Foreign Affairs, Commerce, Post Offices, &c., being represented also on this committee.

The new members of the House receive full consideration from the Speaker, although, following custom, they necessarily take the lower places on committees.

The Democratic members receive fewer places than in the last Congress, as the larger Democratic representation in this House compelled a reduction in the number of places for each.

The only incident in connection with the reading of the lists was Mr. Bailey's interrogatory of the Speaker as to whether Gen. Wheeler's name had been placed upon the Committee on Ways and Means. Speaker Henderson responded in the negative.

The Ways and Means Committee as announced includes a blank, which is left for the name of Gen. Wheeler. As he has not been sworn in as a member of the House his name could not be inserted, as Mr. Bailey had informed the Speaker that objection would be raised if the name was included. Mr. Bailey retires from the committee at his own request to give place to his Texas colleague, Mr. Cooper.

The committees are as follows:

WAYS AND MEANS—Payne, (N. Y.,) Dalzell, (Penn.,) Hopkins, (Ill.,) Grosvenor, (Ohio,) Russell, (Conn.,) Dolliver, (Iowa,) Steele, (Ind.,) Tawney, (Minn.,) McCall, (Mass.,) Long, (Kan.,) Republicans; Richardson, (Tenn.,) Samuel M. APPORTIONMENT BY STATES.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—Among the members of the House from some of the States there is mourning over the committees as appointed, in consequence of the losses suffered in Chairmen and in places. A comparison of the appointments with those for the Fifty-fifth Congress ought not to be made without explanation, as the explanation accounts for the differences of which complaint is made. The West has been very well taken care of. Illinois increases in the number of Chairmen, although she lost members in the last Congressional election. Ohio gains three Chairmen, and Pennsylvania, which held eight Chairmanships in the last Congress, comes out three places short. New York, owing to her inability to elect a majority of the delegation, loses her hold upon three of the nine Chairmanships, getting only six.

Pennsylvanians fancy that the kindness shown to Wisconsin and the reduction of Pennsylvania's importance in the House may be traceable in part to the attitudes taken respectively by Wisconsin and Pennsylvania in the Speakership contest. Wisconsin turned over to Henderson when he needed her to assure his election, but Pennsylvania put up a candidate and held out until the offer of aid was unnecessary to assure Henderson an easy victory. This attitude is now attributed to the sagacity of Quay, and the lost chairmanships will continue to remind Pennsylvania of the mistake of assuming that mystery is always a good thing to indulge in in political contests.

The comparison of assignments of chairmanships to the last Congress and to this is presented in the following table:

States.	55th Congress.	56th Congress.	States.	55th Congress.	56th Congress.

HOW NEW YORKERS ARE PLACED.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—Speaker Henderson, in naming committees, has provided for the New York members, Republicans and Democrats, with reference to their experience, their intimated or supposed preferences, and their degree of past and possible usefulness to the majority party. There was a large number of new members to be placed. Several of the Republicans have been named on three committees, but Littauer is satisfied with one place, that on Appropriations. Besides being Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. Payne is a member of the Committee on Insular Affairs, to look after the new foreign possessions.

As for the Democrats, they have fared variously. Mr. Sulzer, the leader of the delegation, is placed on Military Affairs and Patents. Of the members who voted for the Currency bill, Chanler goes to the important Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, without other assignment. Clayton is on the busy District of Columbia Committee, a position usually sought for. Driggs, the wheelhorse of the gold Democrats, is placed, to his satisfaction, on Banking and Currency and Invalid Pensions, and will have to do a lot of hard work. Fitzgerald obtains places on Indian Affairs and Claims. Levy goes to Coinage, Weights, and Measures. Col. Ruppert is assigned to Militia, which is not highly important, and to Immigration and Naturalization, which is. To Scudder the Speaker has paid a very flattering compliment in naming him, in his first session, to be a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee. Underhill goes to two important committees, and Wilson is placed on three. The New York Republicans are placed as follows:

Alexander—Judiciary; Rivers and Harbors.
Chickering—Chairman Railways and Canals.
Cochran—Elections No. 3; Private Land Claims; Invalid Pensions.
Driscoll—Elections No. 3; Pacific Railroads.
Gillet—Public Buildings and Grounds; Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture.
Emerson—Manufacturies; Labor; Expenditures in the Navy Department.
Ketcham—Military Affairs; Post Offices and Post Roads.
Littauer—Appropriations.
O'Grady—Coinage, Weights and Measures; Patents; Private Land Claims.
Payne—Chairman Ways and Means; Insular Affairs.
Ray—Chairman Judiciary; Irrigation of Arid Lands.
Sherman—Chairman Indian Affairs; Inter-State and Foreign Commerce.
Stewart—Manufacturies; Enrolled Bills.
Tompkins—Education; Patents; Revision of the Laws.
Vreeland—Accounts.
Wadsworth—Chairman Agriculture; Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

These are the places provided for the New York Democrats:

Bradley—War Claims; Expenditures in the Department of Justice.
Chanler—Merchant Marine and Fisheries.
Clayton—District of Columbia.
Cummings—Naval Affairs; Labor; Library.
Driggs—Banking and Currency; Invalid Pensions.
Fitzgerald—Indian Affairs; Claims.
Glynn—Election No. 1; Reform in the Civil Service.
Levy—Coinage, Weights and Measures.
McClellan—Ways and Means.
May—Private Land Claims; Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture.
Muller—Inter-State and Foreign Commerce.
Ryan—Election No. 1; Reform in the Civil Service.
Ruppert—Militia; Immigration and Naturalization.
Ryan—Alcoholic Liquor Traffic; Select Committee on Census.
Scudder—Foreign Affairs; Expenditures on Public Buildings.
Sulzer—Military Affairs; Patents.
Underhill—Manufacturies; Claims.
Wilson—Immigration and Naturalization; Ventilation and Acoustics.

TWO MILLION GIFT FOR GIRLS.

A Philadelphian Will Build an Industrial School for Them.

From The Philadelphia Press.

P. A. B. Widener's gift to Philadelphia of an industrial home for crippled children is to be duplicated in a measure by an industrial school for girls, to be presented to the city by James M. Munyon. The institution will be built on the rolling land between the Old Lancaster Road and George's Hill, Fairmount Park, near the "Towers," Mr. Munyon's home. In scope, the school will do for fatherless girls of Philadelphia what Girard College is doing for boys. It will cost $2,000,000.

For many years Mr. Munyon has had in mind the establishment of such an educational institution. With that end in view he has bought, during recent years, a large plot of elevated ground overlooking the city and containing nearly thirty acres. Upon this site he will erect a college unique in character and long deemed a desired addition to the charities of Philadelphia.

The school will consist of a number of small structures grouped about a large central edifice. Plans have been drawn by prominent architects, but one has not yet been selected by the founder.

The aim of the school will be to furnish educational facilities to poor girls of the city, either orphans or fatherless. Girls who at this time are put out at service among strangers will be received at the school and there receive a thorough English training until they reach a certain age, when they will be started along particular lines of education for which they show fitness. Higher education is not the object of the school. Practical training, which will make the students of immediate value to themselves and to the world as wage-earners, will take the place of theoretical instruction.

Mr. Munyon said: "It is my intention to provide expert instructors in those branches of industry which will bring the students immediate returns when they pass out into the world. Latin and Greek, chemistry and physics will not be taught. In their stead will be courses in stenography, dressmaking, domestic economy—in short, any branch of work which will be of monetary value to the girl in after years. Girls will be taken into the school at the age of ten years, and will be graduated, at the age of eighteen, independent women, able to make their way in the world. Art and music will be taught girls who show an aptitude for those branches."

The Munyon school, like Girard College, will be placed in charge of a Board of Trustees, of which the Governor of the State will probably be the nominal head. Mr. Munyon will endow the school with funds sufficient to keep it a self-sustaining institution. It will be non-sectarian.

New York Heirs of Oscar Coles.

RIVERHEAD, L. I., Dec. 18.—Surrogate Petty of this county has admitted the will of Oscar Coles, a former resident of Manhattan, later of Aiken, S. C., who had a Summer residence at Bellport, and who died there last Summer. The estate, estimated at $175,000, consists of considerable real estate at Aiken and some in New York State. The will gives to his niece, Cordelia C. Whitney, wife of Dr. Albert Whitney of 157 West Seventy-fifth Street, Manhattan, $10,000, and to his legal adviser, Charles W. Bennett of 27 Pine Street, Manhattan, $5,000. The residue of the estate, real and personal, goes to Mrs. L. B. Scrymser, wife of Clarence H. Scrymser of the Borough of Richmond. Mrs. Scrymser is the daughter of a sister of Mr. Coles's wife, deceased.

Congressman Resigns as a Captain.

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 18.—Congressman R. Wayne Parker, who is Captain of the Essex Troop, has sent his resignation as Captain to the military authorities at Trenton to take effect on Jan. 1. Capt. Parker will be unanimously asked by the troop to reconsider his action. His Congressional duties, however, will doubtless interfere.

RAILROAD'S PENSION SYSTEM.

Pennsylvania Company's Plan Goes Into Effect Jan. 1—Graduated Rate According to Length of Service.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 18.—It was officially announced to-night that the plan of pensioning aged employes by the Pennsylvania Railroad will be put into effect next January. There will be 950 employes retired and pensioned on that date. Thereafter all officers and employes not yet seventy years of age will be retired and pensioned on the first day of the month following their attainment of that age. The plan also provides an age limit for the employment of new men, no new employe to be taken into the service who is over thirty-five years old.

President Cassatt to-day issued a circular containing the details of the plan. It provides for the retirement of all employes of the Pennsylvania Railroad system east of Pittsburg and Erie, embodying the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, the Northern Central Railroad Company, Philadelphia, West Jersey and Seashore Railroad Company, the Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad Company, and the Philadelphia and Camden Ferry Company, who have attained the age of seventy years, and the payment to such employes of a pension equal to 1 per cent. for each year of continuous service of the average salary for the last ten years. It also provides for the retirement of all officers and employes between the ages of sixty-five and sixty-nine years who, having been thirty years in the service of the company, are physically disqualified, and the payment to them of a pension computed on the same basis. These pensions will be payable at the same rate during the lives of the pensioners, provided the total amount for pensions shall not exceed the sum of $300,000 a year. When the total expenditures for pensions exceeds the above sum, a readjustment of the pension roll on the basis of a lower percentage will be made to bring the amount within the maximum limit.

This new department, the conception of the Board of Directors of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, is an extension and the outgrowth of the Pennsylvania Railroad relief system adopted by the company several years ago and still in operation. In addition to the pension allowance the employes relieved from the service on account of age limit who are members of the relief fund will also receive from the income of the surplus fund, accumulated during the past fourteen years, an additional allowance each month, according to the class to which they have contributed during the period of their membership. Members of the relief fund, relieved from service on account of age limit, will be permitted to retain title to death benefit, according to their class membership, by the payment of a small contribution each month.

The new pension department will be in charge of a board of officers appointed annually by the Boards of Directors of the various companies interested. The members of the Board of Officers will hold office for one year, will be under the President of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and will report to the Board of Directors. The Board of Officers for the year 1900 are Charles W. Pugh, Second Vice President, Chairman; John P. Green, First Vice President; S. M. Prevost, Third Vice President; Samu

THE TROUBLE ON THE EXCHANGE.

The excitement, amounting for the time to panic, on the Stock Exchange yesterday was due primarily to the collapse of a new trust company which broke under the burden of speculative securities that it had not succeeded in unloading. The collapse came at a moment when speculation on the Exchange had for some little time been difficult and precarious, and when the minds of the habitués were strained and nervous. Whether the disturbance will have any serious effect on the general business situation depends largely on the extent to which speculation has gone and the degree to which the resources of the business community have been involved in it. There is no evidence of any real danger from this source and every reason to believe that the prompt action of the principal banks in offering money on the Exchange has met the only difficulty that was formidable, the panicky feeling there existing.

THE TIMES has sometimes been regarded by some of its readers as too cheerful in its views of the business situation, but it has not ignored the perils involved in the extraordinary prosperity of the last two years. About two months ago the rules of the Clearing House in regard to trust companies clearing through members of the Clearing House were made public. Shortly before, and, it is fair to infer, in anticipation of this action, the trust company that closed its doors yesterday had severed such connection as it had with the Clearing House, and its officers had announced the desire and intention to do a more independent and an "over-the-counter" business. Their "vigorous" policy excited some admiring comment among men who were more eager to make money than they were to make sure of meeting their obligations. The comment of THE TIMES on the general situation at that time was as follows:

> It is a general impression among financiers that a very important source of the prosperity of a trust company is the "handling" of the securities of the numerous new enterprises resulting from the concentration of existing concerns and the formation of new corporations. The extent to which this concentration has been carried is well known, and it is equally well known that conservative men regard it as not at all free from risk. That there is a legitimate field for such concentration, there in this field it offers solid advantages, and, under careful management, will afford permanent and secure investment, is not denied. On the other hand, the process, precisely because of its real advantages under proper management, presents tempting opportunities for exploitation of the confiding and the ill-informed. And there is an immense difference between securities issued to obtain capital for a legitimate and fairly secure business and those issued for the stock market mainly. That both kinds have been created, and the latter in large volume, is very well known.
> It should be obvious that this difference should be strictly observed by trust companies in any dealings that they may feel justified in undertaking in this direction. We have no means of knowing with certainty that it is not so observed. There does exist, however, among careful observers of the financial situation a feeling that a serious danger may arise from this source. Clearly no harm can be done by pointing it out. A reaction sooner or later from the speculation that necessarily accompanies the kind of prosperity we now enjoy is bound to come. When it does come trust companies should be in a condition to meet it and to reduce its evils to the lowest point. It would be a very serious matter if any number of them were guilty of inviting or aggravating it.

In view of what happened yesterday it will hardly be denied that the warning conveyed two months ago was needed, or that if all the financial institutions of the city had been subjected to the inspection of the Clearing House and to the application of the principles by which the Clearing House is guided, the disaster would not have come, or would have been less serious.

The experience of New York during the year has been peculiar. A very large portion of the enterprises, of all grades of soundness, launched in the fervor of last Spring, were "financed" here, and the effect on the resources and the credit of our people was considerable. At the same time the activity of business throughout the country made heavy demands on New York. Both business and speculation knocked at our doors and were not denied. Speculation has been checked, and those too deeply involved in it have been seriously embarrassed, as the story of yesterday shows. But business in all lines that may be called legitimate continues active and prosperous and essentially sound. We do not believe that speculation has gone far enough to have any permanent effect upon it. There will be some necessary house-cleaning; assets that have been carried at fancy figures will have to be reduced to their true value; credits that have been unduly extended will have to be readjusted. It is, as we have repeatedly pointed out, a process that has to come sooner or later, and is only serious when it is too long delayed. In the present instance it is the judgment of the best-informed observers that the delay has not been sufficient to be dangerous. The banks show every disposition to meet promptly and vigorously the approach of anything like general apprehension, and with mental equanimity secured, the immediate future may be regarded as in no wise threatening.

ENGLAND'S ENEMIES AND ENGLAND'S FRIENDS.

The press of the Continental countries and the street crowds of their capitals openly rejoice at the reverses England has suffered in South Africa. Their sympathies are not with her. They pray for the triumph of the Boers. They want to see England humbled and her great influence in European politics diminished. If she were altogether effaced as a world power there would be tumultuous demonstrations of glee in the cafés of Paris, Berlin, and Vienna, where public opinion is so readily formulated and manifested; and a feeling of deep satisfaction would prevail in the courts and high places of the three great empires of the Continent.

We need not pause one moment to determine where our interest lies and where our sympathy belongs. The future greatness of this Nation depends upon the uninterrupted progress of the world and upon the assured dominance of liberal principles in the regenerated communities that are peopling the waste and abandoned places of the earth. In what way would progress and liberalism prosper by the triumph of the inert semi-civilization of the Boer Republics of South Africa? What more dreadful calamity could befall the cause of human advancement than the abasement of England to a condition where, as one of the spiteful Continental journals puts it, she would "no longer be able to match herself against a great power," where she would no longer be a power to be reckoned with when "leagued oppression" concocted its reactionary designs or poured out its men and treasure to turn back humanity in its march? Where on the map of the broad earth can any man put his finger and say "There the United States would profit by the destruction of the British Empire"? Do our material and political interests, do our feelings as men and women, does our National sentiment, prompt us to respond with gleeful huzzas to the sentiment of the Kreuz Zeitung, that "the decadence of England is now apparent to the whole world," or do they prompt us to utter our heartfelt sympathy for the Government and the people of England in their sad disasters and perplexities?

When the Holy Alliance was planning its deviltries at Troppau and Verona and Laybach three-quarters of a century ago it was a British Minister who "called into existence a new world to redress the balance of the old." Whether the revolted Latin-American colonies of the New World would have risen to national independence without CANNING'S aid is a historical question which it would be quite profitless to discuss, but it is certain that if CANNING had chosen to commit England to the principles of the Holy Alliance of the reactionary and absolutist Continental powers we should have had to fight for our Southern neighbors and the Monroe Doctrine would have been established in blood or not at all. The Boers, terrible alike for their incapacity for progress and for their quality as fighting men, are chargeable with no such designs against constitutional government and liberal ideas as those which were ratified at Verona in 1822. But it would be as unnatural and monstrous for us now to pray that they may humiliate England and destroy her power as it would have been for CANNING to throw in her influence with the reactionary powers of the Holy Alliance. It is not that we have any reason to wish ill to the Boers, but that we have every reason of the head and of the heart to wish England well.

She is our friend. In the highest and best sense she is our ally and we are hers. Nothing that the Boer race can ever do in the future history of the world, no idea that they will ever stand for, no impress that they will ever make upon civilization would compensate us for the loss at this time of England's sympathy and effective help. The two greatest advancing nations of the earth have need of each other.

Fortunately the temper of the crowds in the capitals of Europe is not always the same as that of the chancelleries. The tone and spirit of French and German popular hostility to us in our war with Spain are curiously reproduced in the comments now made in Paris and the German cities upon the British disasters. But while the crowds raved and railed and cheered for Spain the Governments pursued the strict line of correct neutrality. There was talk of interference then. It came to nothing. There is talk of interference now. It will likewise come to nothing.

If England were really on the point of being overcome by a strong power against whom she had employed her entire strength, then, indeed, the old grudges might be paid off by Continental powers whose grasping schemes she has so often balked. But no Government will send a man or a ship or so much as a remonstrance to hinder her in the execution of her purposes in South Africa. Were there among the Continental powers a European concert which cherished some common scheme of seizure and depredation out of which each might secure its due share of the booty, it is not impossible that advantage might be taken of England's preoccupations to make a move where none would dare move were she hand-free. But France could offer Germany nothing in Egypt, Russia could offer her nothing in Asia, that would tempt her to join in invoking the tempest.

Besides, there is the friendship of the United States. No calamity that could befall England would leave us unscathed. The war that would come of any attempt to set bounds to her ambition in South Africa would be fraught with untold loss and dangers for us. What power would want to make war on England knowing that by that act it would become the enemy of the United States? On the Continent they make no secret of one motive of their hostility to her. They want to humble her because she is our friend. If the fact that we are her friend, too, is kept in the view of all the world there will be very little danger of any regrettable complications.

BISHOP POTTER ON THE PHILIPPINES.

Doubtless it will not be very long before Bishop POTTER expands and develops, for the benefit of his countrymen, the observations which he has permitted to be summarized for The Herald. There could be no more competent observer, and none whose remarks upon the political and social and commercial problems which confront us there could be more illuminating.

But there is one remark among them which cannot be too early or too strongly impressed upon our merchants. That is the remark that British and German merchants have shown a much quicker and more general appreciation of the commercial opportunities opened by American administration in the islands than has been exhibited by our own.

It is to be feared that there is no doubt of the accuracy of the Bishop's observation. It concurs too well with what we have had from other sources, and with what we should naturally expect. The American manufacturer has been enervated for two generations by too much protection. He has not been put on his own resources. You could not expect that, when he had only to go to Congress and "make a poor mouth" in order to be secured against foreign competition. But now, in a great many branches of business, he has confessedly outgrown the "home market" thus secured to him. And when he goes into neutral markets, he must stand on his own merits and be prepared for competition.

Perhaps some weak brethren may suggest the extension of our tariff to our new possessions as a substitute for competition. But with a President, and that President Mr. MCKINLEY, who finds it feasible to write a message without so much as a mention of the once sacred tariff, that hope is manifestly illusory. The American manufacturer must make up his mind that he must compete on fair terms for the trade of American possessions, just as the British manufacturer has all this time been doing for the trade of British possessions. When he has once learned that lesson we need have no fears for the result. But he cannot begin to learn it too soon. Indeed, it seems that he is already late in learning it, and he may be commended to study Bishop POTTER'S view of him.

THE MILITARY SITUATION.

The situation in South Africa is that, having "felt of" the Boers in three different places on the line of their advance, the British have discovered that they themselves are not strong enough to force the fighting. One of the British reverses, that of Gen. GATACRE, was an accident. He was misled by his guides, and put at the mercy of an inferior force of Boers in a superior position, from which they were thus enabled to deliver upon him a deadly and irresistible fire, before which he was compelled to retire with great loss. If he had been as well informed as they were and had made his advance accordingly, the testimony of the Boer commanders is that it is they who would have been compelled to fall back.

But Gen. GATACRE'S column was at most operating a diversion, and the importance of its repulse is almost exclusively moral. It is hard to see what its objective was, or even its ultimate object, except to draw away as many of the enemy as possible from the real theatres of operations. On the other hand, the operations of the columns under Lord METHUEN and Sir REDVERS BULLER had very distinct and important objects. The object of the former was the relief of Kimberley; that of the latter the relief of Ladysmith. The two operations were necessarily distinct and separable. The towns are some three hundred miles apart, being separated by the entire breadth of the Orange Free State. The line of communication, supply, and retreat is formed, in one case, by the railroad that runs northward from Cape Town through Kimberley, in the other by the railroad that runs northwestward from Durban through Ladysmith, and ultimately to Johannesburg. Between these two is the less important but more direct road which traverses the Orange Free State and along which the advance of Gen. GATACRE was made.

Each of the advances has been repulsed and for the present neutralized, Gen. GATACRE'S by a misadventure, but the other two after pitched battles that showed they were not equal to the task they had undertaken. Now all three have fallen back, and are intrenched, having for the time abandoned offensive operations, and relying on the reinforcements that are to be forwarded from England. It will take at least six weeks to make these reinforcements available, nobody at the British War Office having apparently had any notion that they would be necessary, or that the force already in South Africa would not be ample to complete the work of subjugating the two republics and rendering them powerless to resist the British terms of peace, whatever these might be. Now the question is, What use will the Boers make of the respite of six weeks that is granted to them before the invaders will be in a condition to reassume the offensive?

They will, of course, attempt in this interval the capture of Kimberley and of Ladysmith. We do not know very much about the condition of either garrison. That of Kimberley, a place which Mr. CECIL RHODES declared, when he betook himself to it, to be "as safe as Piccadilly," seems much the more desperate. It was announced some ten days ago that the garrison had already been put on short rations. And indeed Lord METHUEN'S advance seems to have been premature, so far as his own operations were concerned, and to have been determined by the urgent danger of the place. The urgency of the danger at Kimberley and the unlikelihood that the place can hold out, now that the relieving force has been defeated, are doubtless the considerations upon which the military critic of The London Morning Post, whose comments upon the campaign have given him so authoritative a position among his own countrymen, urges that Gen. METHUEN, as well as Gen. GATACRE, shall "act strictly on the defensive," and that the first division of reinforcements shall be sent to Natal. Undoubtedly the fall of Ladysmith would involve more serious consequences than the loss of Kimberley, seeing that it would involve the loss of a greater body of British troops than has been surrendered before, since the surrender at Yorktown, a century and more ago. But the advice none the less indicates a belief that Kimberley is doomed.

How much military enterprise have the Boers? That is a question which has by no means been satisfactorily answered, and yet it is the question upon the answer to which a great deal depends. Thus far they have been attacked in their own chosen positions, and they have defended themselves against an enemy outnumbering them upon the whole, though not at the points of collision, at least two to one, with the same stubborn courage with which their ancestors resisted the Spanish viceroys. But it does not follow that they will appear to equally good advantage in offensive operations. They now have six weeks, at least, to show what they can do in that way. If during this interval they can secure the capture of Kimberley, they will have scored the most impressive of their successes in the war. But if they can also secure Ladysmith and the 11,000 men under the command of Gen. Sir GEORGE WHITE, they will have inflicted upon the British Empire such a blow as it can be scarcely said to have received in modern history.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—After negotiations extending over some two years, the Massachusetts State Society United States Daughters of 1812 has secured the probably effectual assistance of Secretary LONG in obtaining from Congress permission to rebuild the old frigate Constitution, now tied up in the Charlestown Navy Yard. In a letter to the President of the society the Secretary has announced his approval of the plan and the forwarding by him of a communication to the House Committee on Naval Affairs recommending the passage of a bill under which the work proposed can be executed. The intention is to restore the famous ship to a serviceable condition in order that she may be used as a training ship or otherwise, as may be deemed best. The cost of the restoration is to be defrayed by popular subscription and the work done at the navy yard to the satisfaction of the department. The Secretary adds: "The Constitution as she exists to-day is a relic of the glory of the navy in its early days, and the fact that the memory of her prowess is still cherished among the people is a gratifying evidence of the patriotism that should be encouraged. The restoration of this old man-of-war for the Government by voluntary contributions from the people under the auspices of this society would be an object lesson of great value to the Nation."

—A special dispatch from Indianapolis published in The Chicago Tribune makes the remarkable statement that Capt. TAYLOR was deprived of the command of the battleship Indiana because, without any previous consultation with his superior officers, he gave to the State after which his vessel was named a cannon taken from the cruiser Maria Teresa. This act, if the author of the dispatch is well informed, was highly displeasing to the Navy Department, but it determined not to demand the return of the gun, and though it could not let the matter pass unnoticed, to leave unexplained the transfer of the Indiana's Captain to another field of duty. It is said that only one person—Gov. MOUNT'S private secretary—was informed of the department's annoyance over the disposition of the gun. It is hard to tell what to think about this story. Other officers, and Admiral DEWEY is one of them, have been guilty of the same offense, if it is an offense, without incurring any punishment, so far as known. That, of course, is not to say that they were not punished, but it is distinctly queer that the facts should have come out in this particular case alone. The chances are that the alleged facts are merely fancies, and possibly the desire was to give somebody else a sly dig over Capt. TAYLOR'S shoulder.

—There was reasonable excuse for the irritation displayed by the two gentlemen whose automobile licenses were suspended by the President of the Park Board, for the exercise of official power and judgment evidenced a lamentable lack of tact and a complete failure to appreciate that what really needed condemnation and correction was not so much the use which had been made of these particular licenses as the wording of them all and the method of issuing them. If Mr. CLAUSEN had started out with the proposition that nobody should be allowed to run an automobile until his ability to do so had been demonstrated to and guaranteed by a board of authorized and competent examiners, his position would have been safe from enlightened criticism and the whole problem could have been speedily and satisfactorily solved. It was not far from the height of absurdity, however, to grant permits to the owners instead of the operators of the new machines, with an unmentioned understanding on the one side that only automobiles of a certain sort should be admitted to the parks, and on the other side an expressed agreement to restrict the utilization of the permit to skilled and experienced persons. As between the several kinds of automobiles, Mr. CLAUSEN has not the faintest right to exclude any not pronounced unsafe by his experts, unless the nature and employment of the vehicles are such as would exclude them even if they were drawn by horses. The transfer of licenses from one person to another should be entirely forbidden. The certificates of Captains and mates are not passed about to suit the convenience of shipowners, but each would-be commander or assistant commander has to get and keep his own warrant of competency. It should be the same with automobile licenses if they are to serve their only legitimate purpose—the protection of the public.

—If the condition of the Government dry dock at Port Royal is as reported on apparently good authority, the need of a most searching investigation into the circumstances of its construction is obvious. The dock is said to have been a failure from the day of its completion, for though it was intended to receive the largest of our warships, only one of them, the Indiana, ever entered it, and she, having gone in on an exceptionally high tide, had to wait a month for another that would take her out. Since then the remarkable discovery has been made that, owing to the lack of safe anchorage, only vessels of light draught can approach the dock. This, though bad enough, is not the worst feature of the case. Even if vessels could get to the Port Royal dock, it is not in a state to receive them, for the effects of faulty design and construction are manifesting themselves in all directions in the shape of bulging walls and innumerable leaks. It is asserted that Admiral ENDICOTT, under whose supervision all the Government dry docks now are, has declared that this one is useless to the navy, since it would be reckless to attempt the docking of any first-class vessel in it. Yet the Port Royal dock is only a little over three years old, and it cost $500,000. Its building was authorized during the Harrison Administration, and, according to The Baltimore Sun, "one of the last acts of Secretary TRACY was to award a contract for its construction to a Washington firm whose experience in building operations was confined to houses." The ravages of the teredo have had something to do with the rapid deterioration of the dock, and this fact, naturally, is emphasized by those who maintain that timber docks should never be built in waters frequented by that most troublesome mollusc.

—So frank is the upper house of Congress in making public an itemized list of its petty expenditures for pocket knives, apollinaris water, and other similar articles of personal comfort and convenience, that it is evident the Senators think such expenditures of the products of taxation are all right. We are far from saying that they are all wrong, and yet the impression made on the mind of the average taxpayer by reading articles on the subject like the long one published in THE TIMES on Sunday is the reverse of pleasant, and if the Senators realized that fact they might deem it judicious to abandon a few of their undignified perquisites. The amount of money involved is insignificant, but for men holding an office so high it is almost as reprehensible to be ridiculous as to be wicked, and most assuredly these annual lists do excite laughter that is neither kindly nor respectful.

—Kentuckians are never at a loss when asked to tell why they regard their State with loving pride, and the reasons they give are undoubtedly good ones. That having been cordially admitted, it is certainly permissible to suggest that the sons of Kentucky might profitably distract their attention for a while from the glories of the Blue Grass region and turn it to the matters not at all glorious that have supplied one of our staff correspondents with topics for a notable series of letters. He went among the Kentucky mountains with no theories to confirm and no prejudices to justify. He has refuted several calumnies and toned down many exaggerations put in circulation by hostile or sensational writers, but still the state of affairs he describes is one distinctly disgraceful for those responsible for its continuance, and in that responsibility every Kentuckian shares to some extent. Black illiterates are bad enough, but white are infinitely worse. The statistics which our correspondent has given put all the inhabitants of Kentucky on the defensive. They are arraigned at the bar of public opinion, not for the appalling ignorance of an appreciable part of their number, but for long-continued neglect of that ignorance and their present refusal to adopt the simple means and spend the far from enormous amount of money necessary to put an end to a dangerous and shameful situation.

A TRIAL IN NEW AMSTERDAM.

Ye who have chafed at the law's delay
And the tedious trials of our later day—
Ye who have laughed at the sage pretense
That ponders ridiculous evidence—
Hear of a process, devoid of sham,
In the trim little town of New Amsterdam.

Burgher Jan Haecklus standeth here
Claiming his due for a barrel of beer
Sold—on the record this fact stands proven—
To crafty Jacobus Van Couwenhouven.
Cometh Jacobus, that wily man,
Boldly admitting the sale by Jan,
Naithless maintaining no pay is due
Seeing the beer is a worthless brew,
Muddy of color and flat and sour,
Drawn from the vat in an evil hour.
Further, he seeketh of startled Jan
Gold for redress of his inner man.
What did the worshipful schepens do?
Think you they summoned a learned crew
Laden with volumes, retorts, and vials,
Such as bewilder our modern trials?
Nothing of ptomaines or germs knew they;
Naught of the microbe that stalks by day.
Nothing they knew of the wondrous men
Skilled in the lore of the subtle pen.
Nothing they knew of our modern shame—
Perjury sanctioned by Science's name.
The highway to Justice was broad and clear—
"Court is adjourned to 'inspect' the beer."

Out to the open the jury wan
With doubtful Jacobus and hopeful Jan.
Nothing was heard for an hour or twain
But mellow gurgles, the soft refrain
Of long-drawn breathing and smack of zest
That tells of the spirit of man at rest,
While the jury, seated along a fence,
Absorbed and digested "the evidence."
Seemly the session, though all too short,
E'en for the litigants. Soon the Court
Gravely convened at its former stand,
Wiping its mouth on the back of its hand,
And spake with conviction, as jurors should:
"Verdict for plaintiff. The beer was good."

ARTHUR GUITERMAN.

ON BOER AND FILIPINO

Foes of the British Likened to Old New Englanders.

"OUR CAUSE ENGLAND'S CAUSE"

President Schurman and Dr. Francis E. Clark on the Great Conflicts of To-day.

Two wars—the Boer and the Philippine—were discussed at a largely attended regular monthly meeting of the Congregational Club at the Hotel St. Denis last evening by speakers who have had good opportunities to gain practical knowledge of the conditions surrounding those struggles. They were the Rev. Dr. Francis E. Clark, President of the Society of Christian Endeavor, who visited South Africa about two years ago, and President J. G. Schurman of Cornell University, and Chairman of the Philippine Commission. A dinner preceded the speaking, over which President Randall Spaulding of the club presided. Many ladies were among the listeners.

Dr. Clark said that the world's progress is indebted to Great Britain for the way in which she has exercised substantial justice in her colonies. Although she has much to blush for, he said, she is in advance of other nations in her treatment of her dependencies. The Boers, he said, look upon Africa as theirs as Americans look upon America as theirs, and in their own view are fighting for their native country and their firesides.

"It is because they stand together, understand each other, and love their President, that they are making a fight," Dr. Clark said.

"When I met President Krüger a short time ago," he continued, "he said to me: 'Are you one of the Yankees who always run to the Queen when they get into trouble?' This was after the Jameson raid, when some Americans in the Transvaal had put themselves under the protection of the British Consul. Krüger told me that he was glad to have any one come to the country who loved the Lord Jesus Christ."

Dr. Clark said that the word "Boer," ("farmer,") which stands for their race reveals not only their rustic side, but also their better side. They have the strength of men who live in the country, and they average six feet in height.

"I saw the Volksraad of the Orange Free State convene," he said, "and there were forty splendid specimens of men. Most of them were six feet two inches tall. I do not wonder that the British Generals have had trouble in conflict with such men as these." He added that they were not unlike the old New Englanders.

President Schurman said: "Whether England be right or wrong in taking up the gauntlet thrown down by Krüger, I will not undertake to say, but I do know that in the Orient where we have had trouble our cause has been England's cause. I do know that while observing neutrality she has facilitated our work in all ways possible."

President Schurman said that the British home Government had ordered British ships to go through the archipelago and that their Captains were instructed in the course of their voyage to meet the leading insurgents and point out to them the folly of further resistance to the United States. One of the ships that went on this mission, he said, was the Powerful, commanded by Capt. Lamberton, of whom much has been heard in South Africa.

One of the most beneficent results of the war with Spain, President Schurman said, was the bringing together of the British and American people.

"I sometimes say that I am not an imperialist," he continued, after the applause which greeted this sentiment subsided, "but I am not an anti-imperialist if by that is meant hauling down the flag where it has justly been placed."

Mr. Schurman said that Protestant missionaries were much needed in the Philippines, and he thought the Island of Mindanao would be a good place to send them first, as the Roman Catholics have not established themselves there as they have in Luzon. He said, though, that the churches must agree on one form of Protestant Christianity to offer to the natives, or, like the Chinese, they would be very apt to make the mistake that every different sect was an entirely separate and distinct religion. He said that it looks as though the fighting in the Philippines was pretty near an end.

"I think there are many of the Filipinos who are fighting who are animated by the idea of loyalty to independence. Aguinaldo himself, I think, is an honest man," he remarked.

President Schurman said that, from observations he had made in provinces where facts were obtainable, he concluded that not more than one-third of the money collected for the insurrection ever reached the Filipino Treasury.

"The white race means to the Filipino only the Spaniard," he said. "As Spain made promises and broke them, they will not believe promises made by any other white man. Their hatred of the white race has been a most important factor in energizing the insurrection."

He recommended that a civil government be established in each province as soon as it is subdued, thus letting the Filipinos see what a good thing it is. He said that he regretted that Americans had been allowed to establish saloons in the Philippines, for the Filipinos are a temperate people, and the sight of intoxicated Americans disgusts them. "Nothing has done so much to damage the reputation of the American people as this," he said.

Roads were the first necessity when the islands are restored to peace, Mr. Schurman declared, and after that schools should be established, for the Filipinos are anxious for education, but most important of all, he said, was a permanent civil service, with appointment and promotion founded upon merit and fitness, rather than one built up by ordinary political appointments.

The speaking closed with an address by the Rev. Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle Church of this city, upon "The Colonial Development of New England," and the hymn "America" was sung by all present before the assembly broke up.

FILIPINO GUERRILLAS TAKEN.

Major Smith Captures a Band in the North—Zambales Is Clear of Rebels—Operations in Panay.

MANILA, Dec. 18.—Gen. Lawton starts to-night from Manila, with cavalry under Capt. Lockett, and battalions of the Twenty-ninth and Twenty-seventh Infantry, under Lieut. Col. Sargent, to capture San Mateo, where Geronemo has three hundred insurgents.

Gen. Grant has nearly cleared Zambales Province. He discovered, hidden in Subig Bay, a steamer, the Don Francisco, of 180 tons, fully equipped and coaled. She is supposed to be the vessel Aguinaldo was keeping ready for his escape.

Capt. Layson of the Thirty-second Regiment has routed an insurgent band in Zambales Province, killing several officers.

Major Smith, with three companies of the Seventeenth, surrounded and captured another band of guerillas, which were terrorizing a large section north. The troops killed several of the band.

Gen. Hughes has captured insurgent strongholds at Capiz and Romblon, the navy co-operating. One man was killed and one wounded.

The insurgents in the Island of Panay are apparently suppressed.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—Gen. Otis to-day cabled the War Department as follows:

"Hughes reports from Romblon Island his arrival at Capiz, Northern Panay, 10th instant, driving out all Tagalos. Carpenter, with six companies, is occupying Northern Panay; two companies on Romblon Island. Hughes, with battalion Nineteenth Infantry, has gone to Cebu to police that island.

"Young, Northern Luzon, reports several minor engagements, with few casualties.

"Col. Hare, with small column, still in pursuit of insurgents' column which has the American prisoners; has passed through mountains, and is marching on Pamplona, short distance west of Aparri; navy co-operating.

"Seven hundred and thirty-one Spanish prisoners arrived last evening; 500 more expected to-day; 1,400 leave for Spain this afternoon."

NEWS OF AMERICAN PRISONERS.

Eleven of the Yorktown's Sailors Taken at Baler Are Still Alive.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—Encouraging news reached the Navy Department to-day from Admiral Watson at Manila, respecting the members of the crews of the Yorktown's boats which landed at Baler last Spring. The report gives the account of a sailor of the party who has made his way to Manila, and it shows that eleven of the original party of fifteen are still alive.

The man Rynders, who brings this news, was coxswain of the Yorktown, a native of Amsterdam, but a resident of San Francisco, where he shipped. The four dead men mentioned enlisted at the following points: Hygard, a Russian at Brooklyn; McDonald, of Carmel Valley, Cal., at Mare Island; Dillon, a native of Peru, Ind., at Mare Island, and Morrissey, a native of Columbus, Neb., also at Mare Island. Admiral Watson in his cablegram says:

"Manila, Dec. 17.

"Seaman Rynders of the Yorktown, captured at Baler, recaptured with Woodbury by cavalry at Bayonbong, has reported on board the flagship; both wounded when Gillmore was taken and left behind; he reports Nygard, McDonald, Dillon, and Morrissey killed. Rynders, Woodbury, and Venville wounded in foot, unable to travel. Doing well at Baler June 15. Expect Woodbury to-morrow; wounded not cared for; wounds received personal care. Woodbury and Rynders walked nearly to Manila."

PHILIPPINE CASUALTIES.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—Gen. Otis's latest casualty list is as follows:

Drowned.—Rio Grande, near Cabanatuan, Nov. 7, Twenty-second Infantry, C. J. Marks, Company F; at Tayug, Dec. 7, Twenty-fourth Infantry, John H. Johnstone, Corporal, Company H.

Dysentery.—Nov. 25, Thirty-fourth Infantry, Frank Wells, Company A; Dec. 9, Eleventh Cavalry, John Delaney, Sergeant, Company E; Dec. 13, Fourth Infantry, Otto Unger, Company M; Dec. 14, Twenty-first Infantry, David E. Buckingham, Company I.

Typhoid.—Nov. 27, Twenty-second Infantry, Charles Rainwater, Company C; Dec. 7, Twelfth Infantry, Dean S. Shearer, Company E.

Gunshot Wounds in Action.—Dec. 10, Thirty-third Infantry, Gilbert Baron, Company C; Dec. 16, Thirty-sixth Infantry, Hardy L. Lawrence, by comrade; Dec. 9, Third Cavalry, Charles Rist, Company F.

Suicide.—Dec. 15, Thirty-sixth Infantry, Mark A. Hallis, Corporal, Company E.

Meningitis.—Dec. 10, Thirty-seventh Infantry, Lewis L. Eastwood, Company C.

Variola.—Dec. 10, Third Cavalry, William C. McFarland, Company K.

Tuberculosis.—Dec. 5, Thirty-fifth Infantry, Homer Paup, Company A; Dec. 16, Twenty-second Infantry, Arthur Hollenbeck, Company E.

Colitis.—Dec. 7, Eighteenth Infantry, Thomas Smith, Company I.

Septicemia.—Dec. 15, Ninth Infantry, Henry Wolper, Sergeant, band.

PHILIPPINES IN THE SENATE.

Bacon and Tillman Offer Resolutions Providing that the Islands Be Given to the Filipinos.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—What the Senate may accomplish in the way of legislation for the Philippines during the present session is problematical, but that the question will be thoroughly discussed is indicated by the number of resolutions bearing upon it being introduced.

In opposition to the retention by the United States of the Philippine Islands, two resolutions were introduced to-day, one by Mr. Tillman (S. C.) and the other by Mr. Bacon (Ga.) While they differ in phraseology, their intent practically is the same—to yield the islands to a government to be established by the Filipinos themselves. Both Senators gave notice of their intention to address the Senate on their respective resolutions.

Senator Bacon's resolution provides:

First—That the United States has not waged the Spanish war for acquisition of territory.

Second—That in receiving the cession of the Philippines it is not the purpose of the United States to maintain permanent dominion over them or to incorporate the inhabitants thereof as citizens of the United States, or to hold such inhabitants as vassals; and the United States hereby disclaim any disposition or intention to exercise permanent sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said islands.

Third—That the United States, having overthrown opposition to the authority of the United States in the Philippines, the duty and obligation rest upon the United States to restore peace and maintain order throughout the islands, and to continue the maintenance of order until a stable government of the people shall have been established.

Fourth—It is the purpose of the United States, so soon as order shall have been established, to provide opportunity and prescribe methods for the formation of a Filipino Government to be thereafter independently exercised, the intention being to accord to the Filipinos the same degree of independence accorded the inhabitants of Cuba.

Fifth—That after such stable government is established the United States, reserving such harbors and coaling stations as may be needed, shall transfer to the Filipino Government all rights and territory secured in the Islands from Spain, and then leave the dominion and control of the islands to their people.

Sixth—That it is the purpose of the United States to secure the guarantee of the continued independence of the Filipino Government.

Mr. Tillman's resolution, after reciting some clauses of the Declaration of Independence, declares that under the Constitution the Federal Government has no power to rule over colonial dependencies, but is restricted in its operations to States as integral parts of the Union and to Territories intended for future States. It declares further that the expansion of our commerce has not been and cannot be dependent upon the adoption of a policy of imperialism, and winds up with the declaration that we are opposed to the retention of the Philippine Islands by the United States, and that it is our purpose to consent to the independence of the Filipinos as soon as a stable government shall be established by them, and toward the prompt establishment of such government we pledge our friendly assistance."

SHAFTER DISCHARGES KOPPITZ.

Man Who Told False Story of Logan's Death Loses His Place.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—Gen. Shafter, at San Francisco, to-day telegraphed the War Department as follows:

"In the matter of the stories concerning Major Logan's death, the matter has been carefully investigated, and as a result I have, according to direction of the Secretary of War, ordered Koppitz discharged. Also Second Steward England. Full report mailed to-day."

Koppitz was accused of circulating stories to the effect that Major Logan was shot by his own men in revenge for ill-treatment.

Building Material for Manila.

Fifty-nine bids for supplying hardware, building material, and paints for use in Manila were opened by Col. A. S. Kimball, Assistant Quartermaster General of the United States Army, yesterday. The transaction will be the largest of the kind since the American occupancy of Manila. All supplies must be delivered on board transports in Brooklyn not later than Dec. 28 by the successful bidder.

MAHMUD PASHA A FUGITIVE.

Sultan's Son-in-Law Takes Wife's Jewelry and Other People's Money.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 18.—The flight of the Sultan's son-in-law, Mahmud Pasha, Thursday, with his wife's jewels and all the money he could collect, has caused a great sensation here.

It has now been ascertained that he sailed for Marseilles on a steamer, and the Turkish Government has telegraphed to the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, M. Delcassé, asking for the arrest of Mahmud on his arrival at Marseilles and his return to Constantinople on the charge that he is implicated in a plot to assassinate the Sultan. This accusation, however, is generally discredited, and it is believed the refugee is the victim of an intrigue.

BRITISH EXHIBTS AT PARIS.

Abuse of the Queen Has So Far Caused Few Withdrawals.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—The Executive Committee of the Royal Commission for the Paris Exposition held a private meeting to-day at Marlborough House, the Prince of Wales presiding.

It is understood that, although there have been received a few notices of minor withdrawals of exhibits on account of the abuse of the Queen by certain French journals, it is not likely that serious results will follow, so far as the British exhibit is concerned.

American Banker's Will Probated.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—Justice Barnes, in the Probate Court to-day, pronounced in favor of the will, dated June 24, 1897, and two codicils of George Smith, the banker of Chicago, who died here Oct. 7 last. The plaintiffs were the executors. The defendant was Catherine Cooper, the testator's next of kin and heir-at-law, who insisted that the will and codicils should be formally proved.

A Cool Greeting for the Kaiser.

BERLIN, Dec. 18.—After a heated debate to-day the Berlin Municipal Council decided to send New Year's greetings to Emperor William, though these will be worded in much cooler terms than heretofore.

KINSLEY ADMITS A POINT

Poison Package Address Analyzed by Aid of Lettered Exhibits.

WHY HE ACCUSES MOLINEUX

Handwriting Expert's Rules and Mr. Weeks's Prodding — Prisoner's Wife and Mother in Court.

The sixth week of the trial of Roland B. Molineux for the murder a year ago of Katherine J. Adams by poison opened yesterday before Recorder Goff, in the Court of General Sessions, with William J. Kinsley, the chief handwriting expert of the prosecution, on the stand under cross-examination by Bartow S. Weeks, the senior counsel for the defense. Mr. Kinsley was on the stand all day, and Mr. Weeks's efforts were directed toward applying to indiscriminate writings of the defendant, as well as to the particular writing made at the request of the expert and the address on the poison package, the rules that Mr. Kinsley himself said were those which he had employed in leading up to the conclusion that Molineux was the writer of the poison package address.

It was tedious and dreary work, but Mr. Weeks, it was thought, made many points that will be clearer when he puts his own experts on the stand to attempt to controvert what Kinsley has testified to. The expectation that Mr. Kinsley would again go into the intricacies of technical description kept a greater part of the crowd away that usually besieges the courtroom doors. Those who did gain admission were soon tired out and beat a retreat.

WEARINESS IN THE COURT.

Toward the close of the afternoon session the scene was like anything rather than an important murder trial where a man is fighting for his life. Alongside of the Recorder was an easel bearing sheets of paper with occasional letters written thereon. Before this sat a young man who droned out his reasons for asserting that the prisoner was a poisoner. The hands of the witness beat the air from time to time in illustration of curves and slants, and he talked on and on, answering questions that were put to him by the counsel. In front of the witness and below him sat another man looking through a magnifying glass at a mass of papers pasted in a book as if he had never seen them before. The Judge closed his eyes from time to time. The jurors tried to follow the witness and all day long turned the leaves of their big albums as he referred to the numerous exhibits by their numbers. At the prisoner's table three men examined papers. Even the accused man seemed more bored than usual. The heat and bad air in the court room were insufferable.

When Mr. Kinsley was first put on the stand he said to Mr. Weeks that the rules applied for the determination of the authorship of disputed handwriting were slant, shape, shade, spacing, speed, movement, general proportion of letters and parts of letters, and alignment. When yesterday Mr. Weeks examined him at length on each one of these different particulars he asserted that some of them did not figure much in determining the authorship of the address on the poison package. Among these, Mr. Kinsley said, were spacing and speed. He made the admission that he had not given fifteen minutes' consideration to the matter of spacing in all the eleven months that he had been working on the case. He said, regarding the question of speed, that the address on the package was written more slowly, he thought, than the admitted writings of the defendant.

MR. WEEKS'S THRUST.

"Then you just put those particulars in for the purpose of carrying out the alliteration; is that it?" asked Mr. Weeks.

"Oh, no," said Mr. Kinsley.

"But you are fond of alliteration, are you not? It accounts for your statement some time ago that you were in the chicken business for 'fun, feathers, and flesh.' Is that right?"

Mr. Kinsley looked about for Mr. Osborne. Mr. Osborne was out of the courtroom at the time, and the question was unanswered.

A diversion was introduced at the morning session by the appearance in court for the first time since the taking of testimony began of Mrs. Molineux and Mrs. Roland B. Molineux, the mother and wife of the defendant. They came in before court convened with the General, and took seats at the counsel table. They were both quietly dressed in black.

When the name of the defendant was called both women turned half about and watched for his appearance. He saw them as he entered, and his step was accelerated. As he came within the rail to the point where his wife sat he placed both arms around her neck and kissed her. Then with his arms still around his wife he leaned over and kissed his mother. He next shook hands with his father and counsel, and the case at once proceeded. The women listened to the testimony of the expert during the morning, but did not return after the noon adjournment.

The cross-examination of Mr. Kinsley was promptly begun by Mr. Weeks.

"Now, Mr. Kinsley," he said, "I call your attention to People's Exhibit 'D,' 'E,' and 'G,' the letters signed 'H. Cornish,' and ask if in your opinion they were written rapidly."

"Quite rapidly."

"I call your attention to Exhibits 'B,' 'C,' 'J,' 'H,' and 'I,' the papers signed 'H. C. Barnet,' and ask if your opinion is that they were written rapidly."

"'B,' 'J,' 'H,' and 'I' were written rapidly. 'C' was written slower."

'ABOUT THE POISON PACKAGE.

"And about Exhibit 'A,' the poison package address, how was that written?"

"Slower—much slower."

"Very slow?"

"Yes."

"Labored, in fact?"

"Yes, labored."

"Were you not compelled to use the 'Barnet' and 'Cornish' letters in order to reach your conclusion that the defendant wrote the address on the poison package?"

"I was not compelled to, and did not do so altogether."

"But you used this as a basis?"

"Yes. I used them as a basis."

"Then I understand you to say that you used all your rules you specified to the other day for determining between disputed handwritings—that is, size of letters, parts, slant, shape, shade, spacing, speed, movement, general proportion of letters, and parts of letters, pen pressure, and general alignment?"

"Yes. I used all those rules to make a comparison between the 'Barnet' and 'Cornish' letters and the Exhibit 'A,' the poison package address."

"Now, then, Mr. Kinsley, I want you to take all these rules and apply to all the defendant's admitted writings and the writings done by him on request, and show us how you compared and applied them to Exhibit 'A,' and in what way the resemblance is noticeable."

This the witness did at great length and in response to many questions from Mr. Weeks he told how, in his opinion, the characteristics of some letters ran noticeably through all the exhibits.

DISSIMILARITY IN LETTERS.

In the course of Mr. Kinsley's demonstration Mr. Weeks brought out the statement that there was a noticeable dissimilarity running through all the handwritings in the size of the letters.

"Do you think the letters on the poison package address are unusually large?" said Mr. Weeks.

"Yes, they are larger than ordinarily."

"Could not any one have written them that size?"

"No, Sir."

"Do you mean to say there is any human being, twenty-one years old, who could not make those letters that size?"

"I do."

The examination of the witness then passed to the question of the size of parts of letters, in which, after a great many questions and answers, the witness admitted he would not put great reliance on the alleged rules governing inquiry and investigation on this point.

Mr. Weeks then questioned the witness as to his next rule, the slant, as applied to the letters in the handwritings in the series of the People's exhibits. The witness continued his demonstration on the blackboard. Mr. Weeks continually running in a crossfire of questions. Many of these Mr. Kinsley regarded as of an insinuating nature, and though he apparently endeavored to answer good humoredly he was not always successful.

The witness said that there was a very marked similarity all through the disputed and admitted writings in the general characteristics of the letter "h." This letter, the witness said, had more of the normally correct lines and curves than any one in all the writings in the exhibits.

Taking up the letter "r," he said the letter "r" in "Knickerbocker" and the word "forty" in the poison package address had the same general characteristics throughout the writings. This he gave as one of the reasons for his conclusion that the defendant wrote Exhibit "A."

RESEMBLANCES IN WRITINGS.

At the afternoon session Mr. Weeks questioned the witness further and at great length on the resemblance which he swore that he found between the admitted and the disputed writings. In answering these questions, the witness continued the analysis of letters under the rules which, he declared, governed his investigation. Finally Mr. Weeks said:

"Now, Mr. Kinsley, will you kindly enumerate all the abnormalities you find in the writings in Exhibit 'A' and the disputed writings?"

The witness then went into an exhaustive analysis of various letters in which he claimed abnormal shapes existed. When he had concluded, Mr. Weeks asked:

"Is it not a fact, Mr. Kinsley, that you build up a rule and then make the letters fit the rule?"

"No, Sir."

"Mr. Kinsley, are not the capital stems in Mr. Molineux's handwriting particularly prominent?"

"Yes."

"Now, are not disguises in handwriting attempted particularly in capital letters?"

"Yes."

"Mr. Kinsley, how does a person disguise his handwriting?"

"Well, it is my observation that any man who undertakes to disguise his handwriting generally succeeds only in exaggerating the prominent characteristics of his writing."

MR. KINSLEY'S ADMISSION.

The question of spacing was next taken up, and in answer to questions by Mr. Weeks the witness said he measured the spacing between words and letters by his eye only. He said he had not given the matter of measurement much time or thought.

"Do you mean to say," said Mr. Weeks, "that you have given this matter of spacing more time here to-day in this examination than you have during all the weeks and months you have studied this case?"

"I considered this one of the minor points," said the witness.

"But you have used it as one of the strongest?"

In response to a request of Mr. Weeks, the witness then at considerable length went into the technical ground of a conclusion as to disputed writings when based on the matter of speed.

Mr. Kinsley admitted that he had not been able to form a conclusion that Molineux wrote the poison address without the aid of the lettered exhibits, but he said that he could come to the same conclusion now without them.

"Is there anything in Exhibit A to indicate to you whether it was slowly written, or whether the person who wrote it was in the habit of writing slowly?" asked Mr. Weeks.

"There are some things that would indicate such a thing," replied the witness.

"Is there anything to indicate that the person who wrote Exhibit A is capable of writing with both the right and left hand?"

"Nothing."

"Is there anything to indicate a movement of both wrists and fingers in this same writing?"

"Yes, there is."

Regarding pen pressure, the witness said there were plainly to be seen evidences of this hand habit. All through the numerical exhibits the witness told of what he claimed to be the exact location of the pen pressure in the letter "C."

Mr. Kinsley finally reaffirmed, in answer to questions, that from application of the rules enumerated by him he had based his conclusions that the defendant wrote the address on the poison package and also the disputed Barnet and Cornish writings.

Court was then adjourned, at 5 o'clock, until 10:30 o'clock this morning.

GOFF ON LAWYER TYPES.

Manhattan Law Club Members Say He Characterized Men Now Notably in the Public Eye.

It was the prevailing and expressed opinion of the members of the Manhattan Law Club, which Recorder Goff addressed last night at the University Settlement, that when the Recorder spoke of two types of lawyers which were very common and often came before his eyes, he had in his mind images of Assistant District Attorney Osborne and Bartow S. Weeks as examples of these two types. Recorder Goff mentioned no names.

"I know one lawyer," said the Recorder, "of the widest education, intelligence, and experience who is so keen and sharp that he commands universal admiration. He is so sharp, however, and so keen about the small things that, while he receives the admiration of the jury, he lacks the capacity for inspiring belief in the sincerity of his cause. His very sharpness creates suspicion.

"There is another lawyer, however, who employs a different method. He pays little attention to detail, and frequently allows his opponent to gain small points of little consequence. His method impresses the jury with an idea that he wants to get at the truth. He ingratiates himself with the jury, gains their confidence, and frequently wins a case where a sharper man would lose."

The Recorder said that the law was no easy road to a fortune, and he urgently advised any of his hearers who contemplated going into it as an easy method of gaining wealth or fame, to embark in some other pursuit.

He warned his hearers against the debating society, which, he said, while productive of great benefit, often led young lawyers into grave mistakes. It made them contentious and pedantic, said he, and prone to refer to old, forgotten laws.

"Under our present political system," said the Recorder, "we send men to Albany who are wholly incapable of properly framing a statute.

"Another evil which I must warn you against is an undue reliance on eloquence. I know of no gift at a greater discount at the New York bar to-day than eloquence."

SAILORS SCARCE IN GERMANY.

Rise in Industry Attracts Men Away from the Sea.

BERLIN, Dec. 18.—With the rapid growth of the German Navy and the German marine there has been an increasing scarcity of native crews, especially in respect of trained young sailors. A few years ago Germany furnished a large portion of the crews of English vessels, but to-day the crews of German vessels are partly composed of foreigners. This change is due chiefly to the phenomenal rise of German industry, which has been accompanied by a uniform rise in wages paid for skilled labor, which has acted as an incentive to draw away from a seafaring life.

It is already foreseen that, with the doubling of the German Navy now contemplated, this difficulty will increase, and steps are being taken to meet it. At Bremen the North German Lloyd Company is organizing a cadet school to train young men for the company's service.

To-day representatives of all the large shipping firms met in Berlin and founded a society for furthering technical and practical training of sailors for the navy and the merchant marine. The Imperial Government will be strongly represented in the society, which will be formally organized on Jan. 12 under the name "Deutscher Schulschiff Verein."

Heated Motor Cabs for Berlin.

BERLIN, Dec. 18.—In the course of a fortnight a number of heated motor cabs will be running in the streets of Berlin. The fuel used will be carbon, electrically heated.

Franz Himmer, Singer, Dead.

BERLIN, Dec. 18.—Herr Franz Himmer, who was the first Wagnerian singer in the United States, where he appeared in 1862, has just died at Hildesheim.

Big Catch of Fish.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., Dec. 18.—William Boyce and two other fishermen captured several thousand tom-cods on Saturday night in the Hudson. This is the biggest catch ever made here. The fishermen caught them with nets, and brought up seventy or more fish at every haul. The fish are plentiful now, and thousands are being taken out nightly.

Clergyman Knocked Down by a Cab.

The Rev. George Blank of Columbus, Ohio, who is stopping at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, was knocked down by a cab in front of the hotel yesterday afternoon and slightly injured. He was in the street looking at the Dewey arch, and in trying to avoid an ambulance stepped in front of the cab, which was being driven too rapidly to avoid him.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

"I don't suppose there is a graduate of Yale during the past twenty years, at least," said one of them at the University Club yesterday, "but remembers old 'Pop' Smith, who has been regarded as a sort of mascot by the members of all the recent Yale athletic teams. It must have been fully a half century ago that he went to New Haven from England and established himself as boot and shoe maker in ordinary to the students. He was a favorite in a short time, as he made good footwear, and became the most ardent sort of a Yale partisan when athletics came into vogue and the contests between college teams began. It was a score of years ago that 'Pop' began to be a regular attendant at the practice grounds when the athletes were at work, and his flowing gray beard and hair were known to all the boys who took a hand in the sports. I noticed that the old man was not at the Princeton-Yale football game in the line with the substitutes, as had been his custom for years, and instituted inquiries. Last week I had occasion to go to New Haven, and then found that the old man had taken to his bed, from which, in all probability, he will never rise again. He has passed the fourscore-year mark by several years, and his years, if not his days, are numbered. There are a lot of Yale men who will be sorry to hear of the old man's breakdown, for there were none of the characters the students were thrown in contact with for whom they had a greater liking than for old 'Pop' Smith. What with 'Mory's' gone, 'Pop Smith' retired, and the fence and campus wiped out the old landmarks that the students of a generation ago loved seem to be 'getting it in the neck,' as the boys say. And what have they got in their place? A couple of lunch wagons that the students think it is funny to call 'kennel clubs' and 'dog wagons,' because they serve frankfurters there to the hungry students."

A new name for it cropped out yesterday, when a couple of young girls from the country rode up Broadway on a cable car. When it reached Madison Square, "Oh, look, Mamie," said the younger of the pair, "there's Mr. Dewey's arch."

"Railroad men have run up against a condition that is a puzzling one to them up in our district," remarked a New England railroad man at the Manhattan Hotel yesterday. "THE TIMES has told of the trouble we are having in both getting and handling coal in our section, and of the importation of coal to Boston from the Canadian provinces in consequence, where, in spite of the duty, it can be sold in competition with the American product. These troubles of the New England roads grew out of the fact that we ran too many of the cars to 'scrap' when the law was passed three years ago that all freight cars must be equipped with automatic brakes. We had until Jan. 1, 1900, to provide new cars, and never for a moment thought there would be any trouble in getting them. So we took our time in ordering them, of course, so as to make the best possible showing to the Directors. The present car famine is the result. The cars sent to scrap were burned after having been torn to pieces so that the metal could be got out for the junk piles, and many of them were not so completely worn out but that they could have been used very handily in these days. The wave of railroad prosperity set in while this work of destruction was in progress, and car builders were overrun with orders. As the Western roads felt this wave first, they got their orders in ahead of us, and we of New England were compelled to wait. Now all the roads in our section are caught short-handed. If the law prohibiting the use of cars not automatically equipped is enforced in January we shall be 100 per cent. worse off than we are at present, and it will be a physical impossibility to haul our freight."

Never since suspenders were introduced as an article for men's wear have such gorgeous things in their line been shown as are now displayed at the haberdashers' and fancy goods stores. They are of all shades and combinations of silks and satins, and gold and silver are used galore for the buckles and other metal parts of the braces. In some of them the semi-precious gems are used for ornamenting the buckles, and the cost reaches a very high limit—if there is a limit. Some of them are so gorgeous that the recipient of them as a Christmas present will be tempted to doff his waistcoat when he wears them, so that the general public can get a glimpse of his treasures. Those Chicago reformers who say that the suspender is going out of fashion probably had not seen the gorgeous things that the suspender makers have turned out for the Christmas trade when they began their agitation.

Members of the various Turn Vereinen here are already talking of and preparing for the annual meeting and exhibition of their National League, which is to be held in Philadelphia next June. Not only are delegates to be elected at the meetings next month, but the members are getting into trim for the gymnastic performances which will be a feature of the convention. Local Turners say that the showing made by picked athletes from this city will be the finest ever made at an annual meeting by New Yorkers. There will be more than a hundred competitors from this city for the various prizes in turning, tumbling, wrestling, and the other sports in which the Turners excel.

While Frank Work is not one of the active competitors in the racing that goes on over the Speedway every pleasant day, he has by no means abandoned his habit of driving on the road. His favorite team nowadays is a pair of black mares, who may not be as speedy as his famous team, Edward and Dick Swiveller, were in their prime, still it takes a very speedy pair to snow their heels to the mares ever which Mr. Work handles the lines with all his old-time skill. Of that team that once held the record to pole, Edward is still living in the stables of Mr. Work, now being twenty-seven years old. Dick Swiveller died a few weeks ago, at the age of twenty-nine. Up to the time of his death the old gelding was an especial pet of Mr. Work, who never neglected to take him a few lumps of sugar whenever he visited the stables. Although Mr. Work is now about eighty years old, he continues his custom of driving alone, seated in a three-quarter road wagon. He still believes that there is no pleasure for either himself or his horses if there is another party in his wagon with him.

There is a Columbus Avenue marketman who is a bit of an artist in a way. He always has a tempting array of good things to eat in his show windows, and has devised a novelty for his Christmas attraction. A brilliantly plumaged wood duck seems to be sitting on a nest in one corner of the window, her nest of a rich mottled brown. That nest is made of a lot of quail so arranged about the window that only the feathers of the breasts show. From this mass of quail breasts near the centre of the window rise two pheasants, with their gloriously brilliant plumage, the whole making a show that cannot but arrest the attention of the passer by and suggest an investment for a game dinner.

MR. ROSSITER ON TRANSFERS.

New System, He Says, Has Increased Bridge Traffic Tremendously.

President Clinton L. Rossiter of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company said yesterday that, as a result of the operation of the new system of transferring passengers from the suburban trolley cars to the elevated railroads, the traffic over the bridge railroad was now the heaviest in its history. Mr. Rossiter said that reports from Superintendent Barton of the bridge division showed that an average of about 190,000 passengers was now being carried over the bridge railroad daily, an increase of from 40,000 to 50,000 over the former management. The traffic yesterday, as a result of the fog on the river, broke all records and caused an unusual congestion at the bridge.

Speaking of the report that a number of ticket sellers at the Manhattan end of the bridge had been discharged, causing the public difficulty and annoyance in getting tickets during the rush hours, Mr. Rossiter said:

"We discharged just three men. We did this, as, on account of our issuing a uniform ticket for both the Kings County and Brooklyn Elevated Railroads, there was no necessity for keeping open separate ticket booths. During the rush hours, however, we now have as many ticket sellers at work as before. We will shortly issue coupon tickets which will be good on either of the elevated lines, as well as on the trolley cars. This, we believe will further simplify travel."

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

The first secular day of the week before Christmas was not one that brought many events. The third Musical Morning at the Astoria, the entertainment at Sherry's in aid of the Barnard Free Scholarship in the afternoon, with a few "at homes," were all the incidents of the daylight hours. The social interest of the day centred chiefly in the first night of the opera, the story of which will be found in another column. This event absorbed universal attention in the social world. Mrs. B. Aymar Sands gave a dinner for her daughter and a few of the latter's young friends, but there were no formal dinners of note, as the members of the gay world all wished to be early at the opera.

The evening was a gayer one for the women in society than for the men, for the Wall Street panic made its influence felt even in the abodes of wealth, and numbers of men who ordinarily would have been at the opera were either kept down town in their offices until a late hour or remained at their clubs to talk over the day's disasters and prepare for to-day's campaign, while there were numerous anxious faces in the boxes, seats, and corridors of the Opera House. A panic in the stock market on the eve of Christmastide is neither a timely nor a welcome event.

Campbell and a brother of the Princess Barberini, formerly Miss Jane Campbell, and who has been abroad for nearly three years past, arrived on Sunday on the Etruria, and among others who came on the same ship and whose names have not already been published were Mr. and Mrs. W. M. S. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Ripley, and Sir Henry Lynch-Blosse.

Mr. Eugene Higgins, who is reported as being at Nice, will sail from England soon after New Year's with two or three men friends on a cruise in the Mediterranean on Mr. Higgins's steam yacht Varuna, which has been laid up at Brightlingsea, England, since the finish of the yacht races.

There is great interest felt and expressed in club circles in the special meeting of the Union Club to be held to-morrow evening at the clubhouse, and at which it is now confidently thought the club will vote to move up town. The Site Committee, which consists of Messrs. Charles D. Dickey, Jr., Joseph Agostini, Franklin Bartlett, and John McLean Nash, has reported favorably on the purchase of the plot at the northeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street for $700,000, and this favorable report will go a long way toward strengthening the hands of the large element in the club which favors the organization moving up town. The club has always been desirous of securing, when it did move, a site on a northwest corner of the avenue, but such a site does not seem to have been procurable.

Attention has been called in this column to the curious excitement which the recent visit of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel to Philadelphia seems to have caused in the newspaper offices of that town, but which does not appear to have been existent in the social life of the Quaker City. The following paragraph from a last Sunday's Philadelphia journal transcends, however, all that has gone before: "The visit of the Drexels was all too brief, say those who were looking to some fine entertainments and high doings in their honor, but as Mrs. Drexel wore her diamond crown to the vaudeville one night it is hard to understand how any reasonable person could ask more." Referring to Mr. Drexel's lease of Claudon Park, Lord Onslow's place in Surrey, England, the news of which was published first in this column, the same writer says: "This announcement settles the question of Mr. Drexel's self-expatriation. He's only going to live in England for the next five years."

One of the most interesting and important items of social news of late from Philadelphia is that which intimates that some of the great capitalists in that city have purchased the controlling interest in the old Academy of Music and will tear down the building and erect on its site a really fine modern opera house. If this plan is carried out the Assembly balls, the oldest in the country with the exception of the St. Cecilia of Charleston, can at last be held in a place worthy of their age and distinction.

There will also be a few afternoon social diversions, among which are the receptions of Mrs. Frederick H. Betts for her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Wilys Rossiter Betts, who was Miss Ada Godfrey; of Mrs. Clarence Postley, 317 Fifth Avenue; the Misses Nevins, 20 Fifth Avenue; of Mrs. Arthur P. Now that American women are devoting themselves to the welfare of the English wounded in the Transvaal, it is interesting to notice that Mrs. Dudley Leigh, who was Miss Baby Beckwith of this city, is forming a society in London for the purpose of alleviating the sufferings of horses, which after a battle are often left to linger in their agonies for hours, instead of mercifully being put out of their pain. The Prince of Wales has announced his personal interest in the matter, and a small band may go out to the Transvaal for this purpose under the rules of the Geneva Convention.

The Duke of Marlborough has been at the Quorn Hunt, but it has been very dull there, and he and the Duchess will spend Christmas at Blenheim.

Any comment on the movements of London society at the present moment is unnecessary. The eyes of every one are turned to South Africa. So many English families already are in mourning that there is little prospect of even a Spring season. There are a few house parties over Christmas, but all the great county and hunt balls have been postponed. Mr. and Mrs. Henry White will entertain a few friends at their country seat, and the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire will also have a small family party. Among the Americans in London the Maine seems to be the chief topic of conversation, and all that correspondents write are details of the furnishing of the ship, the preparations for Mrs. Arthur Paget's tableaus, and the movements of a few Americans and English people who are now and then seen in the shopping district or dining or supping at the various hotels.

The Ogden Goelets are now victims of the newspaper picture mania. Illustrated periodicals possessing cuts supposed to be portraits of Mrs. Goelet and Miss Goelet make these an excuse for publishing every ten days some extraordinary rumor concerning their matrimonial intentions. Now it is Col. Douglas Dawson, the Military Attaché of the British Embassy, whom Mrs. Goelet is to marry, and ten days ago it was the Prince Henri d'Orleans. The only foundation for these rumors is that Mrs. Goelet has been in Paris, and has gone out a great deal in society, especially in an English-Parisian set which makes the Hotel Ritz its headquarters.

There seems to be very little going on in Paris except dinners and theatre parties and little suppers at different restaurants. The only entertainment of note last week was a musicale by Mme. Among the well-known Americans in Paris at present are Mrs. Griswold Gray, Mrs. George Ingraham, Miss Fannie Reed, and Miss Elizabeth Smith-Clift.

The rumors which from time to time have been given in this column relative to the dissensions between the American women who have been getting up the benefits for the hospital ship Maine in London seem to be growing and there is evident friction, according to letters and cable reports, between Mrs. Arthur Paget and Mrs. Ronalds. For a time things did not go very smoothly between Lady Randolph Churchill and Mrs. Blow, who is one of Mrs. Ronalds's friends and who has been a hard worker in the cause. But forces seemed to have combined and Lady Randolph Churchill has gone over, according to last accounts, to the Ronalds side. Mrs. Paget was not one of the guests in the private rooms reserved for the Duke and Duchess of Connaught at the flag raising. Mrs. Paget, however, is getting along famously with her theatricals and tableaus. She has the support of the Prince of Wales and royalty in these. Mr. Hebor Bishop's party at Houghton for the Prince was chaperoned by Mrs. Paget.

Mrs. Choate finds herself quite an important personage this year in England, as she is the only Ambassadress who is available at a state function. Mr. Bagby's third musical morning took place at the Astoria yesterday. David Bispham and Mme. Nevada sang. Mr. Bispham sang "Chansan Ancienne," arranged by Sanxay," and "Die Ehre Gottes," by Beethoven. He also delighted his audience with three old English songs—"The Bailiff's Daughter of Islington," "O, So Sweet Is She," "The Pretty Creature"—and lastly created great entnusiasm by singing "Danny Deever." Mme. Nevada sang the Bell song from "Lakmé," "Trawonschka," by Tschaikowski; the "Shadow Dance" from "Dinorah," by Meyerbeer, and for encores a bird song and "Listen to the Mocking Bird." Mr. Max Bendix played a violin concerto, and andante and finale, also an andante by Goddard and Mazurka Zarzicki. In the audience were Mrs. Oliver Harriman, Jr., Mrs. George De Forest, Mrs. Norton, Miss Callender, Miss De Forest, and Mrs. Untemeyer. The next musicale will take place on Thursday, Dec. 28. Mme. Emma Eames will be the soloist.

A "benefit" for the Barnard College scholarship took place at Sherry's yesterday afternoon. Miss Virginia Calhoun gave as a monologue "Sakuntala; or, the Fatal Ring." She took part in the London production of this play. Miss Calhoun brought the play to America, and at Mr. William Winter's suggestion it was turned into a monologue. "Sakuntala" has been described by Goethe and others as one of the chief masterpieces of Oriental literature after the great Sanskrit epics. It is a work of rare beauty. Musical selections from "Tristan und Isolde," "Walhalla," "Percival," and Goldmark's Sakuntala Overture, under the direction of Mr. Krehbiel, and Mr. Henry Holden Huss, accompanied the monologue. Sir Edwin Arnold has expressed much interest in this first presentation of "Sakuntala," to an American audience and has written Miss Calhoun a special letter on the subject. This was Miss Calhoun's first appearance before a New York audience and she was cordially welcomed. The entertainment was both unique and interesting. Miss Calhoun wore the East Indian costume. She has an agreeable voice and presence, and made a favorable impression, and Mr. Huss's accompaniments added greatly to the effect of the recitation.

Heckscher—Hart.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 18.—A very fashionable wedding took place at noon to-day at St. James's Church, when Miss Ethel Hill Hart, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Hart, became the bride of Ledyard Heckscher, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Heckscher. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Joseph N. Blanchard, rector of the church. The maid of honor was Miss Mary Lapseley Pile. The bridegroom was attended by his brother, Stevens Heckscher, and the following acted as ushers: Samuel Chew, Robert K. Cassatt, Lyman Tremain, J. Lardner Howell, Dr. Charles Norris of New York, F. S. Blake of Boston, and S. Lawton of New York.

The bride wore a gown of white satin, trimmed with old point lace, and with diamond ornaments, and carried a spray bouquet of lilies of the valley and orchids. The bridesmaids were Miss Bertha Lippincott, Miss Edith Peters, Miss Christina Penrose, Miss Marion Harding Curtin, Miss Amy Fenn-Gaskell Hall, Miss Juliet Biddle, Miss Anna Scott Buckley, and Miss Minnie Peters. They wore gowns of white crepe de chine with lace zouaves, large black hats with drooping black feathers, and all carried spray bouquets of lilies of the valley tied with white satin ribbon and streamers of tulle.

The church was beautifully decorated. The columns of each pew in the centre aisle were entwined with smilax, large bunches of azaleas being placed in vases at the top, from which hung streamers of white satin ribbon and tulle. The altar and chancel were decorated with palms and white rose trees. Following the ceremony a small breakfast was given at the home of the bride's parents, 330 South Twenty-first Street.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Malcolm Graham.

Malcolm Graham of the firm of Hartley & Graham of this city, died yesterday at his country residence, Seabright, N. J., after an illness of several months. In September he suffered an attack of typhoid fever which left him in a condition of such weakness that his death had been expected for several weeks. Mr. Graham was the son of John Lorimer Graham, in his time a prominent lawyer, and also a Postmaster of this city. He was born in 1832 and received his education principally under the guidance of private tutors. His business career commenced with a clerkship in the firm of Smith, Young & Co. Later he entered the firm of Schuyler, Hartley & Graham, which dealt in guns and ammunition, and which later became the firm of Hartley & Graham. Mr. Graham acquired a fortune. He was one of the owners and officers of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, the Remington Arms Company, and the Bridgeport Gun Implement Company. Mr. Graham was twice married, his first wife being a Miss Douglass, sister of Mrs. Robert G. Dun. The children resulting from this marriage are Malcolm, Jr., John L. and Mary Douglass Graham. His second wife was the widow of Benjamin M. Whitlock. Mr. Graham was a member of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, and at the time of Dr. Hall's resignation the oldest member of its Board of Trustees. At the time of the trouble in that church, antecedent to the death of Dr. Hall, Mr. Graham resigned from the Board of Trustees. Mr. Graham was a member of the Century, Metropolitan, Union, Union League, and New York Yacht Clubs, and other organizations. His tastes, however, were domestic, and much of his time outside of business hours was occupied with religious and philanthropic matters. He expended much money annually in the support of worthy charities.

Theodore C. Wallace.

Theodore C. Wallace died at his home, 36 Prospect Avenue, Montclair, N. J., yesterday, of kidney disease. He was fifty-seven years old. He was a member of the firm of Ogden & Wallace, iron workers, of Greenwich Street, Manhattan. He had been in the iron business for forty years. He had lived in Montclair since 1882. He was a member of the Veteran Association of the Seventy-first Regiment, New York. He leaves a wife, one son, and three daughters.

DIES TRYING TO HIDE IDENTITY.

J. S. Johnston of New York Refuses to Reveal His Friends' Names.

BUFFALO, Dec. 18.—J. S. Johnston, a photographer at 1,263 Broadway, New York, died at Niagara Falls yesterday of heart trouble. Mr. Johnston would not give his home address or the names of any friends in New York, even when he was told that his death was near.

John S. Johnston made a specialty of scenic photography. He photographed most of the United States warships during the war with Spain. He also photographed all of the international yacht races during the past ten years. It was while taking photographs of the Columbia-Shamrock races that he caught a severe cold, on account of which he left town last Tuesday for Niagara Falls, to benefit his health.

Very little of his history is known. His home was at 461 West One Hundred and Sixty-sixth Street, where he lived alone. It is said that he was a native of Ireland and about sixty years old; that he was married and had a grown daughter, but had been separated from his family for some time.

SAYS RECTOR ASSAULTED HIM.

Bill Collector Gets a Warrant for the Rev. Maguire's Arrest.

BAYONNE, N. J., Dec. 18.—Recorder Lazarus this morning issued a warrant for the arrest of the Rev. Horatio W. Maguire of Calvary Episcopal Church, Avenue C and West Forty-fifth Street, this city, who is accused of having assaulted Alexander Martin, a bill collector, living at 32 East Forty-first Street. Martin alleges that the Rev. Maguire entered his (Martin's) barn this morning and gave him a thrashing, declaring that he did so because Martin circulated the story that the rector was going to sue his wife for divorce. The Rev. and Mrs. Maguire do not live together.

Martin was not able to give a clear account of the real causes which led to the trouble, claiming that Mr. Maguire gave him no opportunity to explain the case or to deny the charge.

It has long been known that the Rev. and Mrs. Maguire have been living apart, but the reason for this is not known to any one but themselves.

The Rev. Mr. Maguire has the full support and confidence of a majority of his congregation, who firmly believe in him in every way.

Mr. Martin says the minister made a mistake in accusing him.

LOST A $275 WATCH.

Mrs. Francis Wilson Advertising for It for a Friend.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Dec. 18.—Mrs. Francis Wilson, wife of the actor, who is advertising in the New York papers for the return of a watch, said to-night the watch did not belong to her. It was the property of Miss Jennette Van Vleck, daughter of George Van Vleck of the Standard Oil Company.

Miss Van Vleck lost the watch on Nov. 11 in a store on Twenty-third Street. She missed it within five minutes, but it was not to be found when she returned to the place where she had been trying on a waist. The watch was valued at $275, and had been made to order in Switzerland. Mrs. Wilson said the reason her name was used was that Miss Van Vleck had returned to her home in Ohio.

Wealthy Farmer Killed by a Hog.

FLEMINGTON, N. J., Dec. 18.—John Van Doren, a wealthy farmer living near Whitehouse, is dead as a result of injuries received on Thursday, when he was attacked by a hog. Mr. Van Doren called to his dog, and the animal attacked the hog so fiercely that it left Mr. Van Doren and went for the dog. This enabled Mr. Van Doren to make his escape, or he would have been torn to death by the hog as he lay on the ground. Mr. Van Doren was seventy-eight years old.

Parole System in New Jersey.

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 18.—Samuel S. Moore, Keeper of the New Jersey State Prison, has made his annual report to Gov. Voorhees. Mr. Moore says experience for nearly nine years shows the parole system to work well. Only 4 paroles were revoked out of 300, and but 10 were returned to prison under conviction of other crimes.

NOT TO TRY M'GIFFERT

Presbytery's Strong Vote Against Hearing of Heresy Charge.

SAYS FAITH IS SAFEGUARDED

Ministers Warned to Distinguish Between Critical Theories and "The Certainties" of Their Belief.

Prof. Arthur C. McGiffert of the Union Theological Seminary, whose book, "A History of Christianity in the Apostolic Age," has caused so much trouble among ministers of the Presbyterian faith, will not be tried for heresy at this time. The long-disputed question as to whether the New York Presbytery, in accordance with the instructions from the General Assembly, should recommend a trial or whether the matter should be dropped was decided in favor of the latter proposition at the adjourned meeting of that body late yesterday afternoon on the adoption of resolutions prepared by the Rev. Dr. Henry Van Dyke and the Rev. Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston. These were adopted by a vote of 78 to 27.

The keynote of the resolutions, which admonish Prof. McGiffert and all other ministers investigating the higher criticism to be careful in the future, was that "a trial for heresy at this time would work grave injury to the interests of Christ's kingdom." Even in the face of the preponderance of the vote, one or two of the twenty-seven who want a heresy trial freely predicted that the General Assembly might yet order one for Prof. McGiffert.

Acting Moderator Wylie, however, opposed this view, saying that, so far as the Presbytery of New York is concerned, "the McGiffert matter is settled."

"And I do not believe," added Dr. Wylie, "that the General Assembly will take it up. It might have in other days, but the vote to-day is so strong in this body that we may consider the controversy ended."

The text of the resolutions is, in part, as follows:

TEXT OF THE RESOLUTIONS.

"Whereas, The General Assembly of 1899 referred 'the whole matter of the teachings of the Rev. A. C. McGiffert, D. D., to the Presbytery of New York for such disposition as in its judgment the peace of the Church and the purity of doctrine may require';

"Resolved, That the following minute be entered upon the records as the judgment of this Presbytery in the matter:

"I. It finds that the teachings of the book entitled 'A History of Christianity in the Apostolic Age,' by the Rev. A. C. McGiffert, are in certain points, according to the judgment of the majority of this Presbytery, erroneous and seriously out of harmony with the facts of Holy Scripture as they have been interpreted by the Presbyterian Church. These teachings, according to their author, have already been misunderstood; but this very liability to misunderstanding is one of the elements which make this Presbytery disapprove of them, as likely to lead to yet more serious error. The following examples are cited as statements especially open to such construction, viz.:

"(1) The apparent acceptance of the theory that the Sacrament of the Holy Communion was not instituted by Christ Himself upon the occasion of the Last Supper as a memorial feast.

"(2) The discrediting of the view so long accepted by the Church that the Third Gospel and the Book of the Acts were written by St. Luke, the companion of St. Paul, and the suggestion that they were more probably the work of some writer living in the latter part of the first century, a generation after the death of the Apostle.

"(3) The expression of uncertainty as to the authorship of the Fourth Gospel, and the assertion that the discourses in it attributed to our Lord, although 'they embody Christ's genuine teaching at least to some extent,' are the composition of the author.

"(4) The view that 'Jesus's emphasis of faith in or acceptance of himself, is throughout an emphasis, not of his personality, but of his message, and thus simply a reaffirmation of filial trust in, devotion to, and service of God as the essential and sufficient condition of an eternal life of blessedness in heaven.'

"II. This Presbytery recognizes the principle, frequently asserted by the Presbyterian Church, that a man is not necessarily to be held responsible for the general consequences which seem to others deducible from his views in certain particulars. The distinct and definite disapproval of the aforesaid teachings of Dr. McGiffert by this Presbytery does not preclude it from accepting as sincere and reassuring his public and personal avowal that he is 'in accordance with the faith of the Presbyterian Church and of Evangelical Christendom in all vital and essential matters'; that he reverently accepts the holy communion as one of the divinely appointed sacraments of the Christian Church; that he acknowledges the authority of the Holy Scriptures as the only infallible rule of faith and practice; that 'most emphatically' he believes in the Deity of Christ,' and that he is 'in hearty sympathy with the genuinely Pauline and Protestant doctrine of salvation through faith alone.'

PURITY OF DOCTRINE GUARDED.

"III. The Presbytery, moreover, is persuaded that the action of the last General Assembly, taken in connection with this action of the Presbytery of New York, is sufficient to guard the purity of the doctrine of the Church, so far as any teachings of the book in question may affect the same, inasmuch as in view of said action there can be no possible misunderstanding in any quarter as to the attitude of the Presbyterian Church toward teachings which it formally disavows.

"IV. In view of the foregoing considerations, and recognizing the manifest evils and misunderstandings that are wont to connect themselves with an attempt to establish by judicial process the limit of conscientious differences in the interpretation of the standards, the Presbytery, having herewith recorded its disapproval of the teachings referred to its judgment by the Assembly, believes that neither the interests of the peace of the Church nor the protection of the purity of its doctrine calls for any further action at the present time, but that a trial for heresy would work grave injury to the interests of Christ's Kingdom.

"V. Finally, the Presbytery counsels and enjoins all members of this body, and especially such as are engaged in critical studies, to refrain from setting forth the disavowed teachings as if indorsed by the Presbyterian Church, and, while exercising the liberty of scholarship, to be careful to distinguish between the theories of criticism and the certainties of faith, and also faithfully to maintain sound doctrine and loyally to study the peace of the Church."

A long discussion followed an amendment to these resolutions, introduced by the Rev. Dr. Bliss, which was inserted in the last paragraph, as follows: "To distinguish between the theories of criticism and the certainties of faith."

Dr. Van Dyke opposed this insertion, but it was adopted by a large vote, after which there was easy sailing for the Presbytery.

The resolutions, as they now stand, were in lieu of the report of the committee made at the November meeting.

Some discussion arose over amendments offered to the adopted resolutions by Prof. Brown, who proposed a substitution for the first paragraph, and following this a reaffirmation of fundamental belief and some other changes in the wording, but declaring against a trial for heresy. These amendments were defeated by a vote of 46 to 58.

Betrayed by Chattering Teeth.

ORANGE, N. J., Dec. 18.—Tony Panano was in a row in which James Creig was stabbed in the back yesterday, and when chased by the police chose a novel hiding place. There is a little brook that runs under the hat factory of E. V. Connett & Co., and Panano crawled under the building and stretched himself in the brook. The water ran along his body, causing his teeth to chatter. Policeman Kehoe, while searching about the factory, heard a noise underneath the building, and saw what he thought was a muskrat. It moved just then and he recognized Panano's head. When Panano emerged his teeth were chattering, and Kehoe recognized that as the noise he had heard.

Flowers Bloom in Connecticut.

Special to The New York Times.

GRENWICH, Conn., Dec. 18.—The season here is unusually mild, and instead of people shoveling snow they are picking wild flowers. Last week Henry Collinge saw dandelions blooming near E. C. Benedict's property, and to-day Joseph Brennan, while walking about R. M. Bruce's estate noticed some bluebells. Their color was somewhat faded, but he picked two dozen flowers.

SERVANT ROUTS BURGLAR.

Mary Coffey Protects Her Employer's Wife and Many Children and Becomes a Heroine.

Every housewife in Brooklyn might have envied Mrs. Paul Fritzmeyer the possession of Mary Coffey as a servant yesterday. Mary Coffey is declared to be a model in the discharge of her duties, and yesterday morning she proved that she is also able to fill the rôle of protector of her employer's home in the absence of the man of the house.

The Fritzmeyers live in Utica Avenue, near Carroll Street. Mr. Fritzmeyer, who was formerly in the lithographic business, is at present in Europe on a business trip. The family at home consists of Mrs. Fritzmeyer, her seven children, and Mary Coffey, who is twenty-four years old. The eldest of the children is fourteen years old.

Mrs. Fritzmeyer at 3 o'clock yesterday morning was awakened by the sound of footsteps on the floor of the front piazza. She fancied that she heard some one attempting to get in at a window in the side of the front hall, and she called to the servant. Her cries aroused the children as well as the servant, and the little Fritzmeyers flocked into their mother's room in affright. Mrs. Fritzmeyer was telling the servant that she feared burglars were trying to get into the house, when there was a sound of breaking glass. Clara, the eldest of the children, peering from a window, saw a man trying to force open a front window down stairs. At this everybody, with the exception of Mary Coffey, began screaming for the police.

The servant asked the man from the window what he was doing on the premises, but the burglar made her no answer, nor did he show any disposition to go away. The Fritzmeyer house is surrounded by grounds, and is somewhat removed from the other houses in the neighborhood. No policeman appeared in answer to the calls for help, and the family became terror-stricken. The servant, however, kept her self-possession.

"Where's your father's pistol?" she asked Clara, calmly.

Clara got the weapon from a bureau drawer, and the servant went to the window with it. She fired twice at the man below, and at the second shot he limped away. Before reaching the gate he fell on his face on the turf. He got up again, however, and went out through the gate, disappearing in the darkness.

After he had gone, the woman saw that he had left his coat and overcoat lying on the grass near the piazza. That made her suspect that he would return, and, revolver in hand, she sat by the window awaiting his coming. Until daylight the servant maintained her vigil, but the burglar did not come back. Soon after daylight she saw a neighbor passing in the street and called him in. He was told the story of the burglar and went at once to the Atlantic Avenue Police Station, where he reported the matter. Detectives were sent to the house to make an investigation. On the grass, besides the coat and overcoat mentioned, they found a black derby hat and a necktie, which the burglar had left behind him. The coat was spattered with blood and there were blood stains on the porch. Mary Coffey believes that she winged the burglar with one of the shots she fired at him. The police say that the man may have cut his hand in breaking the window pane, as the glass was also bloody. Nothing was found in the pockets of the man's garments to give a clue to his identity.

The servant was the heroine of the neighborhood yesterday.

DREAM AND BURGLAR'S SHOT.

East Orange Citizen Wounded in His Home Returns the Fire, but the Thief Escapes.

Special to The New York Times.

EAST ORANGE, N. J., Dec. 18.—Edgar F. Bailey of 11 Watson Avenue, a member of the firm of Bailey & Alling, Newark lumber dealers, was shot by a burglar in the early hours of this morning, when he surprised the burglar in his dining room, where the man was gathering up silver plate and other articles of value. Mr. Bailey fired twice at the burglar, but he made his escape, although he is believed to have been wounded. The bullet from the burglar's revolver lodged in Mr. Bailey's left thigh. The wound is not dangerous.

Mr. Bailey and his wife retired early last night. "Have you got your revolver, Edgar?" his young wife asked mischievously, and the husband replied affirmatively.

Several nights ago Mr. Bailey dreamed that he had found a burglar in his house, and had been shot by him. The dream impressed him so much that he purchased a revolver, sleeping with it under his pillow.

Mr. Bailey was awakened at midnight by hearing a slight creaking sound as if a window were being raised. Rousing his wife, the two listened intently, but hearing nothing further went to sleep again.

About two hours later Mr. Bailey was again awakened. He heard a noise. The sounds of some one moving about down stairs could be plainly heard. Putting on a few garments he took his revolver and descended the stairway to the hall below. Then he turned on the electric light. Carefully he searched the parlor, and, finding no trace of a burglar there, went out into the dining room. There he found that the buffet had been disturbed, and that pieces of silverware were missing from their places.

Mr. Bailey at this point heard a noise in the butler's pantry adjoining. Just as he opened the door leading to the kitchen the burglar appeared in the pantry doorway. Mr. Bailey raised his revolver and two shots rang out. Mr. Bailey and the burglar had fired almost simultaneously. Mr. Bailey saw the burglar clutch at his head and then became conscious of a stinging pain in his leg and fell to the floor. He succeeded, however, in raising himself from the floor in time to fire another shot at the fleeing burglar.

Mrs. Bailey hearing the shots had rushed down stairs, where she found her husband lying on the kitchen floor, faint from the loss of blood. She telephoned for Dr. Jesse D. Lippincott of 207 Summer Avenue, Newark, the family physician. Chief of Police Blaurock was also notified.

The cap which the burglar wore is the only clue the police have.

MAINE DEAD ARE DISINTERRED.

Work of Removing the Bodies from Havana Begun in Colon Cemetery.

HAVANA, Dec. 18.—This morning a gang of fourteen gravediggers, superintended by Chaplain Chidwick and Dr. Macour, began the exhumation in Colon Cemetery of the remains of the victims of the Maine. After clearing away the tops of the mounds from a majority of the graves, the men set to work at 7 o'clock to open up the first three, which contained twenty coffins. About 1 o'clock this afternoon the first coffin was raised. It contained the remains of Joseph Seery and was one of the few tin-lined coffins in which bodies were placed some days before the funeral took place. The next contained the remains of Harry Keys, and the third those of Eldon Nero.

As the coffins were raised to the grave side, the remains were immediately placed in tin-lined coffins prepared with lime and charcoal bottoms, after which more lime and charcoal were used, and then the coffins were carried a few yards away, where tinsmiths nailed down and hermetically sealed the lids, the names being distinctly painted thereon.

Chaplain Chidwick, using his chart, kept a strict account in each instance. Forty coffins, exhumed to-day, were carried to the cemetery chapel, about a hundred yards away. Two watchmen are on duty for the night.

The weather was favorable, a gentle breeze stirring the pines which stand around the graves. Twenty-five soldiers and about as many other spectators were present.

A most distressing, but unavoidable, feature was the necessity of removing the broken remnants of several coffins. Father Chidwick at first refused to allow this to be done in the only way it seemed practicable to remove them, but as the lime which was originally put in as a disinfectant had caked firmly, there was no alternative.

Died from Brooding Over the Maine.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Dec. 18.—James McClusky of Newburg died at the State Hospital here to-day from dementia and insanity, due to brooding over the destruction of the battleship Maine.

Counterfeiter Arrested in Havana.

HAVANA, Dec. 18.—Acting under orders from Collector Bliss, the Secret Service Police have arrested Louis Milan, who was found in possession of a dangerous counterfeiting outfit. Of late suspicion had been attracted to Milan, and it was discovered that he had excellently engraved plates for ten and twenty dollar bills, and bank paper enough to have flooded the island.

HAVANA, Dec. 18.—Señor Ponce de Leon, Keeper of the Archives of Cuba, died last evening. He was buried to-day.

GEN. EDGAR R. KELLOGG RETIRED.

Similar Action Will Be Taken with Brig. Gen. Carpenter.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—Brig. Gen. Edgar R. Kellogg, recently promoted from Colonel of the Sixth Infantry, has been placed on the retired list, on his own application, after thirty years' service. A similar course will be followed in the case of Brig. Gen. Gilbert S. Carpenter, recently promoted from Colonel of the Eighteenth Infantry, and now in active command of that regiment in the Philippines.

These retirements will cause two vacancies in the list of Brigadier Generals.

Movements of Naval Vessels.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—Admiral Schley's flagship Chicago sailed from Bahia for Buenos Ayres yesterday.

The Detroit has sailed from Colon for Key West.

The Dixie has started from League Island for Norfolk.

The Philadelphia and the Iowa have arrived at San Diego.

The Porter has arrived at Newport.

Sampson Now a G. A. R. Man.

PALMYRA, N. Y., Dec. 18.—Admiral Sampson was mustered into membership in the James A. Garfield Post, 193, Grand Army of the Republic, this evening. He promised to join the local post some time ago, sending in his application and the usual dollar bill. After the ceremony to-night there was a campfire, at which there was a large attendance of veterans. Admiral Sampson's dollar bill has been framed, and hangs conspicuously in the lodge room.

Reina Cristina to Stay at Norfolk.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—The Navy Department has concluded that it has not the means of converting into a receiving ship the captured Spanish cruiser Reina Cristina. Therefore the vessel will be allowed to remain at Norfolk, for the present at least.

The Kings County Fire Insurance Company has been admitted to Kentucky, and Clarence J. Hellman of Louisville and Runnells & Manchester of Cleveland, Ohio, have been appointed agents. The company recently reinsured the Brooklyn and Long Island business of the New Hampshire Fire Insurance Company.

George E. Wood, manager of the suburban business of the Spring Garden Insurance Company, which was reinsured Saturday in the Western Assurance Company of Toronto, has been appointed General Agent of the Scottish Union and National Insurance Company, and manager of the North American Insurance Company of Boston for the same territory.

The insurance on the property at 14 and 16 Ninth Avenue, which was considerably damaged by fire last Saturday night, was distributed as follows: On New Excelsor Dry Battery Company—North America, $1,500; Aetna, $1,000. On Cox Seed Company—Springfield, $1,250; Reliance, $1,000; Pennsylvania, $1,000; Westchester, $1,000. J. I. Le Bowski & Co. will adjust the loss.

The stockholders of the Manhattan Fire Insurance Company, at a special meeting to be held to-day, will vote on a proposition to increase the capital stock of the company from $250,000 to $500,000. President Daniel Myers yesterday said that the increase will be authorized. The company has just reinsured the business of the Globe and Rutgers Fire Insurance Company and the Insurance Company of the State of New York.

The insurance on the property of Doniger Brothers, at 179 Wooster Street, which was damaged by fire Sunday, was distributed as follows: Atlanta Home, $4,500; Lancashire, $2,750; Liverpool and London and Globe, 2,500; National of Hartford, $1,500; Reading, $1,000; Imperial, $1,000; Continental, $1,000; Commerce, $1,000; Williamsburg City, $1,000; Firemen's of Baltimore, $1,000; Caledonian, $1,000; Hanover, $1,000; Insurance Company of North America, $750; London Assurance, $750; Palatine, $500. J. I. Le Bowski & Co. will adjust the loss.

The insurance on the property of M. & M. Cummings & Co., at 62 and 64 Marshall Street, Newark, which was much damaged by fire Saturday night, was distributed as follows: On building—Lion, $5,000; National of Hartford, $2,500; Agricultural, $1,250; Commercial Union, $1,250. On stock—Erie, $3,000; North German, $2,000; Aachen and Munich, $1,000; National of Hartford, $1,000. On machinery—German-American, $1,666.67; Western of Toronto, $1,666.67; Westchester, $1,666.66. The property of Weigand & Doerzbacker was insured as follows: Caledonian, $1,000; Commercial Union, $1,000; Niagara, $1,000. H. A. Landgraff & Co. will adjust the loss.

Lincoln Fire Receivership Praised.

Louis L. Coudert, the referee appointed to settle the accounts of Andrew Freedman, receiver of the Lincoln Fire Insurance Company of New York, filed his report with the County Clerk yesterday. The report says that Mr. Freedman collected $180,000 in cash and other property in excess of $50,000, paid every claim against the corporation, and returned to the stockholders over $100,000, which was over half the par value of their stock. Mr. Coudert praises the work of the receiver and his counsel, Messrs. Stern and Rushmore, saying in conclusion: "I attribute this successful winding up of so large a corporation to the assiduity, learning, and skill of the receiver's counsel and to the painstaking care of the receiver and his assistants."

MICHIGAN RAILWAY TAXATION.

Legislature Meets to Vote on the Question of Placing Railways on Same Basis as Other Property.

LANSING, Mich., Dec. 18.—The Michigan Legislature met in special session at noon to-day in response to the call of Gov. Pingree. The Governor's object is to secure the passage of a joint resolution providing for submission to the people at the general election next November of an amendment to the State laws placing railways upon the same basis for taxation as all other property. At present the railroads pay specific taxes upon gross earnings.

Interest in the special session is increased by the fact that the Grand Jury, which has returned indictments alleging bribery against some of the legislators, is still in session here. Speaker Adams of the House of Representatives, who is one of the indicted men, presided to-day, as usual.

The message of Gov. Pingree was read this afternoon before the joint session of the two houses. It urged the passage of the proposed joint resolution, so as to permit the enactment of laws by the next Legislature for equal taxation of all property at its true cash value. The Governor said in the course of his message: "The inequality of our system of taxation is so great that immediate steps should be taken to remedy it." The question involved had, he added, for years been exhaustively discussed, and was therefore no longer properly open for debate, but called for energetic action.

Gov. Pingree referred to the history of the Atkinson Railway Taxation act, which was declared unconstitutional by the State Supreme Court, and recalled the fact that a joint resolution of similar purport to the one now proposed passed the House in the regular session, but died in the Senate committee. He called particular attention to a clause in the 1898 platform of Michigan Republicans, which commended the Pingree administration for its efforts in the direction of equal taxation, and favored immediate legislation for taxing railroads, telegraph, telephone, and express companies' properties upon their true value. The message urged that the matter be considered only as a matter of principle.

The Governor submitted a table showing the comparative value of railway property in the States which most nearly resemble Michigan in population and development, and stating the value at which Michigan's railway property would be assessed if worth as much a mile as such property in the other States mentioned, viz.: Indiana, Minnesota, Ohio, and Wisconsin. His deduction from this was that Michigan railway property, based on such values, would pay several times the amount of revenue to the State which it does now. The Governor concluded by saying: "It is well for you to remember that there are only three States in the Union in which railroads pay specific taxes upon the gross earnings."

Mr. Cleveland Better.

PRINCETON, N. J., Dec. 18.—Ex-President Grover Cleveland, who is confined to his house with a slight attack of rheumatism, is rapidly recovering from the illness. Dr. James H. Wikoff, Mr. Cleveland's physician, said to-day his patient will probably be able to go out again within a day or two.

HOW FAITH CURISTS HEAL.

A Coroner in Investigating a Death Hears that Teaching the Commandments Will Cure Disease.

ROME, N. Y., Dec. 18.—The Coroner's inquest in the case of Mrs. M. M. Davis, who died under Christian Science treatment, was continued this evening. Dr. W. B. Reid, who made the autopsy, said he examined for strychnine or arsenic, but found none in the stomach. There was a strong alcoholic odor present.

Mrs. Jennie Watson, a friend of Mrs. Davis, said she called to see the deceased a week before her death. Miss Moore, the Christian Science healer, and others were present. They refused to let Mrs. Watson see Mrs. Davis. Witness said several times on other visits, when she had seen Mrs. Davis, she expressed the opinion that she would need a doctor.

Miss Moore testified that she had been a Christian Scientist eleven years. She has a certificate from the Massachusetts Metaphysical College. The District Attorney endeavored to get her to describe the course of study there. She said it would take ten days or two weeks to describe it. The Attorney said there was plenty of time, and her reply was that she could not give a description. During her examination she said:

"I do nothing physically. I do not do the same thing with every patient. The mentality of the patients is not the same. The healer does not touch the patient. The understanding of the Commandments is necessary to do healing."

Among other things, in reply to the District Attorney, she said she would treat patients by the truth—by the God power. She also said Christian Science teaches that a physician should not be called in with a healer. Asked what sickness was, the witness said it was the opposite of health; she would treat sickness by changing the mentality. She would tell patients they were children of God and teach them the Commandments. In that way she could heal any disease. She could heal a broken leg if the patient fully understood God. She had had some instruction in physiology and had read medical books.

The Coroner's verdict was that Mrs. Davis came to her death from paralysis of the heart, caused by valvular disease of the heart and that her death was greatly hastened by the treatment accorded her by the persons having her in charge. The verdict recommends that the District Attorney present the case to the Grand Jury.

THE DEPARTMENT STORE LAW.

Illinois Supreme Court Holds That the Chicago Ordinance Is Unconstitutional.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 18.—A special dispatch from Springfield says that the Illinois Supreme Court to-day held void the anti-department store ordinance of Chicago.

The Court sustained the judgment of the Criminal Court of Cook County in appeal from a Chicago Justice of the Peace, who imposed fines of $25 and costs on Charles Netcher, proprietor of the Boston Store, for selling certain kinds of merchandise where certain other kinds of merchandise were sold. The Court declares the ordinances are "an attempted interference by the city with rights guaranteed to the defendant by the Constitution of the United States and of the State of Illinois." The Court says:

"When an owner is deprived of the right to expose for sale and sell his property he is deprived of property within the meaning of the Constitution, by taking away one of the incidents of ownership."

It is declared to be plain that the ordinance is a "mere attempt to deny a property right to a particular class in the community where all other members of the community are left to enjoy it. It is immaterial whether such a denial is in a statute or in an ordinance passed by virtue of a statute. It is equally invalid in either case."

C. A. VOGELER COMPANY FAILS.

Christian Devries, Its Head, Resigned Presidency of National Bank of Baltimore Last Week.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 18.—The Charles A. Vogeler Company, druggists, consisting of Christian Devries and his wife, formerly Mrs. Minnie A. Vogeler, have made a general assignment for the benefit of their creditors. Henry S. Dulaney, who has been for many years the general manager of the concern, is the assignee. The attorneys for the company say that they are not able to give any statement of the character and extent of its business or of the extent of its assets and liabilities at the present time.

Mr. Devries resigned the Presidency of the National Bank of Baltimore last week. The Vogeler Company was founded in 1874 under the name of A. Vogeler & Sons. The principal product of the concern was St. Jacob's Oil, a liniment which was advertised very extensively, the company being one of the pioneers in "landscape advertising."

The Directors of the National Bank of Baltimore held a special meeting at 10 o'clock this morning, at which the resignation of Mr. Devries, who has been President of the institution for more than twenty years, was accepted. The question of selecting a successor was deferred until to-morrow morning, when another meeting of the board will be held. After the meeting the statement was made that the indebtedness to the bank of the Charles A. Vogeler Company amounts to $18,000. This is not secured. The bank also holds some of Mr. Devries's personal paper, the latter being secured.

FOR SANTOS COFFEE LIGHTERS.

New Berth Provided for Them—The Lassell Released.

A new anchorage for lighters loaded with Santos coffee has been decided upon. Hereafter these lighters, in charge of Dr. Doty's officers, will be anchored just inside of the Erie Basin breakwater, for the eight days' exposure required.

Several lighters now in the Narrows loaded with water-soaked coffee from the Lassell will be emptied at sea, as the coffee has been declared worthless by the underwriters.

The Lassell herself was released from Quarantine yesterday afternoon, and will go to the Erie Basin dry dock for survey. The stevedores who handled the coffee cargoes of the J. W. Taylor and the Lassell left Hoffman Island yesterday.

FINDS FOR COMMISSION MEN.

Illinois Court Decides They Need Not Procure a License.

Special to The New York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Dec. 18.—The Supreme Court declared invalid the act to license commission merchants. The cases were appealed from the Criminal Court of Cook County, where judgments were obtained against Edward C. Reichwald, William G. Reichwald, and Charles W. Losser, indicted for receiving and soliciting certain prints without securing a license.

In its decision the court holds the first two sections of the act valid—that the inspections complained of are clearly within the power of the State.

The sections following are declared invalid. In these provisions the Board of Inspectors is created to license and prescribe regulations for commission merchants, and its duties are set out. This board is composed of one member each from various private organizations, which the law provides shall become incorporated.

To Teach Care of Animals.

A new line of work was established by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in the illustrated lecture delivered last night by Prof. E. A. A. Grange at the American Horse Exchange. The society proposes to educate citizens in all the knowledge appertaining to domestic animals and the sort of treatment needed to bring out their good points and guarantee freedom from disease and pain when possible. Prof. Grange organized the bacteriological department at the Michigan Agricultural College, at Lansing, Mich., and during the latter part of his fifteen years' connection with the college occupied the chair of Veterinary Science. The lecture last night was the first of a series and was illustrated with slides and by the aid of several horses from the stables of the Exchange. It was devoted to the exposition of the "points" of a horse and how to judge them.

SLOOP TO SAIL FOR CUBA.

Voyage Will Take Three Weeks—A Crew of Three.

The sloop Ida Belle Lowndes, owned by Capt. Thomas Madge of Greenwich, Conn., will leave to-day for Cuba with her owner and a crew of two men. The sail will be both for pleasure and business, including a cruise for some weeks off the south coast of the island.

The sloop is 44 feet over all, 15 feet beam, 5½ feet draft, and with a tonnage of six and one-half. There is a comfortable cabin, containing three berths and many conveniences. In addition to the sails, there is one screw, worked by an auxiliary gasoline engine. The first stop will be Philadelphia. It is expected that the boat will be three weeks in reaching Cuba.

LEHIGH TERMINAL RUMOR.

Report of the Black Tom Island Passenger Project Unconfirmed.

A rumor to the effect that the Lehigh Valley Railroad would establish an independent passenger terminus on the Black Tom Island property recently purchased by the Standard Oil Company gained wide circulation among railroad men in Jersey City yesterday. The oil tanks of the Eagle Oil Company, a branch of the Standard Oil Company, are now being removed from their place near Caven's Point, it was said, to make way for the Lehigh Valley tracks to Black Tom.

Lehigh Valley officials at Jersey City disclaimed yesterday knowledge of such a project. One, however, admitted that the company, which now uses the Pennsylvania terminals, would establish a depot at some point on the bay shore as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made.

Eugene Delano of this city, a Director of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, while tacitly admitting last night that a movement was on foot to obtain independent terminal facilities, said he was not in a position either to affirm or deny authoritatively the reported selection of the Black Tom site.

MOUNTED POLICEMEN TOO BIG.

All Who Weigh Over 200 Pounds to be Transferred to Other Duty.

Chief Devery has ordered the mounted policemen in all the boroughs of the city to appear at Police Headquarters to be weighed. There are about 300 men in the mounted squad.

The Chief says that some of the men are too heavy to ride horses. He says that there are men on the mounted force who weigh 220 and 225 pounds, which is too much weight for a horse to carry around several hours a day. The men who weigh over 200 pounds will be taken off such duty.

Tenderloin Station to be Improved.

The Tenderloin police station will undergo remodeling, at a cost of $12,000. Plans were submitted yesterday to the Department of Buildings for a new staircase from the basement to the third story of the station house, and for the addition of a story to the prison building in the rear. The second, third, and fourth floors of the latter building will be devoted to dormitories for the patrolmen, while the basement and first floor will be taken up by cells. Improved lighting and ventilation will also be provided.

THE KIELY WILL CONTEST.

Father Hefy Appointed Administrator of Brooklyn Priest's Estate.

In the contest of the will of the late Rev. Father John M. Kiely of the Church of the Transfiguration, Brooklyn, Cornelius O'Connor, as special guardian of Maurice and Christina Kirby, children of Father Kiely's nephew, John F. Kirby, a week ago, before Surrogate Abbott, charged the Rev. Jeremiah J. Hefy, the executor named in Father Kiely's will, with using undue influence.

On motion of counsel for Father Hefy to set aside the order appointing Mr. O'Connor as special guardian on the ground that there was no proof that John F. Kirby, the father of the children, who has been missing since 1897, was dead, Surrogate Abbott decided that Mr. O'Connor must show the existence of an alleged prior will, which he claims exists, and in which it is alleged the two children contesting were beneficiaries.

Lawyer F. A. McCloskey yesterday applied for the appointment of Father Hefy as temporary administrator of the estate, and Mr. O'Connor opposed the application. The Surrogate said that he saw no reason why Father Hefy should not be appointed administrator, and later in the day the appointment was made.

PROTECTION OF FISH.

League of Salt-Water Fishermen Meets—Central Road Accused.

The Protective League of Salt Water Fishermen held its regular monthly meeting last night at 106 West Thirty-first Street. The object of the league is to secure the enforcement of laws for the protection of salt-water fish and to keep nets out of the waters of rivers and bays.

A legal committee, headed by Municipal Court Justice George F. Roesch, has in preparation a bill making illegal the use of nets within a circle of a fifty-mile radius from the City Hall which will be presented this Winter to the Legislature. The bill also provides for the appointment of fifteen Fish Wardens to carry out its provisions.

One of the practices which the league opposes is that of the menhaden fishermen, who go down in the lower bay and, with purse nets 500 or 600 fathoms long, take in thousands of tons of "bunkers" and all sorts of fish, many of which are edible. These are indiscriminately taken away to be ground up for fertilizers, thus destroying immense quantities of food fishes.

President Theodore Biedinger of the league says that complaints have been received from citizens regarding the destruction of fish caused by the deposit of refuse from the gas works by the Central Road. He says that the refuse is taken in tank cars from the gas works at Mott Haven in the middle of the night up along the Hudson River at the Highlands, and there by means of pipes forced down into the bottom of the river, killing many fish. Mr. Biedinger says that when refuse is put into the river in that manner the law which forbids the pouring of any refuse detrimental to fish in the waters is violated.

Teachers to Take Part Pay.

At a meeting of the public school teachers of Staten Island held last night it was decided to accept from Controller Coler 94 per cent. of over-due salaries on account, this in no way to affect their claims upon the city for the balance they claim as due them under a new schedule. It is reported that the Controller will accept the proposition.

PRIZEFIGHTING ATTACKED.

Methodist Preachers Adopt Strong Resolutions—Petition the Governor and the Daily Press.

The Methodist preachers' meeting at 150 Fifth Avenue yesterday adopted vigorous resolutions against prizefighting. The subject was discussed some weeks ago, and yesterday the resolutions submitted by a special committee were adopted unanimously without debate. The committee was composed of the Rev. Drs. William H. Lawrence, John Rhey Thompson, and J. W. Campbell. The resolutions were as follows:

"The committee appointed to prepare a minute on the Jeffries-Sharkey prize fight would respectfully report:

"First. That brutal exhibition was a crime against the peace and dignity of the Nation. A bare recital of the facts connected with this event is sufficient to bring the blush of shame to all lovers of law and order. Amid the crowd of criminals of every age and character which such a scene attracted were representatives of our commercial and professional life, Aldermen of the city, and members of the Legislature. Four hundred policemen, detailed to keep order, showed that New York had taken this public shame under its protection. With every base appetite of depraved human nature stimulated and gratified, that motley crowd returned to certain portions of Manhattan and Brooklyn to make the night hideous with a saturnalia of vice and crime.

"Second. Some of the great New York dailies used all modern appliances to further debauch the public mind. Before their offices was displayed the spectacle of immense crowds standing in the rain to read on the bulletin boards the progress of the fight. Midnight extras ministered to the public excitement. Page after page of sickening details the next day entered homes of piety and peace. Like Egyptian frogs, these reports penetrated every place with their loathsomeness. The morning trains carried reports written in the most seductive style to every part of the land.

"Third. The latest triumphs of modern invention have been seized by greedy purveyors of amusement to repeat daily before promiscuous audiences scenes of that prize fight.

"Fourth. We deplore as the saddest fact of all that this condition has been made possible by the enactment of the Horton law at the last session of the New York Legislature. Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we hereby petition his Excellency Theodore Roosevelt, Governor of the State of New York, and the members of the Legislature soon to assemble at Albany, to expunge from the statute books that law enacted simply in the interests of the criminal classes of this country. The teachers of morality and lawabiding citizens have some rights which their legislators are bound to respect. Society cannot afford to have law and justice poisoned at its foundation.

"Resolved, That we request the newspapers to sacrifice the pecuniary advantage of ministering to a depraved public taste and to join the teachers of pure morality and the lovers of peace and concord in upholding things that are 'pure, lovely, and of good report.'"

The New York Methodist Education Society, which assists ministerial students, held its annual meeting after the preachers' meeting. These officers were elected: President—The Rev. Dr. James M. King; Vice President—The Rev. Dr. Robert Crook; Secretary and Treasurer—The Rev. Dr. W. H. Mickle.

AUSTRIANS PLAY CHESS.

Experts of the Empire Paired for a Tournament Yesterday.

VIENNA, Dec. 18.—The National Masters' Chess Congress opened in this city at the Vienna Chess Club yesterday evening, when twelve experts residing in the Austro-Hungarian countries declared their readiness to play in the tournament, for which the late Baron Kolisch had provided the prizes in his will. Albin, Alapin, Marco, Schlechter, Schwarz, Wolf, and Zinkl of Vienna, Popiel of Bothnia, Korto of Prague, Brody and Maroczy of Budapest, and Prock were the men ready for the fray.

When the ballot was taken in order to ascertain the pairing for all the games to be played in the tournament, it was found that Wolf had drawn 1, Zinkl 2, Schlechter 3, and Popiel, Prock, Brody, Maroczy, Schwarz, Korto, Alapin, Albin, and Marco drew the remaining numbers in the order named. Hence the schedule for the eleven rounds of the contest was made up as follows:

First Round—Zinkl vs. Albin; Schlechter vs. Alapin; Popiel vs. Korto; Prock vs. Schwarz; Brody vs. Maroczy, and Wolf vs. Marco.

Eleventh and Final Round—Maroczy vs. Prock; Schwarz vs. Popiel; Korto vs. Schlechter; Alapin vs. Zinkl; Albin vs. Wolf, and Brody vs. Marco.

The results of the first round, which was played to-night, were as follows: Zinkl and Albin divided honors, as did Schlechter and Alapin. Popiel defeated Korto. The game between Prock and Schwarz was adjourned in favor of Schwarz. Maroczy and Brody and Wolf and Marco drew.

The second round will be contested to-morrow.

BASEBALL FUTURE IN DOUBT.

Ewing May Manage the New Yorks If Disputes Can Be Settled.

William "Buck" Ewing has not been signed to manage the New York baseball team next season, as has been reported. Should the National League reduce its circuit to the satisfaction of Andrew Freedman, President of the New York Club, and all other subjects of controversy, such as syndicate baseball, be eliminated, Ewing, who was once the most popular player that ever wore a New York uniform and under whose captaincy the local team became known as the "Giants," will handle the New York team next season. Mr. Freedman said yesterday that he considered Ewing a capable manager, and would be pleased to have him manage the team.

It is the general opinion of the club owners who are still in New York that the attempt to reduce the league circuit to eight clubs will meet with all sorts of obstacles. The committee that was appointed to confer with the Baltimore, Washington, Cleveland, and Louisville Clubs and have these clubs drop from the circuit has not yet made much progress. A meeting was held on Sunday, at which all four clubs were represented. Cleveland wanted $40,000 to give up its franchise. The Washington Club demanded $46,000 and Baltimore $70,000. The Louisville Club did not name any price.

The Brooklyn Club has threatened to carry its case into court sooner than pay the five-hundred-dollar fine imposed for its action in the Wrigler case. If it does, there may ensue a genuine baseball war. It has been pointed out that if a club will not abide by the rulings of the league, there is no reason why the ball players should not refuse to be governed by the clubs and break their contracts.

Time in the Wrigley case. If it does, there

The meeting of the Eastern League, which was to have been held at the Fifth Avenue Hotel to-day, has been postponed until the National League has reached a settlement as to the make-up of its circuit for next season.

Intercollegiate Golf Conference.

PRINCETON, N. J., Dec. 18.—Chester Griswold, President of the Intercollegiate Golf Association, to-day announced that a meeting of the association will be held at the Murray Hill Hotel, New York, next Thursday night to make amendments to the rules and to transact other business. Among important changes in the rules proposed are whether the English method of scoring will be adopted in place of the present system, and whether the date of the annual tournament shall be changed from the Fall to the Spring. The application of the University of Pennsylvania for membership will also be considered.

World's Record for Jump on Skates.

Frank McDaniels of Minneapolis, Minn., holder of the world's record for a running long jump on skates, 21 feet 7 inches, established a world's record for a standing high jump on skates on Saturday night at Loring Park, Minneapolis, Minn., clearing the bar at 6 feet 4 inches. The measurements were made from heel to toe of the skates, which had a blade seventeen inches long.

Ten Hurt in Indiana Collision.

NEW ALBANY, Ind., Dec. 18.—An Air Line Road engine and a Pennsylvania suburban train running between Louisville and New Albany collided at Vincennes and Main Streets in this city to-day. The Pennsylvania train consisted of an engine and two coaches. It had 150 passengers. One of the coaches was struck in the centre and thrown over on one side, knocked off the trucks, and badly demolished. Ten passengers were injured, but with possibly one exception it is not thought any of the injured will die.

COTTON.—Almost unprecedented excitement prevailed on the Cotton Exchange. Seldom, if ever, in the history of the institution has the volume of business been so great as that transacted between 10 o'clock and 3 o'clock to-day. No official record of the number of bales sold has been kept, the system of officially reporting the amount involved in transactions having been abandoned a long time ago. It is semi-officially estimated, however, that the amount of cotton traded in at New York to-day came near to reaching the million bale mark, the heaviest previous total having been something like 800,000 bales. There was a perfect avalanche of selling orders, until the executive capacity of the commission houses was tested as never before. The opening was easy at a decline of 4 to 6 points. Southern spot markets were officially reported by wire as follows: New Orleans, easy, ⅛c lower, at 7 3-16c; Savannah, quiet and easy, 1-16c lower, at 7⅞c; Charleston, 7¼c; Wilmington, 7¼c; Norfolk, 7 5-16c; Baltimore, 1-16c lower, at 7⅞c; Augusta, 1-16@⅛c decline, now 7 3-16@7¼c; Memphis, 7¾c; St. Louis, 7¼c.

BREADSTUFFS.—WHEAT—Contrary to the experience of other speculative markets on Monday, grain experienced an advance and activity such as has not been witnessed before in many a day. Wheat alone advanced 2 cents a bushel, closing near the top point of the day, and 1⅜@1¾ cents higher than Saturday. From opening to close, with one exception, the upward tendency continued, the only period of reaction being at midday, when visible supply figures appeared with an increase of 801,000 bushels. While the latter had been expected, because of an addition to the regular stocks at Chicago through a private house being made public, it nevertheless inspired more or less selling, which broke May wheat from 76 cents to 75½ cents. This was more than made up during the afternoon, however, May reaching 76½ cents at the best point, against 74⅜ cents on Saturday's curb. The advance was attended by a good deal of covering for local and other account, with moderate volume of investment buying for outsiders. Quotations of cash wheat, free on board afloat basis, were as follows: No. 2 red 76c; No. 1 hard, Duluth, 82½c, spot; No. 1 Northern, Duluth, 80¾c, nominal; No. 1 hard, Manitoba, 81½c, spot; No. 1 hard, Manitoba, 82c, early January; No. 1 hard, Duluth, 82c; early January; No. 1 hard, New York, 81½c, spot; No. 1 Northern, New York, 80¼c, spot; No. 2 Northern, Duluth, 78½c, to arrive

COFFEE.—During the forenoon the coffee market was a little steadier, some positions advancing 5 points, following an advance of ¼f at Havre, ½@¾ pfennig at Hamburg, 325 reis at Rio, and 100 reis at Santos, with receipts at Rio and Santos still small, being only 22,000 bags. Business was not active; sales on the call were confined to 500 bags; up to 12 M., 2,500 bags, and for the entire season 12,250 bags. In the afternoon the market was a trace easier, in sympathy with the extraordinary break in the price of cotton and the unsettled condition of affairs in Wall Street. There was no particular pressure, however, and prices changed but little. The market at the close was steady in tone, with prices finally 5 points higher to 5 points lower.

NOW IS THE TIME
To purchase the Cheap Railroad stocks. Don't think the market is going to the dogs. I was a Bear when they were selling from 10 to 20 points higher. When I started advertising in The Herald, Nov. 26, to sell sugar for 110, and in fact the whole market, my clients have made fortunes. Write for advice to somebody that knows what they are talking about. I am the same one that advertises in Herald 107. ORIGINAL TRUTHFINDER, Times Up-town.

This company has secured all the rights and patents of Oliver L. Gardner for the manufacture of Artificial Lumber.

This material has been manufactured for a period of twelve years and is gradually taking the place of lumber for inside decorations on railroad cars and all classes of buildings.

It can be used as a substitute for plaster and laths in buildings, as it is sound proof and temperature proof, and it IS FIRE PROOF.

The economies and savings in the construction of cars and buildings, and many other things heretofore made of wood and plaster, made possible by the use of this lumber, are very large.

It is manufactured from a WASTE material of which there is an unlimited supply, and consequently capable of earning large dividends, owing to its low cost of construction.

The engineers of the Guaranty Development Company, 10 Wall Street, New York, have made a full examination of the nature of this artificial lumber and the uses to which it can be put, and they report that its value as a commercial article is practically unlimited. A detailed report of this examination can be seen at their office.

PATENTS

New patents have recently been obtained, and applied for, covering a process for the manufacture of this material in the United States, Canada, Mexico, Great Britain, France, Germany, Belgium, Austria, Russia, and Australia; which gives to this company an ABSOLUTE MONOPOLY.

Careful, conscientious work, which has cost over FOUR HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS in cash, has been put into this enterprise to develop it up to its present finished condition so that, after long usage, it now stands as a recognized commercial commodity by architects, builders, decorators, and manufacturers of railroad cars, steamships, and boxes, and there is positively no question regarding its practicability and future position as a substitute for wood in all its uses and decorations for inside work. The company now has orders which guarantee a continuous demand larger than it is possible to fill with the present plant.

The gradual decrease in the supply of wood in the world, and the increase in the demand for same, particularly the grade that is used for inside decorations, is a well-known fact, and consequently this substitute for wood is much more valuable as a commercial commodity, under these conditions, than any new commercial proposition has been for the past twenty years.

PLANTS

A plant is now erected (fully equipped with machinery) at Barberton, Ohio, for the manufacturing of this material.

A plant will be erected within the vicinity of New York, one in the West, and one in Canada, each with an earning capacity equal to the one at Barberton, Ohio.

FINANCIAL

THE EARNINGS FROM THE BARBERTON PLANT WILL, AFTER PAYING SIX PER CENT. INTEREST ON THE $1,500,000 OF PREFERRED STOCK ISSUED, PAY FIVE PER CENT. ON THE COMMON STOCK ISSUED; AND AFTER THE ERECTION OF THE PLANT IN THE VICINITY OF NEW YORK CITY, IN THE WEST, AND IN CANADA, THE EARNING CAPACITY OF THIS COMPANY WILL BE $1,800,000 ANNUALLY.

Applications are now in hand from prominent European bankers to organize corporations to manufacture and sell this artificial lumber in England, France, and Germany, and as the United States company own and control the foreign patents, a large percentage of the profits of the foreign companies will revert to the Artificial Lumber Company of America.

The books for subscriptions will open on the 18th day of December, and will close on the 23d day of December, 1899, at 3 P. M.

Twenty-five (25⅛) per cent. of subscriptions are payable on application and the balance on allotment on or before January 8th, 1900.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company.
OFFICE OF THE TREASURER.
GENERAL OFFICE, PHILADELPHIA, DECEMBER 13, 1899.

To the Stockholders of the Pennsylvania R. R. Co.

At a meeting of the board held this day the following resolution was, on motion, adopted:

"Resolved, That, for the purpose of providing a portion of the necessary capital for construction and equipment expenditures, during the year 1900, on the main and leased lines and branches, and for other corporate purposes, the privilege be given to stockholders of the Company to subscribe, at par, between December 27th, 1899, and January 20th, 1900, ON WHICH LATTER DATE THE PRIVILEGE WILL CEASE, for ten per cent. of their respective holdings as they stand registered at three o'clock P. M. on December 26, 1899. The privilege of subscribing may be sold by any stockholder. Payment in full for such stock may be made after January 14th, and must be made not later than January 20th, 1900. Receipts, which will also be negotiable, will be given bearing interest at the rate of five per cent. from January 20th to May 1st, 1900, (being 70 cents per share,) at which time said receipts will cease to bear interest.

"Certificates for the new Stock will be delivered on and after May 1st, 1900, on surrender of the receipts. Receipts covering fractions of shares will be converted into Stock when presented in multiples of Fifty dollars. All receipts must be presented for conversion before January 1st, 1901, on and after which date they will only be redeemed, at par, in cash."

Blank forms, giving the particulars of the payments as above recited, forms of subscription, and allotment of privilege, etc., can be obtained on application at this office after December 20, 1899.

Stockholders desiring their new Certificates for full shares by May 1st must deposit their receipts with the Transfer Department of the Company on or before March 15th, 1900. For all receipts for full shares deposited after that date, and for all fractional receipts, Certificates will be ready for delivery as soon after May 1st as practicable, of which notice will be given.

Electric Vehicle Company,
100 BROADWAY,
New York, December 15th, 1899.
At a meeting of the Board of Directors held this day, a dividend of TWO PER banks, or in some other way devise money market ease.

It is disclosed that plans for immediate action by the Clearing House Association do not have uniform approval. There are big banks whose managers regard Wall Street's agitation of yesterday as merely a matter of hysteria sure quickly to cure itself. In the view of such bankers "assistance" from the Clearing House would at this juncture be provocative of additional evil.

In excited consideration of developments right at hand Wall Street gave small heed yesterday to the disclosure of disturbing conditions at Boston and elsewhere. Some uncomfortable suggestions came over from Philadelphia, and there were ill-natured rumors from Chicago, but on the Stock Exchange only what was bad coming to pass here got attention. The Boston situation has not become satisfactory. Large amounts of money—quoted as high as $6,000,000—have been sent over from New York within the past few days to help out interests there overloaded with copper stocks bought in recent skyrocketty manipulation, and other remittances are likely to be necessary. For the first time the rumor circulators were busy after the close of yesterday's business with hints of trouble at Pittsburg. Old Baltimore stories were in live revival, too. None of these out-of-town suggestions were, however, to any extent influential on the Stock Exchange yesterday. Whatever the devastation, it was traceable to developments and suspicions touching New York only.

The New York Clearing House Committee was in late session last night. Results were not officially announced.

Tests of the market at the opening of the Stock Exchange to-day may be exceptionally important. London quotations available ahead of business here may have influence. At yesterday's opening a drop of 1 per cent. in British consols was an effective factor.

Conservative authorities—and they can be quoted after a careful canvass in high places throughout Wall Street—are almost uniformly of the opinion that Wall Street has already felt the worst of its "panic." They point out that liquidation has been drastic to the furthest degree, that weak holders of stocks have been eliminated from the market, that purchases on a large scale have been made for the strongest interests in the financial world. The Wall Street situation is, they agree, abnormal, unwarranted by business conditions—directly contrary to every operating commercial and industrial element. Thus, they insist, a turn must come in Wall Street's situation, and they think it should come quickly.

Good times ought to mean something. Wall Street is the country's only calamity spot. The New York Stock Exchange has become one big bargain counter—for people who can afford to buy and afford to hold.

ORDERING NEW EQUIPMENT.

Railway stocks may decline on the stock market, but the earnings of the roads continue to increase and their business to expand. An evidence of this is the news from Anniston, Ala., that in order to accommodate its increasing traffic, and the better to be provided for the future, the Southern Railway Company has ordered 1,000 gondola cars, in addition to the other new equipment recently ordered.

FLOWER STOCKS WEAK.

It was commented on in the Street yesterday that not since Gov. Flower's death have the prices of the so-called Flower stocks been as low as they were yesterday. Brooklyn Rapid Transit, which held up under the earlier depressions, could not stand the continuous hammering, and reached the lowest price of the year.

SUGAR TRUST DIRECTOR.

The only new news in the sugar trade yesterday was the announcement that Arthur Donner had been elected a Director of the American Sugar Refining Company in the place of F. O. Matthiessen, resigned.

SUB-TREASURY OPERATIONS.

There was but one single bond offering of $50 at the Sub-Treasury yesterday. January coupons were presented on which $9,000 was paid, while in the neighborhood of a million dollars in registered interest was paid out.

SINKING FUND PURCHASE.

It is announced that the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company will receive proposals until Dec. 20 to sell to the sinking fund $150,000 Oregon Railway and Navigation Company first mortgage 6 per cent. bonds.

WALL STREET TOPICS.

Decline in British consols in the London market attributed to belief that a new war loan will be made.

Order placed by the Southern Railway for 1,000 new gondola cars.

Foreclosure sale of the Western Maryland Railroad to take place early in January.

New York Central to enter into active competition with the trolleys at points where the local traffic will justify such a course.

Increase of $36,626 in Lake Erie and Western's surplus for October, making an increase of $185,343 since Jun. 1.

According to Cincinnati advices the reorganization of the National Starch Company is progressing under the plan of the syndicate which has purchased control of the company.

Deficit of $2,028,725 under legal requirements shown by weekly statement outside banks, an increase of $774,650 as compared with the previous week.

MONEY AND EXCHANGE.

Money on call was 6@186 per cent., closing at 8 per cent.

Time money, 6 per cent. for all periods. Mercantile paper, 6 per cent. for sixty to ninety days' indorsements, 6 per cent. for choice four to six months' single names, and 7@8 per cent. for others.

Clearing House statement: Exchanges, $120,005,655; balances, $7,745,859; Sub-Treasury debit balance, $1,805,842.

Money on call in London, 4½@5 per cent. Rate of discount in open market, 6½ per cent. for both short and three months' bills.

Foreign exchange easier. Nominal rates were $4.82¼ for sixty days and $4.85¼ for demand. Rates for actual business closed as follows: Sixty days, $4.81⅝@$4.81¾; demand, $4.87⅛@$4.87¾; cables, $4.88⅛@$4.88⅝. Commercial bills, $4.86¾@$4.82.

Continental exchange was quoted as follows: Francs, 5.23⅜ and 5.19⅜; reichsmarks, 94@94 1-16 and 95; guilders at 39 15-16 and 40⅛@40 5-16.

Exchange on New York at domestic centres: Boston—33 1-32@25c discount. Chicago—40c premium. New Orleans—Commercial, $1.25 discount; bank, par. San Francisco—Sight, 12½c premium; telegraphic, 15c premium. Charleston—Buying, par; selling, ⅛c premium. Savannah—Buying, ⅛c off; selling, par. St. Louis—10c discount. Cincinnati—Between banks, par@15 and 25c discount; over counter, 50c premium.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—Business on the Stock Exchange here to-day opened with a better tone on the readiness of the Government to face the situation. But thoughts of a prolonged war, the dearness of money, political considerations, and the probability of a war loan, added to the liquidation of bankrupt stocks, led to a depression which sent consols below par for the first time since 1894. They were quoted at 99⅞ at 2 o'clock. All the departments had shared in the fall. Americans were flat. Canadian Pacifics were 2 below Saturday. Kafirs were weak: Rand Mines, 32⅛; Chartereds, 3; Gold Fields, 6⅛; De Beers, 24¼; Spanish 4s, 64¾; Rio Tintos, 43⅝.

The market closed with general gloom and almost a semi-panic. The realisation of the cost of the war in men and money again brought the monetary position into prominence. It was seen that the funds required necessarily must be much larger than originally estimated, hence a rush to unload. Under the lead of consols, after the close, street prices were, in many cases, still lower.

An investigation into the causes of the semi-panic on the Stock Exchange fails to reveal any substantial reason, apart from the timidity and nervousness of the public in the face of the reverses in South Africa. The depreciation was not accompanied by any extensive liquidation, such as would occur in New York with a similar fall in prices. The changes were mostly in jobbers' quotations, and did not attend the large transactions.

The Daily Mail's financial expert says: "It is no secret that some of the big firms were helped over at the last settlement, and there was much forced selling of stock yesterday, with the evident idea of not maintaining a false position any longer. The last account of the year will bring a crop of failures. This is inevitable; but it is unwise to place reliance on absurd inventions or to consider that, because there are natural financial difficulties arising out of dear money and lower prices, there must necessarily be a real financial crisis. The rash speculator has much to tremble about, but the real stockholder has only to sit tight, and the storm will blow over."

It is asserted in responsible quarters that the leading financial houses have taken precautions that will meet the difficulties of the next settlement. The bank rate, it is thought, hardly will go higher this year, and, although the situation is grave, one good victory for the British arms would probably do much to dispel the disturbance.

There was one small failure.

Closing prices were as follows: Consols for money, 99; consols for the account, 99¼; Canadian, 91½; Erie, 11⅞; Erie first preferred, 34½; Illinois Central, 113½; Union Pacific preferred 74½; St. Paul, 120; New York Central, 130½; Pennsylvania, 66½; Reading, 9¼; Northern Pacific preferred, 75; Atchison, 19⅝; Louisville, 79; Grand Trunk, 6⅜; Anaconda, ⅛.

Bar silver quiet at 27 5-16d per ounce.

Money, 4½@5 per cent. Rate of discount in the open market for short and three months' bills, 6¼ per cent.

Spanish 4s, 64¾.

The amount of bullion taken into the Bank of England on balance to-day was £19,000. Bar gold, 77s. 9d. Gold premiums: Buenos Ayres, 129.30; Madrid, 26.67; Lisbon, 44; Rome, 6.92½.

In Continental Circles.

PARIS, Dec. 18.—Business on the Bourse to-day opened fairly steady, but large selling orders from London caused a sharp relapse in all departments, which was increased by rumors of fresh British defeats in South Africa, the reported surrender of Kimberley, and apprehension of dearer money. The market closed in a very excited condition and with an extremely unfavorable tone. Three per cent rentes, 99 francs 75 centimes for the account. Exchange on London, 25 francs 35 centimes for checks. Spanish fours closed at 66.

BERLIN, Dec. 18.—Prices opened fairly steady on the Boerse to-day. There was great weakness later, however, in consequence of large sales in response to advices from Western Bourses. Canadian Pacifics were flat, Spanish fours declined. Exchange on London 20 marks 53 1-8 pfennigs for checks.

The weekly statement of the Imperial Bank of Germany shows the following changes: Cash in hand increased 20,880,000 marks; treasury notes decreased 360,000 marks; other securities increased 33,660,000 marks; notes in circulation increased 6,700,000 marks.

FRANKFORT, Dec. 18.—On the Boerse to-day prices were quiet and weak, but there was no pressure for sales.

MADRID, Dec. 18.—Gold was quoted to-day at 26.80.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 18.—Boston had an active day and stocks generally were heavy. United States Oil rose from 20 to 26, later 23, and Central Oil fell 1, to 17¾. Montana lost 10, to 260. Other mining shares yielded sharply in the final dealings, but there was no wild outpouring as in New York, and the market held comparatively well.

All of the brokers' sheets were cleared through the Stock Exchange Clearing House without a sign of trouble, the banks having upheld the brokers splendidly. Prices generally yielded from 1 to 3 in the leading Boston stocks. Butte fell 6, to 42, and there were a few other exceptionally heavy losses, but as a whole the market showed a strong power under it to uphold it against anything like a bad fall such as was seen in Wall Street. There seems to be perfect harmony between banks and brokers here, and there is much reason for satisfaction in the Boston markets record to-day.

The Clearing House Association issued a statement this morning to the effect that up to the present time the Globe and the Broadway banks were the only two that had appealed to the association for assistance, and that in all probability the affairs of the Broadway Bank would be wound up in due course. The Clearing House Association voted to-day to vest authority in its regular committee to issue certificates at their discretion. This will enable the committee to act, in case a financial institution should need assistance, without calling a meeting of the association.

It seemed to be the general opinion that the crisis has been passed and that if no further heavy business failures are announced conditions will soon be in their normal state.

A Director of the Broadway Bank said this evening that the officials to-day realized on the $200,000 warehouse receipts deposited by the J. P. Squire Company to secure some of their paper. The same officer said it was probable the Controller of the Currency would issue an order to-morrow permitting the reopening of the bank. It is understood on State Street that assistance has been pledged by strong New York or Western people—presumably the Armours—which will put the bank in a position to resume business, at the latest, before the week is ended.

Call loans, 6@7; time money, 5@6; commercial paper, 5@6%. At the Clearing House balances between the banks loaned at 6 per cent.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Practically every stock on the list declined yesterday. Conditions that prevailed in the Stock Exchange were chiefly responsible for the conditions in the outside market, which were little else than a reflex of those prevailing in the more important market. It might almost be said that for many securities there was absolutely no market. Especially during the early part of the day was it difficult to find bids for stock, and where lots were pressed for sale and sold at the market some very low figures were recorded. It was fortunate that the amount of stock urgently offered was small, else the day could hardly have passed with as light losses as those which showed in the final figure. With the exception of Amalgamated Copper and possibly one or two other issues the day's transactions were light. Commission brokers advise their clients not to press their stock for sale, as market orders could not possibly be executed without very considerable losses.

In the afternoon the market, although it did not increase in activity, became steadier, and in a certain number of stocks part of the morning's loss was recovered, although the final quotations in almost every case showed some recession from Saturday's closing figures. The relatively small amount of stock pressing for sale was in several instances indicated by the fact that bids considerably above the figures at which the several stocks had sold earlier in the day were made without being supplied. At no time was there anything like excitement on the curb, and at the close the market was relatively strong. The steadiness in the curb market is no doubt chiefly due to the fact that in that market the majority of transactions are conducted on a cash basis, a condition that has frequently proved a notable source of strength. Good buying in the afternoon was induced by the declines which so considerably cut down quotations, and this buying did much to steady the market and make the close much stronger than had been the earlier market.

Observers of the outside market seemed to feel that yesterday's conditions are not likely to be continued, for few of the special conditions affecting that market can be considered as in any wise unfavorable, but naturally the course of the curb market depends upon Stock Exchange conditions.

AMALGAMATED COPPER, probably the most active issue, continued its erratic course, and the strength which it displayed at the close was all the more notable on account of yesterday's market conditions. It went off with the rest of the list, suffering to the extent of over 2 points, but rallied quickly from the lowest and closed at the highest for the day, and only three-eighths of a point below Saturday's closing bid. Sales in the early afternoon were made as low as 77, the bottom figure, and the last sales were effected at 79, with 79 bid for the stock at the close. Inside support seemed the only explanation of the strength displayed by this stock, and some of the late buying had much the appearance of being part of a plan to advance the price. Transactions amounted probably to not less than 2,500 shares.

Among the stocks which suffered most were a number of the industrial issues, including some that heretofore have been in best demand. As noted, these declines were due to the execution of market orders in the face of a general indisposition to buy even when stocks were offered at a considerable sacrifice. In few, if any, stocks were the declines the result of special unfavorable influences—general market conditions amply explaining all the losses recorded.

OTIS ELEVATOR common sold off to 16, a decline of more than 6 points from the last previous sale made on Saturday. But very little stock changed hands at this figure, and bids of 20 made late in the day were not supplied, showing that no general disposition was shown to throw stocks on the market without regard to price.

DISTILLING OF AMERICA preferred was another stock that went off very sharply on light transactions. This issue, which closed on Saturday at 25 bid, the lowest sale on that day having been in the neighborhood of 26, sold at 21, a decline of nearly 5 points. In this case also the closing bid was considerably better than the lowest for the day. Distilling common was much firmer than the preferred, selling in the neighborhood of 7½ and closing at 7 bid, a net loss of only a quarter of a point.

Similar conditions prevailed in a number of other issues, among them Royal Baking Powder preferred, which sold off to 90; International Pump preferred, which changed hands at 60; Sloss-Sheffield preferred, which went to 67, and Standard Oil, which at the close was offered at 454, against 458 bid on Saturday.

Closing quotations, many of which, owing to yesterday's conditions, are necessarily nominal, were as follows:

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 18.—It was a bad day for stocks. Metropolitan Elevated preferred, which opened at 76½, fell to 71½ at the close. Linseed common broke from 12 to 11 at the finish and the preferred declined from 52 at the start to 48¼ at the wind-up. Heavy selling of Biscuit common broke it from 33⅜ at the beginning to 30½, but it closed at 32. The preferred lost two points from the opening at 89, but closed at 88. Match, which opened at 122½, advanced to 121½, but closed at 118. South Side Elevated opened at par, advanced ¾, dropped to 99, and closed at 99½. Metropolitan bonds ranged from 95¼ to 94⅞, closing there.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 18.—The stock market to-day was unable to withstand the demoralization which prevailed in New York. At the start some firmness was shown, but as the calls for more margin were not responded to, brokers began selling out accounts. On top of this came sales by people who sold in an effort to protect their New York holdings. The result was a weak and lower market, but no scare. The movement of prices may be briefly summarized as follows: United Gas, 155½ to 143⅛ to 145½; Union Traction, 38⅞ to 34½ to 35¾; Asphalt, 12½ to 10⅜ to 11⅝; Electric Company of America, 12⅜ to 10; Marsden, 12 to 9 to 9¼; Pennsylvania Steel preferred, 93 to 89; Philadelphia, Electric, 5 to 5⅛; Bethlehem Steel, 17½ to 15¾; Cambria Steel, 19⅝ to 18; Lehigh Valley, 25 to 23⅜; Pennsylvania Railroad, 65⅝ to 64; Philadelphia Traction, 95 to 93; Tidewater Steel, 13 to 11½. The close was weak and unsettled.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

New Boulevard Apartment House in a Trade—Other Dealings—Plaintiffs the Buyers at Auction.

McVickar & Co. have sold for the Central Realty Company the recently completed six-story elevator apartment house at the southwest corner of Broadway and One Hundred and Second Street, fronting 105 feet on Broadway and 125 feet on the street. The buyers are Jacob Steinhardt and Julius Goldman, who give in payment eight lots on Manhattan Square South, 50 feet east of Columbus Avenue, at $400,000. While the entire transaction was in the nature of a trade, the sale of the lots was virtually for cash, and it is believed that $50,000 a lot is the high record on Seventy-seventh Street.

Terence Farley's Sons have sold to James Taylor the five-story American basement dwelling at the southeast corner of Madison Avenue and Fiftieth Street on a lot 45 by 47.

Alfred Seton, Jr., has sold for William P. Latting to Mrs. Eulalie Ladging for $55,000 the four-story brownstone-front dwelling 43 West Thirty-eighth Street, 23 by 55 by 98.9.

Pease & Elleman have sold for the estate of George H. Moore to a client the four-story brownstone-front dwelling 57 East Seventy-eighth Street, 18.9 by 55 by 102.2.

It is reported that William Miller has sold the four-story dwelling 208 West Seventy-second Street, 25 by 100.

A. H. Mathews has sold for the Fidelity Insurance, Trust and Safe Deposit Company of Philadelphia to Frederick V. Haas the four-story brownstone-front dwelling 112 West Forty-ninth Street, 21.4 by 100.

S. Fine has sold for Mandelbaum & Lewine the three-story brick dwelling 268 Bleecker Street, 18 by 69.

L. & D. Baum were the brokers in the recently reported sale of the Lenox Hill apartment house at Madison Avenue and Seventy-seventh Street for Henry Corn.

Herbert B. Rexer and J. M. Pilcher have sold for C. F. David the five-story double tenement 427 East Nineteenth Street, 24 by 92.

BRIDGE AND TUNNEL TALK

Hearing on the Question Before an Aldermanic Committee.

QUEENS FILLS THE CHAMBER

Residents of the Borough Plead for the Blackwell's Island Bridge—Controller Favors a Tunnel.

What purported to be a hearing on the relative merits of tunnels and bridges as a means of inter-borough communication was held before the Aldermanic Committee on Bridges and Tunnels yesterday. The members of the committee had expected to listen to arguments as to the desirability and cost of both plans, but, with only two exceptions, the speakers represented the wishes of the residents of the Borough of Queens, and few arguments were presented on either side. Controller Coler pleaded briefly for the adoption of the tunnel plan, which originated with him, and Alfred R. Conkling, on behalf of taxpayers of the Borough of Manhattan, seconded his efforts, at the same time demanding another hearing at which the merits of the case could be discussed. The committee at its adjournment gave no intimation of what it intended to do, but it probably will report to the Board of Aldermen this afternoon.

Nearly 200 residents of the Borough of Queens, each wearing a red ribbon on which was printed "A Bridge for Queens," and led by Borough President Bowley, gathered in the Aldermanic Chamber to take part in the hearing. Every one of them applauded every word spoken in favor of the Blackwell's Island bridge, and scowled when tunnels were mentioned approvingly.

Bridge Commissioner Shea began the speechmaking. The chief use to which tunnels could be put, he said, was for railroad purposes. They were not feasible for vehicular or pedestrian traffic, and the arguments that they were more economical and could be built in less time, while worthy of consideration, were not sufficient to overcome the objections. He said he welcomed the investigation of the subject, so far as it applied to a tunnel between Manhattan and South Brooklyn, where a bridge was out of the question, but, inasmuch as the two projected bridges had been under consideration by the City Government for a year, he thought they should be built, after which attention could be given to tunnels.

Controller Coler, who followed Mr. Shea, told the committee that the city had a present debt incurring capacity of $50,000,000, and that this would be extended to $65,000,000. "Starting on this basis," the Controller said, "if you charge off $30,000,000 for bridges and $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 for rapid transit, you will force the city into a position where it will have to patronize private water companies. If the city allows its debt incurring capacity to be eaten up at once, it will drift into private ownership of public utilities, although the administration was elected on a platform in which public ownership of franchises was a prominent plank.

"Such a tunnel as I have proposed between Manhattan and Queens could be built in two years. This would give you a margin that would enable you to build bridges as needed. I speak only from the financial point of view, and I am sure that if the people of Queens understood the situation thoroughly, they would see that the immediate benefit to be derived from the building of a tunnel would more than offset the inconvenience arising from delay in erecting an expensive bridge."

President Bowley arose, amid the plaudits of his constituents, to reply to the Controller. He declared that the only proper means of travel over the East River was by bridges. He expressed surprise that the Controller should "oppose and obstruct these bridges" because their construction would impair the debt limit. "A short time ago," he said, "Mr. Coler wanted to spend $25,000,000 for a park at Coney Island that could be used four months in the year. What had become of the debt limit then?" Continuing, Mr. Bowley said: "The building of this bridge will add millions to the taxable values of Queens and fill it with people. Give us a chance to develop, and I'll give my personal guarantee that in ten years Queens will have double the population of Brooklyn." At this prophecy the men from Queens applauded vigorously and the members of the committee laughed.

Councilman Cassidy, who next spoke, said he "wondered who wrote the statements Controller Coler had sent to the press," and then described the advantages that would accrue to Queens from the building of a bridge. He did not touch on tunnels, however, any further than to say that he did not regard them as a good means of travel.

E. Platt Stratton, a civil engineer, presented a brief in which he said that tunnels had worked well when controlled by private corporations, but had failed when controlled by municipalities. If a tunnel under the East River were a valuable franchise, he inquired, why had not the franchise for a tunnel extending from Forty-second Street, Manhattan, to Long Island City been utilized? He regarded tunnels as fitted for railroad purposes, but not for ordinary traffic.

Alfred R. Conkling, after asking for another hearing, said that the people of Manhattan, who would have to pay the greater part of the cost of bridges or tunnels, were averse to paying money out unnecessarily. While willing that Queens should get its share of improvements, he felt that tunnels, as offering a cheaper and more easily built means of communication, should receive due consideration.

Louis Windmüller, William Richtenstein, Aldermen Stewart and Wafer, Solon Anderson, and W. S. Rasquin also spoke.

OLIN FOR ADJUTANT GENERAL.

Well-Known Lawyer Named as Likely to Succeed Gen. Avery D. Andrews.

It was said yesterday that Stephen H. Olin, a well-known lawyer, stood the best chance of being appointed to succeed Avery D. Andrews as Adjutant General of the New York National Guard. Mr. Olin is now Assistant Adjutant General at division headquarters in this city. He is the son of the Rev. Dr. Stephen Olin, who was one of the leading educators of his generation in the United States. Dr. Olin married Julia M., the daughter of Judge James Lynch of New York and of Janet N. Tillotson, granddaughter of Judge Robert R. Livingston.

The Olin family is of Huguenot descent, and its American ancestor was John Olin, who was captured by a press gang of a British man-o'-war in 1678 on the coast of Wales. The warship anchored in Boston Harbor a few months later, and young Olin escaped ashore. He married Susannah Spencer, of Welsh descent, and settled in Rhode Island.

Stephen H. Olin was born at Middletown, Conn., in 1847, and was graduated from Wesleyan University in 1866. In 1895 he received from it the degree of LL. D. He is a member of the firm of Olin & Rives, and, in addition to being Assistant Adjutant General, is Chief of Staff of the First Brigade of the National Guard, with the rank of Colonel. In 1894 he was one of the Commissioners to revise the public school law. He has been President of the Wesleyan Alumni Association and is a Trustee of that university and of the New York Public Library. In 1879 he married Alice W. Barlow, daughter of S. L. M. Barlow. She died in 1892, leaving two daughters, Alice Townsend and Julia Lynch Olin. The city residence of Mr. Olin is at 136 East Nineteenth Street, and his country home is Glenburn, Rhinebeck-on-Hudson. He is a member of the Century, University, The Players, Lawyers', and City Clubs, the Downtown Association, and the Bar Association.

LAYS CLAIM TO DIAMONDS.

Woman Who Lost Gems Three Years Ago Thinks She Has Found Them.

The loss of a bag containing diamonds, the property of Miss Essie Blum of 882 Douglass Street, Brooklyn, will form the subject of a hearing in the Lee Avenue Police Court to-day. Mrs. Florence Moore, the proprietor of a bakery at Sanford Street and De Kalb Avenue, will be called upon to explain what she knows about the missing gems.

Three years ago the Blum family lived in the neighborhood of Mrs. Moore's bakery. Miss Blum went out shopping one day, and in a small alligator bag hanging from her waist she carried diamonds valued at more than $350. On her return she went into Mrs. Moore's bakery to make a purchase. A few minutes after leaving the bakery she missed the bag, and retraced her steps to search for it. She was unable to find any trace of it or of the diamonds, and her complaint to the police was fruitless. John Reichenbach, a butcher in the same neighborhood, said that on the day the diamonds were lost he had seen an unknown man kick a bag lying on the sidewalk, then pick up the bag, open it, and walk off with it. This person was sought, but never could be found.

The incident was forgotten until last Friday, when Miss Blum, while shopping in Fulton Street, came across Mrs. Moore. The latter wore several pieces of diamond jewelry, and Miss Blum, after a hasty glance, came to the conclusion that the gems were some of her long-lost ones. She went to the Lee Avenue Police Court yesterday and obtained a summons for Mrs. Moore to appear to-day. Mrs. Moore said last evening: "The diamonds I own have been mine for many years. I never saw the diamonds Miss Blum lost."

LEGAL NOTES.

OBSTRUCTION IN SIDEWALK ON VILLAGE BRIDGE.—The Court of Appeals recently reversed a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Third Department, which affirmed a dismissal of Charles H. Fordham's suit, as administrator, against Gouverneur Village, for damages for the death of his wife, Adell M. Fordham. It appeared on the trial that at the time of the accident, the village was laying a water pipe under the sidewalk of a bridge over the Oswegatchie River, connecting the principal streets of the village, and for that purpose cut holes in the planking. The work not having been finished on the day the holes were cut, they were each covered at nightfall with a plank one or two inches thick. Before this, the walk had a smooth surface, but no light or signal was then placed on the bridge. Mrs. Fordham, who was thirty-eight years old and in vigorous health, left her home on this night intending to cross the bridge, and soon after was found on the bridge sidewalk, upon her hands and knees, trying to get up. She was assisted home. It was found that her knee had been seriously injured, and amputation and death followed. Mrs. Levar, who found the injured woman upon the bridge, testified that they both felt about on the sidewalk at the spot and found a plank which was about a finger-length higher than the rest of the walk. The attending physician said the injury was such as would be produced by falling and striking the knee upon the floor or some hard substance. Judge Haight, giving the unanimous opinion of the Court of Appeals, held that the evidence sufficed to take the case to the jury upon the question whether the injury was caused by stumbling over the plank, and upon the question of defendant's negligence and the decedent's freedom from contributory negligence. The Court held that evidence was improperly excluded which had been offered on the part of the plaintiff to show that on the evening of the injury several persons had stumbled upon the planks used to cover these holes. The evidence was held to be competent, so far as the plank upon which it was claimed Mrs. Fordham stumbled, was concerned.

THOMAS ARMSTRONG'S WILL SUSTAINED.—The will of Thomas Armstrong, in which he gave the bulk of his property to Union College, making no provision for his only child and son, Emmet Armstrong, has been sustained by the Court of Appeals, which recently affirmed the decision below in an action by David F. Doble and others against Emmet Armstrong and others to establish the validity of the testamentary probate. Mr. Armstrong, who at his death, five years ago, was seventy-six years old, came to this country a poor and friendless boy, and commenced to work at his trade of a tailor. He married in 1842, when twenty-three years old, and then began to study law. Five years later he went to Clinton County, in this State, where he attained a position of eminence at the bar. He was Colonel of a regiment in the civil war. He accumulated an estate of some $250,000. His son, now fifty years old, was educated at Union College and in Europe; where he traveled considerably. Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong separated seventeen years ago, and while she was seeking an absolute divorce here he got one in the Dakota courts, in 1883. By a subsequent agreement between them, he paid her $15,000 as alimony and in lieu of dower. Ten years ago he married another woman, and soon after gave real estate to Union College, the income from which, $6,650, was to be applied to the support of students, who should be farmers' sons from Clinton County. This was followed by another deed to the college, and in 1893, by a holographic will, he gave his residuary estate to that institution, an annual income of $2,000 being reserved for his wife. The Court of Appeals holds (opinion by Judge Gray) that the burden was upon the son of establishing the testamentary incapacity of the testator over the prima-facie evidence of the validity of the will afforded by its probate. Its provisions were not invalidated because they were unequal or unjust, or the result of passion, or of other unworthy or unjustifiable sentiments. The verdict sustaining the will was held to be properly directed by the Court where the evidence did not show or tend to prove that he was influenced by any insane delusion in his domestic relations. The proof was held to be abundant that these relations were sufficiently unfortunate and unhappy, whether attributable to his behavior or not, to embitter him and to harden his affections against his son, who had disappointed his ambition, and who, turning against him in his latter years, had passed out of the sphere of his life.

CYCLONE AT LORENZO MARQUES.

Ships Wrecked and Houses Blown Down by the Storm.

The Commercial Cable Company made the following announcements yesterday:

"We are advised that the cable between Mozambique and Lorenzo Marques is interrupted. A terrific cyclone at Mozambique has caused interruption of the Delagoa Bay cable. Houses blown down. Ships in harbor wrecked. Telegraph station unroofed, but instruments saved."

Sacred Peacocks for the Park.

The star attraction at the Central Park menagerie to-day will be a pair of sacred white peacocks, which will arrive this morning from Cincinnati. The birds have been a part of the Robinson circus and were exchanged for one of the cape buffaloes. The white peacock is the albino of the peacock family and only a very few of them are found outside of their native country, India, where they are held as sacred.

THE DOUBLEDAY & McCLURE CO.

Mr. McClure Will Retire from Active Partnership in January and the Firm Will Be Reorganized.

A change in the organization of the Doubleday & McClure Company, which is in effect a dissolution of partnership between Messrs. Doubleday & McClure, will take place early in January. It is understood, however, that Mr. McClure, although retiring as an active partner, may still retain a small interest in the stock of the company.

As reconstituted, the firm will include Frank N. Doubleday, Walter H. Page, formerly editor of The Atlantic Monthly and literary adviser to Houghton, Mifflin & Co.; J. L. Thompson, who has been business manager of the Doubleday & McClure Company since its organization two years ago; Henry W. Lanier, son of the late Sidney Lanier, who has also been connected with the house from the first, and S. A. Everitt, who has been in charge of the manufacturing department. James MacArthur, a former editor of The Bookman, will represent the firm in London and have charge of its foreign interests.

Mr. Page will assume charge of the literary work of the firm, and it is expected that the firm name will eventually be changed to Doubleday, Page & Co. The business will be removed early in the year to 34 Union Square East, the present quarters at 145 East Twenty-fifth Street, which are shared with the S. S. McClure Company, having been outgrown. The latter company itself requires larger space on account of the development of McClure's Magazine, the new encyclopaedia, and other publishing enterprises of Mr. McClure.

These changes, both Mr. Doubleday and Mr. McClure say, will be made solely to further the development of the two firms. Their personal friendship remains unimpaired, and they will continue to be associated in other enterprises.

The business of the S. S. McClure Company will be continued as it now is with the addition of a book publishing department.

TWO GUILTY OF CONSPIRACY.

Blackmail the Object of Christine Sporgen's Breach of Promise Suit.

Christine Sporgen of Cedarhurst, L. I., and James M. Petersen of 50 Nassau Street, were convicted yesterday in the Court of Special Sessions of conspiracy in trying to blackmail Carl Fischer-Hansen of 43 Nassau Street several weeks ago. Miss Sporgen, who had been a cook in Mr. Fischer-Hansen's employ about seven years ago, instituted a breach of promise suit against him. It was alleged that the suit was the outcome of a plot planned by the woman, Petersen and several other men.

Justice Jacobs, in sentencing Miss Sporgen to six months in the penitentiary, said that he made her sentence lenient because he regarded her as a tool in Petersen's hands. Petersen was remanded to the Tombs. He will be sentenced next Wednesday.

FLINT'S FINE FURNITURE

Was it because Charles Dudley Warner had "had experience," we wonder, with ordinary Christmas trinkets, that he was impelled to speak out in meeting like this:

"But consider how full the world is of holiday goods that are of no earthly use, and are not even artistic, and how short life is—and how starved are many drawing rooms, not for holiday goods, but for objects of beauty."

Consider it, indeed! And then consider how full our warerooms are of just those "objects of beauty" that delight people of taste, and that are indissolubly associated with the needs of one's daily life; and how lasting such gifts are, and how easily they are obtained, when you

GEN. LAWTON KILLED BY FILIPINO BULLET

Laughs When Warned of Danger by His Staff Officers.

BALL PIERCES HIS HEART

Falls in Front of His Men at the San Mateo Trenches.

MANILA, Dec. 19.—Major Gen. Henry W. Lawton has been shot and killed. The bullet that ended his life struck him in the breast as he was standing before his troops at San Mateo. His heart was pierced by the ball and death was almost instantaneous.

Gen. Lawton left home Monday night, having returned from his northern operations Saturday, to lead an expedition through Mariquina Valley, which has been an insurgent stronghold throughout the war. The valley has several times been invaded but never held by the Americans. Gen. Geronimo was supposed to have there the largest organized force north of Manila, and Gen. Otis wished to garrison Mariquina.

The night was one of the worst of the season. A terrific rain had begun and is still continuing.

Accompanied by his staff and Troop I, Fourth Cavalry, Gen. Lawton set out at 9 o'clock, in advance of the main force, consisting of the Eleventh Cavalry and one battalion each of the Twentieth and Twenty-seventh Infantry, which started from La Loma at midnight.

With a small escort he led the way through an almost pathless country, a distance of fifteen miles, over hills and through canebrake and deep mud, the horses climbing the rocks and sliding down the hills. Before daybreak the command had reached the head of the valley

San Mateo was attacked at 8 o'clock, and a three hours' fight ensued. This resulted in but few casualties on the American side, apart from the death of Gen. Lawton, but the attack was difficult because of the natural defenses of the town.

Gen. Lawton was walking along the firing line, within 300 yards of a small sharpshooters' trench, conspicuous in the big white helmet he always wore and a light yellow raincoat. He was also easily distinguishable because of his commanding stature.

The sharpshooters directed several shots which clipped the grass near by. His staff officers called Gen. Lawton's attention to the danger he was in, but he only laughed with his usual contempt for bullets.

Suddenly he exclaimed, "I am shot!" clenched his hand in a desperate effort to stand erect, and fell into the arms of a staff officer. Orderlies rushed across the field for the surgeons, who dashed up immediately, but their efforts were useless. The body was taken to a clump of bushes and laid upon a stretcher, the familiar white helmet covering the face of the dead General.

Almost at this moment the cheers of the American troops rushing into San Mateo were mingling with the rifle volleys.

After the fight six stalwart cavalrymen forded the river to the town, carrying the litter on their shoulders, the staff preceding with the colors and a cavalry escort following. The troops filed bareheaded through the building where the body was laid, and many a tear fell from the eyes of men who had long followed the intrepid Lawton. The entire command was stricken with grief, as though each man had suffered a personal loss.

Owing to the condition of the country, which is impassable so far as vehicles are concerned, the remains could not be brought to Manila to-day. Mrs. Lawton and the children are living in a Government residence formerly occupied by a Spanish General.

San Mateo lies between a high mountain behind and a broad shallow stream in front, with wide sandbars, which the insurgent trenches and the buildings commanded.

The Americans were compelled to ford the river under fire. It was while they were lying in the rice fields and volleying preparatory to crossing the stream that Gen. Lawton was shot. All except the officers were behind cover. A staff officer was wounded about the same time, and one other officer and seven men were wounded.

After three hours' shooting the Filipinos were dispersed into the mountains. Col. Lockett took command when Gen. Lawton fell.

GEN. LAWTON'S CAREER.

Rose from the Ranks, Fought in Three Wars, and Was the Man Who Subjugated Geronimo.

The death of Major Gen. Henry W. Lawton removes from the United States Army its most picturesque figure. A giant in stature, tireless, fearless, and a veritable demon in temper when roused to action, he was a perfect type of the hero that in every age and country has commanded the worship of his followers.

Physically he was a marvel. He was 6 feet 3 inches in height; and every ounce of his 210 pounds was bone and sinew. He was erect, long armed, and deep-chested, and the only evidences of his fifty-six years were a few gray hairs. After undergoing every hardship incident to Indian campaigns in the Southwest, he went to Washington and lived a life of ease for ten years, but the outbreak of the Spanish war found him as capable of arduous service as when he enlisted in the Union Army at the age of eighteen. When he felt like it he could work forty-eight hours at a stretch, and when the mood seized him he could sleep as long without turning over. He could fast two days and then eat two dozen reed birds at a sitting. His forehead was high and narrow, his cheek bones prominent, his jaw square, his lips thin, his eyes gray, and his hair stood up like bristles.

AS HIS FRIEND SAW HIM.

A little over a year ago, when the country was talking about him as the hero of the battle of El Caney, a fellow-officer who had served with him in the Southwest wrote the following personal description and reminiscence:

"Lawton reminds me always of Scott's Norman Baron, Front de Boeuf. He has better morals, of course, but he is as big as the giant slain by Richard of the Lion Heart, is as direct in his methods, and, in personal or general combat, every bit as savage. There is plenty of the primal man in him. What he thinks he says. He has a strong sense of justice, but his temper is terrific and he is not gentle. He requires of subordinates the utmost endeavor, and gets it. He asks no one to do work that he is not competent and willing to do himself. Naturally a leader, he goes first, and the more difficult or desperate the undertaking the faster he goes.

"He has lived a life of peril and hardship. His only rule of hygiene is a tub in the morning. He has taken no sort of care of himself. Yet so splendidly was he endowed by nature that there is no perceptible weakening of his forces. Apparently he is as powerful and enduring as when I saw him first. That was more than ten years ago. He had completed one of the most remarkable feats of strength and perseverance chronicled in the long annals of the Anglo-Saxon race, but he was as fresh as a rose in the morning.

"He stood on the Government reservation at San Antonio, surrounded by the tawny savage band of Chiricahua Apaches, whom he had hunted off their feet. The squat figures of the hereditary enemies of the whites grouped about him came only to his shoulders. He towered among them, stern, powerful, dominant—an incarnation of the spirit of the white man, whose war drum had beaten around the world. Clad in a faded dirty fatigue jacket, a greasy flannel shirt of gray, trousers so soiled that the stripe down the leg was barely visible, broken boots and a disreputable sombrero that shaded the harsh features burned almost to blackness, he was every inch a soldier and a man. To the other officers at the post the Indians paid no sort of attention. To them Gen. Stanley and his staff were so many well-dressed lay figures, standing about as part of a picture done for their amusement, but the huge, massive man with the stubble on his chin had shown them that he was their superior on hunting grounds that were theirs by birthright, and they hung upon his lightest word.

"The man of El Caney is the reincarnation of some shining, helmeted, giant warrior, who fell upon the sands of Palestine in the First Crusade, with the red blood welling over his corselet and his two-handed battle sword shivered to the hilt. The race type persists unchanged in eye, in profile, in figure. It is the race which in all the centuries the Valkyrs have wafted from the war decks—the white-skinned race, which, drunk with the liquor of battle, reeled around the dragon standard at Senlac, which fought with Richard Grenville, which broke the Old Guard at Waterloo, which rode up the slope at Balaklava, which went down with the Cumberland at Hampton Roads, which charged with Pickett at Gettysburg—the race of the trader, the financier, the statesman, the inventor, the colonizer, the creator, but, before all, the fighter."

CREATED FOR A FIGHTER.

He realized as well as anybody else that he was created for a fighter. Speaking a few years ago of the circumstances under which he received his Captain's commission in the volunteer army in the civil war, he said:

"It was a lovely day in June, 1862, that my commission as Captain was handed to me. I had been commanding my company for some time, and I knew I would receive the formal promotion, for my immediate superiors had all indorsed me in the most favorable terms. But I had not the formal warrant to assume the rank. When it was handed to me I would not have changed places with King or Kaiser. I was nineteen years old, and, though my upper lip was as bare as a girl's, I was a Captain in a fighting regiment. It was then that I felt that if I had a 'vocation' for anything upon earth it was the life of a soldier. Then and there I determined to make the service of my country my life's work."

EARLY ARMY EXPERIENCE.

Gen. Lawton was born at Manhattan, now within the limits of Toledo, Ohio, in 1843, and at the age of eighteen entered the volunteer army as Sergeant of Company E, Ninth Indiana Infantry, immediately after the firing on Fort Sumter. He was mustered out July 29 of the same year, and less than a month later, on Aug. 20, went to the front again as First Lieutenant in the Thirtieth Indiana, with which he served until the close of the war. He was promoted Captain May 17, 1862, and Lieutenant Colonel Nov. 15, 1864, and on March 13, 1865, was brevetted Colonel "for gallant and meritorious service." At the same time he won a medal of honor for distinguished gallantry in leading a charge of skirmishers against the enemy's rifle pits, taking them with their occupants and stubbornly and successfully resisting two determined attacks of the enemy to retake the works.

It was in front of Atlanta in August, 1864, that he thus distinguished himself, and won the most prized decoration of the United States Army.

A REGULAR ARMY OFFICER.

He was mustered out of the vounteer service Nov. 25, 1865, and immediately sought a commission in the regular army, for which he was recommended by Gens. Sherman, Sheridan, and J. T. Wood. On July 28, 1866, he was commissioned Second Lieutenant and assigned to the Forty-first Infantry. He was promoted First Lieutenant July 31, 1867, and on the reduction of the army in 1869 was transferred to the Twenty-fourth Infantry. He joined the cavalry arm of the service Jan. 1, 1871, and was assigned to the Fourth Cavalry at the request of Gen. Rinald S. Mackenzie, who had been placed in comamnd of that regiment with a view to reorganizing it. Gen. Mackenzie, himself a remarkable soldier, said of him at that time: "I like that new Lieutenant of mine, Lawton. Unless I am very wide of the mark, he will prove a great soldier."

Lawton served with his regiment in Arizona and the adjacent territory for about nineteen years and fought with the troopers in many of the hardest Indian campaigns in the history of the Southwest. He was promoted Captain March 20, 1879, and while holding that commission performed the service upon which his fame as an Indian fighter chiefly rests.

HIS INDIAN CAMPAIGN.

The Chiracahua Apaches, with Natchez as hereditary Chief, were really ruled by Geronimo, the medicine man, one of the most crafty, treacherous, and blood-thirsty redskins with which the Government ever had to deal. Gen. Crook, who was in command of the troops in the locality, exhausted every effort to capture Geronimo and his band, but without success, and in the meantime the Apaches were constantly appearing at unexpected places and committing the most atrocious barbarities in the line of robbery, incendiarism, and murder.

Finally, in the Spring of 1886, President Cleveland summoned Gen. Sheridan to the White House and gave directions which resulted in orders to Gen. Crook to change his methods of campaigning. The latter, stung by the implied rebuke, sent an answer which resulted in his instant removal from the command in Arizona. Gen. Miles hastened from Fort Leavenworth in April to take the field in person against Geronimo. After obtaining an idea of the situation he selected Capt. Lawton to command a force of picked men, whose instructions were to pursue Geronimo and his band and never leave the trail until they were dead or captured.

GERONIMO GIVES UP.

Lawton's campaign lasted for weeks, and military authorities have declared it to be without a parallel in the annals of Indian warfare for the ability and perseverance displayed. Once for five days Lawton's men were without food, except such as they could gather on the march, and for two days they ate nothing whatever. They were finally forced to subsist on the flesh of their worn-out pack mules. The pursuit was kept up relentlesly, and from the beginning to the end of the chase Geronimo never had a moment's rest. In August, when Geronimo had been followed almost to the Mexican border, he offered to surrender, upon the single condition that the lives of himself and his followers should be spared. Gen. Miles approved the terms, and the name Apache from that time ceased to be one to inspire terror in the Southwest.

Largely in recognition of this service Capt. Lawton, on Sept. 17, 1888, was made Major and Inspector General and thus transferred from the sphere of hardship in the field to one of the most desirable staff positions in the army. He was promoted Lieutenant Colonel Feb. 12, 1899, and became Colonel July 7, 1898, upon the increase of the staff at the outbreak of the Spanish war. This was still his rank in the regular service at the time of his death, but in the volunteer army he had won fresh laurels, both in Cuba and the Philippines.

FIGHTS AGAINST SPAIN.

At the opening of the war he sought duty in the field, and on May 4, 1898, was commissioned Brigadier General of Volunteers. He went to Cuba with Gen. Shafter, and on July 1 was chosen for the important work of commanding the division which began the main operations against Santiago by taking El Caney. He performed valuable services throughout the Santiago campaign. For his gallantry at El Caney he was pro-

SOLDIERS RETURN WEALTHY.

Find Thousands in Gold and Silver in Luzon, Bury Much of It, but Bring Home $150,000.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Dec. 19.—From a trustworthy source it was learned to-day that two companies of Montana volunteers who came back from Manila on the transport Zealandia brought with them $150,000 in gold and Mexican silver.

This treasure was first discovered by two men at Caloocan. They were the first to enter the town, which was very rich. The two Montana men entered a large mansion, but found the place deserted. They then went into the garden, and in a corner saw traces that the soil had recently been dug up. They prodded the soil with their bayonets and soon struck something hard. Digging down, they uncovered a large chest, which contained thousands of dollars in gold coin.

The men who found the gold treasure took all they could carry. Then they uncovered a large chest filled with Mexican dollars. The men of the two companies were lined up and marched through the garden, and as each man passed he scooped up double handfuls of silver and filled his pockets.

On the voyage over on the Zealandia poker was the favorite pastime, chips being worth $5 and no limit. Some of the men had as much as $5,000 each in gold and silver, and with the purser there was deposited $150,000, for which no receipts were given, the purser simply keeping a memorandum of each man's sack.

Besides the treasure brought home, the soldiers left thousands buried in different places in Luzon, trusting to maps and markings to secure it after being mustered out.

MARK HANNA AS SANTA CLAUS.

Will Distribute $5,000 Among His Street Railway Employes.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Dec. 19.—At the request of Senator M. A. Hanna, the Little Consolidated Street Railroad, of which he is President, will distribute $5,000 among its employes Saturday night as a Christmas gift.

The Senator in a telegram to the Directors says he wants to show the company's "appreciation of the manly course taken by its employes during the late strike" on the Big Consolidated lines when they refused to go out.

DEWEY MAY TAKE PRECEDENCE.

Effort to Place Him Ahead of the Army at White House Reception.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—A few days ago it was asserted, on what appeared to be semi-official authority, that at the New Year reception at the White House, Admiral Dewey would be expected to follow custom and appear at the head of the navy contingent, behind the army, which is said always to have come first on formal occasions. Since then the official programme has been published, and the order given was set forth as expected.

Now, however, it appears that this is not satisfactory to the Navy Department or to the President, and that a revision of the programme may be made placing Dewey and his staff ahead of the army in the line. The Navy Department contention that Admiral Dewey should have first place is based upon the idea that he is higher in rank than the General commanding the army. On the other hand the army insists that Gen. Miles stands relatively in the same position as Admiral Dewey. Miles is a Major General, but is the third in order from the President. Admiral Dewey is an Admiral, ranking with a General, but he is third from the President, just as is Gen Miles.

If a new arrangement is made it will be with the sanction of the President, and it will be made known before Jan. 1.

AMERICAN FLOUR IN TURKEY.

Detained at the Custom House on Pretext that It Is Unwholesome.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Last Summer annoyance was felt by shippers of American flour to Constantinople because, at the instigation of local millers, a cargo of flour was detained in the Custom House there by order of the Turkish officials. Minister Straus, after vigorous representations, secured the release of the flour, having better luck in this respect than some of the other Ministers who appeared on behalf of countries similarly annoyed.

It was supposed that the interference would not occur again, but it is now reported that other cargoes have been detained upon the pretext that the product of American mills is unwholesome and must be kept out of use. There will be a renewal of the representations made last Summer, with a strong demand that Turkey shall not directly or indirectly discriminate against American products.

As there is comparatively little trade with Turkey, there is not much opportunity for retaliation, and the Government will depend largely upon the good-will of Turkey and the skill of Minister Straus in presenting the case of the United States.

ARMY'S MAP DRAWING MACHINE.

Now Being Adjusted at Willets Point—For Use in Cuba.

Special to The New York Times.

WILLETS POINT, L. I., Dec. 19.—Many surveyors from Brooklyn and others interested in the study of topography have visited the Government post at this place the last few days to inspect the new orograph, which is now being put in readiness by the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, for use in Cuba. It is the only map-drawing machine ever made for an army to be put in use either during a war or in times of peace. The machine cost the Government about $25,000, and resembles a bicycle.

The machine was built for the United States Engineer Department, and, it is claimed, is the only one ever manufactured that will actually perform the service expected of it.

The machine requires careful handling, but produces quickly a map that would take several skilled surveyors some time to produce. When adjusted, the machine is pushed over a road or stretch of open land by three soldiers, and the map is drawn as the machine is moved forward. The orograph consists of two well-built carriage wheels, each ten feet in circumference, one following the other in a single track. The wheels on one side support a box thirty-nine inches long, fifteen inches deep, and eight inches wide. This box contains mechanism.

On the other side of the wheels is a well containing mercury. It is twenty-four inches in diameter and half an inch deep. The orograph in operation must not be allowed to careen on either side. The principles upon which the machine is constructed are those of the perambulator, operating in conjunction with a lever maintained continually in a horizontal position by floating in a mercury filled well. This lever is twenty-four inches in length and half an inch thick, with floats attached to each end. The pencil used to indicate altitude moves an inch for every fifty feet change of level.

ANOTHER NAMES MOLINEUX

Expert John F. Tyrrell Says He Addressed Poison Wrapper.

KINSLEY'S EXAMINATION ENDED

Effort of Mr. Weeks to Introduce Letter Said to be in Gallagher's Writing Rouses Mr. Osborne.

After having been on the witness stand for nine days, three of which were given over to a searching cross-examination, William J. Kinsley, the chief expert in handwriting for the prosecution in the case of Roland B. Molineux, concluded his testimony yesterday. Mr. Weeks excused him at 3 o'clock, and the next half hour was taken up by Mr. Osborne in an attempt to clear up some of the points that had become involved by the cross-examination.

Another of the State's experts, John F. Tyrrell of Milwaukee, Wis., who is employed by the Northwestern Life Insurance Company, was then put on the stand. He was there only long enough to say that in his opinion all the exhibits in the case—the admitted writings, the Barnet and Cornish letters, and the poison wrapper address—were written by the defendant. He had just gone into an explanation of the reasons for his belief when court adjourned.

It was another dreary day, filled with technical calculations and deductions, except for the semi-sensational way in which Mr. Weeks sought to introduce in evidence a letter said to be in the handwriting of Felix J. Gallagher, once an employe of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club, and later cashier in the New York Athletic Club. What Mr. Weeks's object was is in doubt, for he was overruled by the court, and not allowed to put the letter in evidence, but the effort succeeded in working up Mr. Osborne to such a pitch of excitement that the court intervened to make him subside.

Mr. Gallagher's name was frequently mentioned in connection with the case before and during the time it was before the Coroner. He was at one time taken to both places where letter boxes had been hired in the name of Cornish and Barnet, but he was not identified as the lessee of the boxes by the proprietors of the places. Mr. Osborne, when his objection to the introduction of the letter which Mr. Weeks said was in Gallagher's handwriting had been sustained, dared Mr. Weeks to name his man. Mr. Weeks quietly took an exception to the ruling of the court and the incident ended.

KINSLEY IN OTHER CASES.

Mr. Weeks took occasion to call Mr. Kinsley's attention to a number of cases in which he had testified before. He was asked about the Mildred Brewster case in Vermont, where the defendant had been acquitted after he had sworn that she made the writings on which it was sought to convict her, and Mr. Kinsley still maintained that he was right, in spite of the opinion of the jury to the contrary.

He was also asked about the Coroner Nason case in Brooklyn, and admitted that in that instance he was wrong, and had so told the District Attorney. As had been foreshadowed, Mr. Osborne used this point to show the conscientiousness of the expert, and Mr. Kinsley's explanation on redirect examination was that when he testified before the Grand Jury that Coroner Nason had made certain writings he had as a guide only one envelope addressed by him. Later, he said, he got four more envelopes, and from these he concluded that he had made a mistake.

Mr. Kinsley was also asked about the Sigmund case, which he had said was the first case in which he had testified before a court without a jury. "At that trial did you not say in answer to a question that juries had disagreed with you, but the Court never?" asked Mr. Weeks.

"I did," was the reply.

"And that was the first case in which you testified before a court without a jury?"

"It was."

"Now, in view of that state of facts, do you consider that was a fair and honest answer?"

"I do."

"The Court differed with you then?"

"It did."

In answer to questions by Mr. Osborne, Mr. Kinsley said he thought at the time he was giving his opinion that Molineux had written the disputed writings he was giving an opinion contrary to the view held by the District Attorney. The next moment he said the District Attorney had never intimated to him what the official opinion was, and these two statements caused Mr. Weeks to smile.

"PEN FAILURES" DESCRIBED.

The first request made of Mr. Kinsley by Mr. Weeks when court opened was to explain to the jury what he meant by the term "pen failures." This he did by saying that he meant a failure of the pen to mark. This was the result of various extraneous circumstances; it might be caused by a particular nervousness of the writer, or the condition of pen and paper used might cause it. When a person was copying from writing placed before him, the handwriting would be more or less constrained and unnatural.

When asked to describe the every-day hand written by the defendant, Mr. Kinsley said it was an extremely rapid hand, and indicated extreme nervousness on the part of the writer. He said it was a flowing hand, with a slight tinge of femininity about it. The hand was erratic, yet indicated a rapid action of the mind.

The witness was also asked to explain what he meant by a term he had frequently used, "characteristically the same." He did not refer, Mr. Kinsley said, to the character of the writer, but the handwriting. He meant by the term general peculiarities that could be found running all through the writing, and wherein certain letters had under all conditions the same characteristics.

The crossing of the "t" and the dotting of the "i," that the witness had indicated as being characteristically the same throughout all the writings in the numerical and alphabetical exhibits, was talked of at some length, the expert stating in what manner the peculiarities were most marked. He said the defendant had peculiar ways of crossing the "t," and yet it was seldom crossed in the same manner.

He was asked if he thought a mere matter of resemblance between handwriting amounted to anything. He answered: "Yes, I think it amounts to a great deal."

Mr. Weeks then asked the witness if he did not consider it possible to take the writing of any man who wrote a hurried and nervous hand and find in it many points of resemblance to the writings of another man whose hand possessed none of the characteristics named. The witness said he did not think such a things possible.

The witness said he did not place much importance on "pen pressure," and he was then asked if in the case of Samuel J. Kennedy he had not said in answer to a question that he placed great importance on it and nerve tremor. The question was read by Mr. Weeks from the minutes of the trial of the People vs. Kennedy, but the witness said he could not remember what he had testified to.

KINSLEY WRITES POISON ADDRESS.

Changing the subject, Mr. Weeks said: "Mr. Kinsley, you said the other day you were willing to do some vertical writing for us. Are you still willing?"

"I am," answered the witness.

"Will you do so?"

"Yes. Do you wish me to write on the blackboard or with pen and ink?"

"Oh, pen and ink, by all means."

Preparations were speedily made at the table, and Mr. Kinsley sat down and wrote. After having written one specimen, a wrapped package, about eight inches long and four inches square, was given to him, and he was asked to write the words on Exhibit A, leaving room for five postage stamps. Mr. Kinsley wrote the famous poison address, and the specimen of handwriting was marked for identification.

The witness was next asked to reproduce on the blackboard some of the characters of his own handwriting. While doing so every one looked bored, Mr. Kinsley as well. Mr. Osborne turned, facing the jury, and remarked in an undertone.

"This is just as relevant as the scratching of Kinsley's hens."

Mr. Weeks asked the Court to reprimand the Assistant District Attorney, but the Recorder would not do so.

Then Mr. Weeks asked Mr. Kinsley if he did not find some peculiarities in his own handwriting that he had stated he had never found in any man's writing save that of the defendant. The witness said he did not.

The witness was kept at the blackboard for half an hour or more, being questioned by Mr. Weeks as to right and left curves, base and loop lines, up and down strokes, and other technicalities.

When Mr. Kinsley was asked to compare certain features of his own handwriting with what Mr. Weeks claimed to be certain resembling features in the disputed writing, he looked bored, but made no objections, and began his demonstration.

In answer to questions, Mr. Kinsley said all writing except that of mere practice was done unconsciously. In this feature of the unconscious formation of words, letters, and lines, he said, was the seat of the great difficulty in successfully disguising any handwriting.

HIS ORAL REPORT TO McCLUSKY.

The first question asked by Mr. Osborne on redirect examination was if the witness, at the time he had made his oral report to Capt. McClusky, in which he said he thought Molineux wrote the address on the poison package, had not formed his conclusion from the handwriting alone. Mr. Kinsley answered that he had.

"Is it not a fact that you asked Capt. McClusky to allow you to collaborate with Handwriting Expert Carvalho?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"I did."

"Did you do so?"

"I did, on Jan. 16."

"Now, Mr. Kinsley, Mr. Weeks brought out certain things on which you and Mr. Carvalho agreed. Now I want you to go ahead and tell this jury all the rest of the things you agreed on." The witness then recited the conversation he had with Mr. Carvalho in which the latter agreed with the witness that the person who wrote the address on the poison package had also written the Barnet and Cornish letters.

Mr. Kinsley was then asked to take Exhibit F, one of the Barnet letters, and Exhibit 24, an admitted specimen, and call to the attention of the jury the alleged similarity in the word "oblige." This he did at some length, and the question of other characteristics of the defendant's writings was taken up, much of which had been brought out in the direct examination.

When the witness had concluded the foreman of the jury asked Mr. Kinsley what nature of cases he had most often appeared in as a witness. The witness explained that he had appeared before every court save the United States courts, and that he had testified in almost every kind of case. He could not give definite statistics, he said, but promised to furnish a record of the cases. He was then excused.

Expert Tallman was called for, but was out of the room, and John F. Tyrrell took the stand. Mr. Tyrrell, in answer to questions, said he had begun the study of handwriting about fourteen years ago, and that he had testified on his first court case in October, 1894. He had testified in all in about twenty cases. He was retained in this case by telegram, he said, on April 30.

Here Mr. Weeks interposed and asked for permission to examine the witness as to his qualifications. Mr. Tyrrell told Mr. Weeks he had testified twelve times this years, three times in this case.

Mr. Tyrrell was then allowed to state that in his opinion one hand had written all the chief exhibits and the court adjourned.

OFFERS GAS AT 50 CENTS.

New Company Makes a Surprising Proposition to Passaic.

PASSAIC, N. J., Dec. 19.—At a meeting of the Common Council last night the new United Gas Improvement Company made an offer to supply gas to the city for 50 cents per 1,000 feet. The offer of the company was that the Council send one man, the new company one, and the old company one to San Francisco to inspect Dr. Chisholm's 50-cent gas plant there.

If the plan is practicable the United Gas Company will pay $50,000 for seventeen years to the city, $20,000 to each of the hospitals, $28,000 for a new school, will give the police and firemen relief funds $10,000 each, and will also furnish Passaic City with 50-cent gas and private consumers at the same rate. The offer created a surprise and caused no action to be taken on the gas question.

The present gas company has offered a new schedule to the city, reducing its rates to $1.25 a thousand and providing a diminishing scale, by which in five years the city is to enjoy gas at the rate of $1 a thousand.

SAYS SHAVING IS A NECESSITY.

New Jersey Judge Discharges Barbers Held for Keeping Open Sunday.

PATERSON, N. J., Dec. 19.—Shaves are a necessity, according to Recorder George B. Senoir, who this morning handed down his decision in reference to the Barbers' Union and its Sunday closing movement. The Judge dismissed every complaint lodged by the union against those barbers who refused to close on Sundays in face of the fact that they were threatened with arrest.

"This question as to keeping stores open on the Sabbath," the Recorder said in his decision, "is indeed a fine one, and I have been some time studying it carefully before passing judgment. I want you all who are listening to me to remember that this is a modern time—an age of progress, when usages and customs make our laws. I myself think shaving a necessity. I do it at my home every Sunday myself, and so do countless others, who are God-loving Christians. Yes, even preachers of God's Word do it.

"It is as much of a necessity as is bathing on Sunday, and I don't think it comes within my province to say who shall or shall not keep open his shaving parlors on the Sabbath. I therefore discharge all the barbers who have been arrested in this court for keeping their stores open on Sunday."

The courtroom was crowded, and many ministers were present. They were indignant. Their sentiments were voiced by the Rev. Mr. Kranz, presiding elder of the Paterson District of the Newark Methodist Episcopal Conference, who said: "We will have a meeting of our elders and have Recorder Senoir put off the bench."

The barbers, backed by the ministers, will take the case to a higher court. Those who favor Sunday shaving intend to have the law amended so as to include shaving in the list of Sunday necessities.

DEATH THREATENS A LORD.

The Marquis of Queensberry Is Critically Ill in London.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—The Marquis of Queensberry, who was found insensible in bed at the Raleigh Club yesterday, is now in a very critical condition.

The eighth Marquis of Queensberry, John Sholto Douglas, D. L., was born July 20, 1844, and succeeded to the title in 1858. He was Representative Peer for Scotland from 1872 to 1880 and Lieutenant Colonel of the Dumfries Volunteers from 1869 to 1871.

WALL STREET CALM AGAIN

Exciting

Corn Exchange Bank, and representatives of various other banking institutions, met again in the Clearing House at 11 o'clock yesterday morning and decided to repeat their action of the previous day and form a syndicate to loan money at prevailing rates. A pool of $10,800,000 was made up, the contributors being the following banks: National Bank of Commerce, National Union, Gallatin National, Chase National, Importers and Traders', Corn Exchange, National Park, Fourth National, Hanover National, First National, Bank of America, Manhattan, and Chemical National. A prominent banker is authority for the statement that if to-day's market shows need of it similar action will be taken.

Howard P. Frothingham began to offer this fund to the loan crowd on the Exchange about 11:30 A. M. He loaned it at prevailing rates. Some $2,500,000 to $3,000,000 was taken on call at 30 per cent. Then the rate dropped to 25, next to 20, and then to 15 per cent., a large amount being loaned at that rate. C. W. Turner suddenly appeared on the floor with an offer to lend $5,000,000 of the National City Bank's funds at 6 per cent., and the market fell to that figure. Mr. Turner succeeded in loaning only about $3,500,000, some of it going under 6 per cent. Mr. Frothingham loaned about $5,250,000 of the syndicate money, and $5,000,000 besides that in the course of the day. The Corn Exchange Bank managed to loan only $50,000 out of an offering of $500,000. Mr. Frothingham said he expected the call money rate to be 6 per cent. at to-day's opening.

The $5,000,000 offered by the National City Bank was the amount of Government deposits received by that bank yesterday. Secretary of the Treasury Gage had announced his intention to relieve the money situation by depositing internal revenue receipts and other Government funds in New York banks. Yesterday various depository banks sent to the Sub-Treasury Government bonds of the aggregate par value of $6,660,500. It being necessary for them to deposit in the Sub-Treasury bonds the par value of which equaled the amount of cash they wanted the Government to deposit with them. The fact that this amount of bonds had been sent in was immediately communicated to Washington, and Secretary Gage sent $5,000,000 worth of Government funds to the National City Bank. It is believed that he also sent $1,680,500 to the banks that sent in the other bonds, but what banks they were could not be learned yesterday.

The internal revenue receipts sent to the Sub-Treasury yesterday amounted to $1,188,000. These receipts are customarily deposited in various banks, but when any bank gets more of them than equals the par value of the bonds it has deposited with some Sub-Treasury, it must turn in the excess cash to that Sub-Treasury. The sum so turned in at the New York Sub-Treasury yesterday, $1,188,000, was sent to the Clearing House to form the Sub-Treasury's credit account there, but the day's balance showed the Sub-Treasury in debt to the Clearing House some $900,000. The Sub-Treasury paid out about $1,000,000 in anticipated January interest on Government bonds, without rebate.

INSURANCE COMPANIES' ASSETS.

Decline in Stocks Will Be Shown in Their Annual Reports.

The break in the value of stocks, coming so near the end of the year, is causing much anxiety among insurance men, because in their annual reports to the various State Insurance Departments on Dec. 31 the assets of their companies have to be quoted at the market values of that date.

The statements made on Dec. 31, 1898, scheduled the holdings of the companies at the top prices prevailing then. If the prices of yesterday should be maintained until the end of the year, the assets of many of the large companies would be very sensibly reduced, with particularly bad effect upon their net surpluses, especially in view of the heavy fire losses, which have operated to prevent a profit on the year's underwriting.

No two companies will be affected alike by the decline in stocks, and some companies have their assets almost entirely in bonds and guaranteed stocks. The companies which have dealt in the more speculative stocks have feared but a slight decline until recently, and sixty days ago the net difference in the value of their assets was considered a negligible quantity.

The movement of the market in the next ten days will have an unusually important interest for underwriters generally, and fire insurance companies in particular.

TRUST COMPANY'S AFFAIRS.

Edwin Gould Likely to Manage the Produce Exchange Concern If It Resumes Business.

There was no change last night in the situation in which the Produce Exchange Trust Company found itself on Monday morning. The special committee, of which Edwin Gould is Chairman, appointed by the Board of Trustees to take charge of the property of the corporation and administer its affairs to the best advantage, held a session of an hour last evening. When it ended the Secretary of the committee, S. A. Scudder, Third Vice President of the trust company, said that the committee had not made enough progress to warrant the making of a public statement.

During the day no business was transacted in the company's office, and no one but its officers was admitted to them. Notices from out-of-town banks in reference to the payment of their checks on the Produce Exchange Trust Company included: Bank of America for Exchange Bank of Albany, Ga.; Liberty National Bank for the Galeton Banking Company of Galeton, Penn.; National City Bank for the American Exchange Bank of St. Paul, Minn.; National Park Bank for the West Duluth Bank, Minnesota, and the First State Savings Bank of Three Rivers, Mich.

Edwin Gould said yesterday morning that his attitude toward the company was fully outlined in his communication to the Executive Committee of the 5th inst. To the reorganization or the winding up of the company he was willing to devote any time that might be necessary, but it seemed to him to be inadvisable to talk of progress made in any direction until some definite plan had been outlined.

Thomas A. McIntyre said that he was indifferent to the current rumors about himself, his firm, and the Produce Exchange Trust Company. Everything," he remarked, "will come out all right, of that I am certain. The company's affairs will be found in much better shape than could be expected after the stories that have appeared about it." Mr. McIntyre added that early on Monday morning it was found that $2,500,000 was needed to meet the situation, and he offered $1,500,000 of this amount. The other Trustees made no tender of the remainder.

Mr. Gould declined to discuss this assertion, but Almon Goodwin, the associate counsel of the special committee, asserted that Mr. McIntyre did not offer the sum stated, but spoke of raising $1,000,000.

A report that the affairs of the Produce Exchange Trust Company could be put into a condition of entire soundness for $800,000 was taken to a member of Mr. Gould's committee. "Yes, with less than that, if I am acquainted with the situation," he remarked. "I have great faith in the future of the company, but if it comes to liquidation we shall do very well. I find nothing but favorable indications, but we are tied up through the want of quick assets. If we could only put into its affairs one-half of the assets scheduled as 'syndicate loans,' $4,423,500, we should be put on our feet. I criticise the judgment that was exercised when the company was found to be embarrassed. I believe that had as the money situation was, we could have gone to the banks, despite their want of friendliness to the concern because of its withdrawal from Clearing House privileges, and have raised $2,000,000 on our collateral. I say this partly because I have faith in the policy of interest that should bind all banking associations, and because I am convinced that self-interest would have induced the banks to avoid a disaster to any company, on the ground that the misfortune of one is the misfortune of all.

"What the Produce Exchange Trust Company wants just now is quick assets. I haven't the slightest doubt that the depositors will be paid in full and that if we go into liquidation the stockholders will get an equivalent for their holdings. The committee has received many evidences of the faith of the depositors in its ultimate success. Some have said that they want their deposits to remain and that they are not anxious about them. Others have asked that the company be continued in business at all hazards, but under new management, and, if it be thought advisable, under a new title. Of course, if it goes on, it is fair to assume that Mr. Gould will be its President and dictate its policy."

SEABOARD LINE NOT AFFECTED.

Trust Company's Suspension Will Not Interfere with Its Plans.

John Shelton Williams, President of the Seaboard Air Line, who was in town yesterday, said: "The suspension of the Produce Exchange Trust Company will have no effect whatever upon the carrying out of our plans for the consolidation of the Seaboard Air Line system with its associated lines and the unification of this system, which will comprise more than 2,500 miles of road and form the shortest line between the North and the South.

"The connecting links, which are now rapidly approaching completion, will be opened next month. Neither the Seaboard Air Line nor any of its allied roads has ever borrowed one dollar from the Produce Exchange Trust Company, and the total amount of money which the Produce Exchange Trust Company is advancing to both the Seaboard Air Line and the Florida Central and Peninsular syndicates combined is less than $540,000. These loans are, however, backed by ample collateral, and will, of course, be promptly provided for as they mature, if they should not be paid off beforehand.

"I have seen the statement in a morning paper alleging that the Southern Railway interests, by interfering with the financial plans of the Seaboard, had blocked the proposed consolidation. It is certainly without foundation so far as it alleges that our plans have been in any way blocked."

Henry Allen & Co.'s Future in Doubt.

No decision as to the future had been arrived at last night by Henry Allen & Co., the Stock Exchange firm which on Monday found itself embarrassed in the downward course of stocks. Its members were busy yesterday with their lawyer and in communicating with customers and going over their books. One of the firm said that in such circumstances it was not easy to discover at once the exact condition of affairs and that it was probable that it would be several days before this would be known. The improved condition of the market, he added, was favorable to the interests of the firm.

International Trust Company.

William Sherer, manager of the New York Clearing House, said yesterday that he had not received notice of the selection by the International Banking and Trust Company of a new clearing agent in place of the Seventh National Bank. President Stewart Browne of the trust company said that its depositors could easily convince themselves that its affairs were in the best and most solvent condition. "We are ready," he added, "for any depositor who wants his money." The company will move May 1 next to its building, 137 Broadway, which is in course of erection.

MANY BANKS ASK FOR MONEY.

Treasury Gets Offers of $15,000,000 in Bonds Against Deposits.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The Secretary of the Treasury to-day received a large number of applications from National banks for deposits of public funds, under the Secretary's announcement of last night. At the close of business the amount of bonds which had been offered by National banks as security for such deposits was $15,000,000, from all parts of the country, but the larger number of these applications come from New York and other Eastern cities, although some have been received from the large cities of the Middle West.

Under the Secretary's offer, cash will be transferred to National banks on deposit of United States bonds to their par value, except on 3s, on which 95 per cent. will be allowed, and 2s, on which 90 per cent. will be allowed. This is an old rule, and is intended to secure the Government from possible loss by reason of temporary excess of cash on hand over bonds on deposit. As the receipts from internal-revenue do not average quite $1,000,000 a day, it is not expected that the effect of the new order will be felt for some days to come.

It is stated that in making allotments of funds the department will discourage the purchase of bonds on the part of banks seeking deposits, for the reason that if the banks should go into the market for this purpose it probably would put up the price, which would be against the interests of the Government, which is itself in the market for the purchase of about $5,000,000 now remaining unoffered under the Secretary's recent proposition to purchase $25,000,000.

Representative Levy of New York to-day introduced in the House a bill to amend the Revised Statutes to permit the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit in his discretion with the National banks of the United States the customs receipts of the United States, and providing that the Secretary of the Treasury shall establish a rate of interest to be paid by the National banks on all moneys deposited with them.

A visitor to the Treasury Department today had a lecture with him the delivery of which created some astonishment. He considered the Treasury greatly to blame for the disturbed condition of things in New York. "Instead of increasing the amount of United States deposits in the banks," he said, "they should be reduced. The possession of such large deposits, with the temptations about that have been so freely offered of late to acquire interest in shaky undertakings have served to stimulate men who found it easy to run banks and borrow money that they would have done without if it had not been so accessible. This money has been used to inflate schemes of doubtful value, and when more money was needed to throw after that already invested these speculators ran to the banks and borrowed more. As long as the Treasury kindly keeps the banks well supplied with money the borrowers will draw upon the deposits. The mistake is in the Treasury attempting to go into business with these kite-flyers, which it seems to me has been the case."

ECKELS ON THE PANIC.

Ex-Controller Says the Flurry Is Merely Temporary and Will Leave No Serious Effects.

Special to The New York Times.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Dec. 19.—Ex-Controller J. H. Eckels is here to-day in attendance upon the annual banquet of the Kansas City Commercial Club, which he addressed to-night on the subject, "Banking and Currency." Concerning the flurry in Wall Street he said:

"This is only a temporary condition. It comes from a tight money market, caused in a large measure by the disturbed conditions abroad. London has need for all the gold she can get. Her African supply, amounting to about $6,000,000 a month, has been cut off. This in itself is a serious blow. Abroad the money ordinarily needed in commercial undertakings is lessened until there is no money left for speculative investments. This has had the effect of causing those in England and on the Continent to drop their speculative ventures suddenly.

"As soon as there is one decisive British victory in Africa we will see a decided change, and the markets will assume normal conditions.

"There is great prosperity in the United States. The people here are less in debt than they were ten years ago. Agricultural products are higher than for several years. Railroad earnings are high. The country generally is in splendid condition, and we shall soon see the flurry pass without serious consequences.

"I notice it is stated that Secretary Gage is going to make additional deposits in the New York banks. I trust this is so. As long as we have a Sub-Treasury system that takes out of the channels of trade and commerce each day so much money and locks it up in idleness, the Secretary ought to exert every power to lessen, as much as possible, its evil effects. This he is undertaking to do, and for doing it he is entitled to everybody's appreciation and not criticism.

"I am confident that the whole thing will exhaust itself in the present flurry, and at the end all stocks will be in stronger hands than before the slump set in."

Mr. Eckels forecasted the National political situation in the following words:

"The man who is nominated at the next National Democratic Convention will never be elected. The Democratic Party is divided against itself. Four years from the next election possibly the Democracy may unite to name a more formidable candidate than it can to-day."

GEN. LAWTON KILLED BY FILIPINO BULLET

moted Major General of Volunteers July 8, 1898.

RECEIVES PRESIDENT'S THANKS.

Last Winter, when it became apparent that there was to be serious fighting with the insurgents in the Philippines, Gen. Lawton was assigned to duty there. He left this city on the transport Grant Jan. 19, 1899, and took the field immediately upon his arrival at Manila. His brigade participated in the hardest fighting of last Spring, and captured, among other towns, Santa Cruz, San Rafael, and San Isidro, the last-named place having been the insurgent capital until Aguinaldo's forces were driven out of it.

After the capture of San Isidro by Gen. Lawton, President McKinley sent him the following dispatch:

"To Otis, Manila: Convey to Gen. Lawton and the gallant men of his command, my congratulations upon the successful operations during the past month, resulting in the capture this morning of San Isidro. WILLIAM McKINLEY."

This dispatch was dated from Hot Springs, Va., May 17, 1899.

Early in October Gen. Lawton resumed offensive operations, and his command was constantly on the move, and often engaged with the enemy from that time until his death.

PROMOTION WAS COMING.

In his battles in the Philippines Gen. Lawton never took any precautions for his personal safety. On the contrary, he exposed himself to the constant fire of the enemy by wearing a conspicuous uniform and riding a large horse. His absolute indifference to danger, coupled with his prominence in the fighting line, made him a target for the Filipino sharpshooters, but until the day the fatal bullet struck him he seemed to bear a charmed life.

Had Gen. Lawton lived he would have received his commission as a Brigadier General in the regular service within a few weeks. On Monday night the President gave instructions to prepare his commission as a Brigadier General to fill one of the existing vacancies and the Adjutant General's clerks were at work on the commission when the information of Gen. Lawton's death was conveyed to the department. He would easily have attained the grade of Major General before his retirement, which would not have taken place until 1907.

Gen. Lawton's wife was Miss Craig of Redlands, Cal.

THE GOVERNOR A MOURNER.

Deplores the Loss of One of the Army's Ablest Generals.

ALBANY, Dec. 19.—Upon being informed of the death of Major Gen. Lawton, Gov. Roosevelt to-day paid the following glowing tribute to the memory of the deceased soldier:

"I feel most deeply grieved over the death of Gen. Lawton. At Santiago as in the Philippines he showed himself one of the ablest Generals, and one of the most gallant soldiers in the entire American Army. I esteemed him greatly, and I mourn his loss as I know all the country must."

FOR A STATUE OF LAWTON.

Indianapolis Men Recommend that a Monument Be Erected.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Dec. 19.—The Commercial Club was holding a meeting in its rooms when the news of the death in the Philippines of Major Gen. Lawton was received by the President, Capt. W. E. English, who served with Gen. Lawton during the Spanish-American war. Capt. English immediately offered a resolution to the effect that Gen. Lawton's gallant services to the country should be fittingly recognized by the State of Indiana in a heroic-sized statue, to be placed in Monument Circle. The resolution, which follows, was unanimously adopted:

"The board deplores the death of the gallant Indiana soldier, Gen. Lawton, and recommends that a bronze statue of Gen. Lawton be erected by the State of Indiana on Monument Place, as a representative of the State for the Spanish-American war period."

KING'S TRIBUTE TO LAWTON.

As Friend He Was as Lovable as He Was Heroic as a Soldier.

MILWAUKEE, Dec. 19.—Gen. Charles King, who commanded a brigade in Gen. Lawton's division up to June last in the war against the Filipinos, was much depressed on hearing of the death of his former commander. Gen. King paid a warm tribute to the dead General in the following words:

"The death of Gen. Lawton is a calamity, yet one I have been in dread of ever since he took command of our division last March. In point of dash, energy, and endurance he was one of our best. His one fault lay in his utter contempt for danger. We could not prevail upon him to use cover or shelter of any kind. He was continually running into every kind of danger, exposing himself to death or capture when there was no need of it. He wanted to see everything for himself, and would stalk out in front of the lines, the most prominent figure on the field.

"We loved him; we always have, ever since old cavalry days, when he was the hardest and most daring of all the band of young officers that won distinction under Crook, Miles, and Merritt. He was MacKenzie's 'right bower,' and his later work in the Philippines was incomparable. As friend and comrade he was as lovable as he was great and heroic as a soldier."

LAWTON'S STORY OF HIS BIRTH.

TOLEDO, Ohio, Dec. 19.—Last month the Maumee Valley Pioneer Association made Gen. Lawton an honorary member, and his reply to a letter of Secretary J. L. Pray acknowledging the courtesy was received from Manila only a few days ago. In this letter he wrote:

"I have observed that there has been some controversy among some of my friends relative to the place of my birth, and that there may be no misapprehension on that point with the Maumee Valley Pioneer Association I desire to state that I was born in Manhattan, near Toledo, Ohio, March 17, 1843, although my parents removed almost immediately to Maumee City, Ohio, where I spent my boyhood."

OTIS REPORTS LAWTON'S DEATH.

Sends the Official News to the War Department.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The War Department to-night received from Gen. Otis the following official confirmation of the killing of Gen. Lawton near San Mateo, Luzon.

"Manila, Dec. 19.

"Gen. Lawton, engaged in driving insurgents from San Mateo section of country northeast of Manila, killed instantly at 9:30 yesterday morning. A great loss to us and his country."

Comrades Planned a Testimonial.

FORT WAYNE, Ind., Dec. 19.—Gen. Lawton was a member of Sion S. Bass Post, G. A. R. The post had raised a fund of nearly $1,000 to purchase a testimonial sword, which was to have been presented to Gen. Lawton upon his return from the Philippines.

FILIPINO LEADER TALKS.

Mabini Says If Natives Are Satisfied with Form of Government Guerrilla Warfare Will End.

MANILA, Dec. 19.—Mabini, formerly a member of the Filipino Cabinet, and considered the strongest and brainiest follower of the insurrection, said to-day:

"The future peace of the Philippines depends entirely upon the form of government the Americans establish. We are vanquished because we lacked food and munitions and mismanaged our affairs. But the spirit of independence is craving for recognition. The individuality of the Filipino people still lives. If the Government eventually established here is liberal, secure, and free, the satisfaction and contentment of the people will result. And there will be no trouble. If it be otherwise, the people will be dissatisfied and will materially and mentally sympathize with and aid the revolutionary movement which will surely occur sooner or later. Without the people's support such a movement is impossible.

"Everything depends on what the Americans do. The subsequent guerrilla warfare will be easily terminated if the people do not support it, which they will not do if they are satisfied. Otherwise, it is possible, to prolong it indefinitely.

"I believe the Filipino people should be consulted as to the nature and details of the Government to be established. If the war results in the recognition of our desires, rights, and necessities as a people to be governed, it will not have been in vain."

Mabini spoke unofficially, expressing his own opinions.

AMERICANS CAUGHT IN A TRAP.

Ambushed in the Philippines and Forced to Retreat.

MANILA, Nov. 21.—Belated mail reports have reached Manila of an expedition on the Island of Cebu last month by a small force of American soldiers of the Sixth Infantry, which was repulsed by insurgents mainly through the desertion of native allies upon whom the Americans depended. Two of the Americans were killed and two wounded, and in the force of native police accompanying them one was killed and four wounded. No official report of the affair has reached Gen. Otis, and consequently the censor refused to permit the incident to be cabled.

The American commander at headquarters in the town of Cabu received information that a force of insurgents had occupied the village of Maulbaulon on the west coast of the island, that they were levying heavy taxes and taking food and horses, and that the villagers would be glad to have them driven away.

Capt. Walker took a detachment of ten soldiers aboard the steam launch Powerful on the 14th of October and proceeded along the coast, stopping at the towns of Naga and Carcal, where ten men were added to the force from each garrison.

At the latter town a body of 160 native policemen, who were friendly to the Americans, were mustered into the service by their Captain, Señor Mejia. These natives were armed with spears and bolos, and had but a few guns. On the evening of the 15th, the Powerful reached Maulbaul, and her passengers were landed with difficulty through a rough sea. The insurgents had retreated to the hills, so the forces camped for the night. Early in the morning they went on the march.

For three miles they advanced along a narrow road with the sea on one side and high cliffs on the other. Finally they were compelled to enter a rocky pass, approaching it across a bridge so narrow that they were compelled to march two abreast. Just as they entered the pass there was a great explosion almost in their faces, and they were covered by a shower of soft earth. The insurgents had prepared a gunpowder mine to annihilate the party, but the soil and the rocks were so powdery that the Americans suffered no injuries beyond bruises.

The explosion was followed by a brief but exciting experience. Immediately after the report the Filipinos hidden in the cliffs opened fire. Two Americans and five natives fell at the first volley, which came from very short range. The commander of the police was hit in the hand and a pair of field glasses which he carried were shattered. The police were thrown into confusion, and after a moment's hesitation they fell back and began to run, leaving the few Americans to bear the attack. This the men of the Sixth did bravely. They rallied in order, carrying their dead and wounded and returning the insurgent fire with such effect that eighteen of the enemy were killed. The party returned to Maulbaul and re-embarked for Cebu, where they arrived the following day with their dead and wounded. The conduct of the native police found some excuse in their poor equipment.

NATIVE POLICE MUTINY.

Insurgents Driven from Panay to Negros Create Trouble.

MANILA, Dec. 19.—The Panay insurgents have been driven out and Gen. Hughes is passing to Negros, where they are creating trouble. Two hundred recent arrivals there from Panay ambushed Lieut. A. C. Ledyard with a party of fifteen men of the Sixth Infantry. It was in this fight that Lieut. Ledyard was killed, falling in the second volley.

Col. Smith, Governor of Negros Island, has been obliged to arrest several prominent natives on charge of conspiracy. The native municipal constabulary in three towns recently mutinied and went into the mountains, but the native soldiery are reported loyal.

SICK SOLDIERS COME HOME.

Transport Arrives with 78 Men—Four Die on the Voyage from Manila.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 19.—The transport City of Rio de Janeiro has arrived from Manila with several officers on leave and a number of sick and discharged soldiers. Patrick Fleary, Thirty-fifth Infantry, died on the outward voyage, and the following soldiers, invalided home, died on the way from Manila:

Fred A. Walker, Company D, Ninth Infantry; Hamilton F. Markland, discharged, Sergeant, Battery D, Sixth Artillery; John Bender, Sergeant, Company B, Ninth Infantry, and James C. Gardner, Corporal, Company B, Third Infantry.

Eight insane men were brought home. They are W. A. O'Neill, F. K. Mulner, G. W. Decker, D. E. Young, G. M. Barton, Joseph Hoffman, L. Ford, and F. Thayer.

The sick number seventy-eight non-commissioned officers and men, most of whom are suffering from dysentery, though some were wounded in battle. They will be transferred to the Military Hospital at the Presidio after the transport, which was placed in quarantine to-day, has been docked.

The following officers arrived on the ship: Major Noble, Twenty-fourth Infantry, on sick leave; Capt. French, Sixteenth Infantry; Capt. A. A. Augur, Twenty-fourth Infantry, and Capt. Rodgers, Twentieth Infantry, on recruiting duty; Capt. Poindexter, Medical Department, sick leave; Capt. Dunning, Sixteenth Infantry, recruiting duty; Lieut. P. Schaffer, Thirteenth Infantry, sick leave; Lieut. W. A. Leiabot, Twenty-third Infantry, recruiting, and Lieuts. Titus, Heffelfinger, and Pray, Acting Assistant Surgeons.

The transport is to be turned over to its owners, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

PRIESTS AID THE JUNTA.

Gen. Otis Reports Two Participated in the Negros Uprising.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Gen. Otis to-day cabled the War Department as follows:

"MANILA, Dec. 19, 1899.

"Information from Hongkong and Negros shows that late Negros uprising was work of Hongkong Junta. Three junta agents visited Negros in the latter part of November and took in 300 Tagalos from Panay and much junta literature which they circulated. They announced great victories in Luzon, that insurgent independence would be recognized soon by the United States, and warned Negros of punishment in store and directed an uprising throughout the island for Dec. 2.

"The result was gathering of a few hundred of the ignorant masses and robbers and consequent fright of the better element. Gen. Smith has imposed on the towns concerned a fine to be paid into the general treasury. He reports the guilt of two priests and says American clergymen are needed. The Negros would be easily controlled if left to themselves, but fear Tagalo vengeance when Aguinaldo fully establishes himself by driving the Americans out of Luzon. The most improbable statements are believed by ignorant natives."

SELF-RULE FOR FILIPINOS.

De Armond in the House Offers Resolution Similar to Bacon's.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Representative De Armond of Missouri introduced in the House to-day a resolution declaring the purpose of the United States in the Philippines.

After quoting from the Declaration of Independence regarding the inalienable rights of man, it declares that under the Constitution the Federal Government has no power to rule over colonial dependencies; that the expansion of our commerce cannot be dependent upon a policy of imperialism involving subjugation and annexation of Asiatic colonies, and that "we are opposed to the retention of the Philippines, and that it is our purpose to consent to their independence as soon as a stable Government shall be established by them, and toward the prompt establishment of such a Government we pledge our friendly assistance."

Dewey Wants Chinese Admitted.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Admiral Dewey has renewed his request that the Chinese who served with him during the battle of Manila Bay be given the right to enter the United States free of restrictions, in a letter to Secretary Long, which has been forwarded to Congress for consideration.

A Volunteer Deserter Caught.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Dec. 19.—John W. Coleman, aged nineteen, of Cohoes, was arrested last night on the New York Central Railroad, where he was stealing a ride. He enlisted in one of the volunteer regiments now in Manila and deserted from Camp Meade, Aug. 23. He changed his soldier uniform for a naval uniform and passed himself off as a sailor of the Indiana. He will be taken to West Point to-morrow.

AEOLIAN TRUST FORMED.

Self-Playing Musical Instruments and Perforated Sheet Music Industries Under Control of One Company.

Special to The New York Times.

MERIDEN, Conn., Dec. 19.—The Aeolian Company of this city has practically completed its plans for the concentration of its newly acquired properties at Garwood, N. J., on the line of the New Jersey Central. The Aeolian Company has absorbed the Votey Company of Detroit, Mich., and the Vocalion Company of Worcester, Mass., thus securing entire control of the self-playing musical instruments as well as of the perforated sheet music industries in the country.

The Detroit plant will be removed as soon as suitable buildings can be erected for it, and one of the conditions of the removal is that the Aeolian shall have the privilege of renaming the town. The contract will be awarded to the H. Wales Lines Company of this city. The buildings are to be ready for occupancy next Spring, and will furnish employment for 800 workmen. The Worcester plant will be removed as soon as practicable after the Detroit plant is installed, but the factory in this city will continue to be run as heretofore for many years, and Superintendent Chase said to-day it may never be removed.

The Aeolian Company was organized as the Aeolian Organ and Music Company in 1887, and was capitalized at $225,000. Its officers are W. B. Tremaine of New York, President and General Manager; John C. Schooley, New York, Treasurer, and John H. Chase of this city, Secretary and Superintendent. The works here employ about 200 hands.

Northwestern Elevated Cannot Complete Its Structure by Jan. 1.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 19.—In despair of completing the Northwestern Elevated Road before Jan. 1 in accordance with the mandate of the Council, the officials of the line, through their attorney, to-day asked the Committee on Railways to grant them more favorable terms than those specified in the sub-ordinance prepared by the corporation counsel.

Alderman Mavor and his associates deferred an answer until after a conference to be held to-morrow. Acting on the suggestion of Mayor Harrison, the committee, it is understood, will not recede from the terms dictated to President Louderbach two weeks ago.

HUTCHINSON'S DIVORCE IS VOID.

Oklahoma Court Annuls Decree Obtained by New York Man.

Special to The New York Times.

PERRY, Oklahoma, Dec. 19.—The divorce decree of W. F. Hutchinson of NewYork was declared null and void in court here to-day. Hutchinson was given a divorce from his wife, Mary E. Hutchinson of Lynn, Mass., in January last on the ground of abandonment. He alleged that his wife sold out his beautiful home in Passaic, N. J., in 1895, and left with his child while he was away from home.

When Hutchinson obtained his divorce he went to New York, his former home. His wife learned of the divorce she began a suit to set it aside on the ground of fraud and false charges. The court opened the case and to-day declared the divorce null and void.

It is said that Hutchinson has married a well-known society woman since his return to New York City.

PORT JERVIS BANK SUSPENDS.

Embarrassed by Goldsmith's Defalcation and Bank Failure Here.

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., Dec. 19.—The National Bank of Port Jervis suspended this morning. The Directors held a meeting at 7 o'clock, and soon afterward this notice was attached to the front door:

"Whereas, This bank has been unable to realize upon its securities so as to provide funds at once for the immediate use of the bank; and,

"Whereas, Some portion of its funds has been rendered unavailable by the failure of one of the depositories in the City of New York;

"Resolved, That this bank forthwith close its doors and suspend the transaction of business temporarily and until such time as it can realize the necessary funds."

In an interview President Marvin stated that the defalcation of Assistant Cashier Goldsmith was the primary cause of the suspension. A quiet but steady withdrawal of deposits followed, and yesterday the failure of the Produce Exchange Trust Company, which was a depository of the bank's funds, still further crippled it. The condition of the bank shows ample assets to pay all depositors.

Continuing, Mr. Marvin said: "The cause of the suspension is simply the inability to turn the bills receivable into cash on the instant so as to meet immediate demands. It is hoped the period of suspension will be but brief."

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Word has been received at the offices of the Controller of the Currency that the National Bank of Port Jervis, N. Y., closed its doors to-day. I. C. Moore, National Bank Examiner, has been placed in charge as temporary receiver. Following is the statement of the condition of the bank on Dec. 5 last, according to its own report:

Capital stock, $130,000; surplus and profits, $46,511; circulation, $31,500; deposits, $414,391; due to banks, &c., $3,886; borrowed money, $57,806. Total resources, $683,601.

CHICAGO UNIVERSITY IN NEED.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 19.—The Wall Street stock flurry has hampered Dr. Harper in his efforts to raise the remainder of the $1,000,000 required by Jan. 1 in order that the University of Chicago may secure John D. Rockefeller's provisional gift of $1,000,000. This statement was made to members of the Junior College by the President to-day.

The students present were those who have completed the first two years' work. The President was giving them advice as to preparations for their public appearance at the convocation exercises Jan. 2. He said: "Come ready to make an enthusiastic demonstration in case somebody in the audience should announce a gift of $100,000 for the university, for you know such things have happened in the institution's history. Yesterday was a blue Monday for the college. Until 11 o'clock at night I was in conference with wealthy men, and I never saw such disquiet among them. The events which took place recently in Wall Street have had the effect of drawing many purse strings tighter, but I hope to have the amount made up on convocation day."

Dr. Harper refused to say anything as to the amount still required.

ROUGH RIDERS FOR BULLER

Great Britain to Enlist 10,000 Expert Horsemen.

ONLY THE BEST TO BE CHOSEN

Lord Mayor Newton of London Is Equipping a Thousand City Volunteers at Citizens' Expense.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—The Government has at last consented to mobilize a force which Gen. Buller is credited with having demanded all along as an essential of success in South Africa, namely, 10,000 mounted infantry. This morning the War Office issued an order to the effect that the Government had decided to raise for South Africa a mounted infantry force, to be called Imperial Yeomanry and to be recruited from yeomanry, volunteers, and civilians possessed of the requisite qualifications.

Enlistment will be for one year, or during the continuance of the war The men must be between twenty and thirty-five years of age, and of equal physique to the ordinary cavalry soldier. Officers and men are to provide their own horses and to wear neutral tintcloth shooting jackets, not necessarily uniform, felt hats, breeches, and gaiters. All must be good riders and marksmen. They will be similar to the American Rough Riders.

The same order invites every volunteer regiment that is linked with a regular battalion serving at the front to supply a full company, which will take the place of the mounted infantry of the regiment.

These arrangements are expected to result in a considerable force. The enrolled strength of the yeomanry forces, which originated in the troublous period of the French Revolution, is now 10,433. Their services have never before been called for in war.

The Lord Mayor of London, Alfred Newton, is raising and equipping a force of 1,000 volunteers among the City Corps. The large city firms are contributing the necessary expenses.

Col. Sir Charles Howard Vincent, Commandant of the Queen's Westminster Volunteers, has also offered to raise a regiment of 1,000 picked marksmen.

The enthusiasm of volunteer enlistments continues and promises to give the Government ample material.

Mr. Rudyard Kipling addressed a meeting at Rottingdean last evening, called for the purpose of forming a volunteer company.

The Queen has announced her intention of entertaining at Windsor Castle on Dec. 26 the wives and children of soldiers serving in South Africa who reside in the neighborhood. Tea will be served, her Majesty probably presiding in person, and a Christmas tree twenty-five feet high will hang with gifts.

The British second-class cruiser Isis will convey Gen. Lord Kitchener from Egypt to the Cape. She has been ordered to steam at sixteen knots.

The latest news from Gen. Methuen, dated Dec. 17, indicated that the situation appeared to be a complete impasse. The Boers were gathering reinforcements and extending their fortifications on both his flanks, but it was believed they would be unable to attack the British position. On the other hand, it was regarded as impossible for the British to turn the Boers' flank, which was resting on the river to the east and rapidly approaching the river to the west. The Boer lines of intrenchments are continuous, and capable of rapid connection at many points.

Some of the papers express considerable misgivings at troops going from India to South Africa. They think the risks too great, and that it may lead to two continents being ablaze instead of one.

The most ample recognition is given in the press to the great outburst of loyalty in Canada, and the remarks of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Premier, and the Cabinet, as representative of both the English and French sections, are specially welcomed.

ISSUE OF CONSOLS DISCUSSED.

Not Believed that Over £10,000,000 Can Be Floated Now.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—The Daily Chronicle, in its financial article this morning, says:

"The fear of a large new issue of consols undoubtedly overhangs the market. Already the price at which the Government could place them is being discussed. On Monday some leading financiers thought the issue might be made at 95. Yesterday (Tuesday) 90 seemed more like the figure at which £10,000,000 could be sold; but the Government could not put out a larger amount just now at any figure."

GEN. BULLER WAS IN COMMAND.

Dispatches Show that He Directed the Fighting at Tugela River.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—Special reports regarding the fighting at Tugela River are still filtering through, but all the newspapers complain that these are severely censored, and it is still impossible to get an accurate idea of the battle. From the latest accounts, however, it appears that Gen. Buller was in personal command.

A correspondent at Chieveley Camp says the Boers excuse themselves for firing on the stretcher bearers by asserting that two squads of the Connaught Rangers took cover under civilian bearers of the Red Cross, and that this act drew the Boer fire, three being killed and several wounded.

Much anxiety is caused by the fact that the War Office has not yet received a full list of the casualties at Tugela River.

GREAT BRITAIN'S YEOMANRY.

Ancient Organization That May Go to the Front.

If the British Yeomanry are allowed to volunteer for service in South Africa in any number, many of the best-known noblemen and public men in the United Kingdom will go to the front. The yeomanry is the cavalry branch of the militia, but its organization differs considerably from that of either the militia or the volunteers. Military historians find it impossible to trace the origin of the yeomanry, but it is agreed that it is one of the most ancient of the military institutions of Great Britain.

Toward the end of the last century the yeomanry were entitled "Gentlemen and Yeomanry," which indicates that in earlier days the force was constituted in the same way as at present—landed proprietors as officers, and farmers and tradesmen of country towns and villages as the rank and file.

The yeomanry, at the beginning of this year, consisted, including the staff, of 11,891 men and officers. The troops are well trained, having to assemble for drilling and shooting practice a certain number of days in the year. The annual gathering of the yeomanry is always an event of importance in country towns, and balls and other functions are arranged in their honor.

Among the prominent men who, as Lieutenant Colonels of regiments, will go to the front should the War Office decide to accept the offers of service, are the following:

Lord Willoughby de Broke and the Marquis of Hertford of the Warwickshire Regiment; Lord Chesham, (Buckinghamshire;) Viscount Ebrington, (Devonshire;) the Marquis of Worcester, (Gloucestershire;) Lord Harris and Sir Fitzroy Donald Maclean, (Kent;) Lord Gerard, (Lancashire;) Viscount Galway, (Nottinghamshire;) Viscount Valentia, M. P., (Oxfordshire;) Viscount Bungarvan, (Somersetshire;) the Earl of Lonsdale, (Westmoreland and Cumberland;) the Right Hon. Walter Hume Long, M. P., (Wiltshire;) Lord Windsor, (Worcestershire;) Lord Bolton, (Yorkshire;) the Earl of Scarborough,) Yorkshire Dragoons;) the Hon. Osbert William Craven, brother of the Earl of Craven, (Berkshire;) Sir Simon Macdonald-Lockhart, (Lanarkshire;) Sir William A. Baillie-Hamilton, (Lothians and Berwickshire;) Sir Herbert L. W. Williams-Wynn, (Montgomeryshire,) and Sir Charles Edward Gregg Phillips, (Pembrokeshire.)

Besides these, the officers of lower rank include many famous names. The Earl of Durham, for instance, is an officer in the yeomanry. It is no exaggeration to say that many of the noble families in Great Britain will, should this force be sent to the front, have nearly all their members except those who are under age, in South Africa.

ANGRY WITH DR. ANDREWS.

Chicago Alderman Objects to His Pro-British Opinions.

CHICAGO, Dec. 19.—Public advocacy of Great Britain's side in the South African war by Dr. E. Benjamin Andrews, Superintendent of Public Schools in Chicago, was the cause of resolutions being introduced in the City Council last evening calling for his resignation or his immediate suspension and removal from his position by the Board of Education should he ignore an invitation to step down.

The head of the public schools was subjected to a heated denunciation by Alderman Cullerton, the mover of the resolutions. The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Schools.

MAY CALL PORTUGAL TO ACCOUNT.

Great Britain May Interfere to Cease Transvaal Supplies.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—The Standard hints editorially this morning that if Portugal continues to allow supplies of war material and foreign volunteers to reach the Transvaal through Delagoa Bay, England will have something to say in the matter.

RECRUITING AGENT ARRESTED.

N. S. Peverill Detained at Rochester for Enlisting Men to Fight with the British.

ROCHESTER, Dec. 19.—For the past two days an innocent-looking notice has been published in local papers asking "single young men wishing to see service with the 'British' in South Africa," to communicate with N. S. Peverill, 15 Concord Avenue, this city. In response to it, so Mr. Peverill said in an interview to-day, thirteen men who want to see service against the Boers, or at least who are willing to enter the army in Canada, have made application for enlistment.

Mr. Peverill added:

"I want to say that I am not enlisting men for war purposes. There are no signed papers transferred between the men who hand their names in to me and myself. I am simply asking men who want to go to Canada to see service to hand their names to me."

Late this afternoon United States Commissioner Stull caused Peverill's arrest. He was taken before Commissioner Stull, and admitted to bail. He will be given a hearing on Monday next.

QUEEN CONDOLES WITH ROBERTS.

Thanks Bereaved General for Going to South Africa.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—The Queen has sent a letter to Gen. Lord Roberts, the newly appointed Commander in Chief of the British forces in South Africa, warmly sympathizing with him on the death of his gallant son and thanking him for the great patriotism he has displayed in putting aside his terrible private grief in order to devote himself to the affairs of the nation.

American Driven from Transvaal.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—Joseph Kirkland of Chicago, accompanied by his sister, has arrived in London from Johannesburg, whence they had to flee with other refugees, despite their Boer sympathies. Mr. Kirkland was manager of an important business there and was compelled to leave so hurriedly that he had to abandon his horses and carriages, as well as other belongings, which the Boers promptly appropriated.

Fired On by a British Warship.

MADRID, Dec 19.—The Spanish steamer Ciudad de Cadiz, which has just arrived at Las Palmas, Canary Islands, from Cadiz, reports that she was pursued and overhauled last Saturday by a British cruiser, which fired guns, compelling her to heave to, interrogated her as to name and route, and then allowed her to proceed.

Services for the Dead Soldiers.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—A most impressive memorial service was held in St. Paul's Cathedral this afternoon in memory of the soldiers killed in South Africa. The Lord Mayor, Mr. A. J. Newton, and the city officials attended in their robes of office. The Cathedral was thronged, those present including the Duke of Cambridge and the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Secretary of State for War.

Australia Sends Hospital Corps.

SYDNEY, N. S. W., Dec. 19.—The Government of this colony has decided to send a field hospital corps and a battery of artillery to South Africa in addition to the mounted contingent.

Britain's Losses Interest the Kaiser.

BERLIN, Dec. 19.—Emperor William is said to exhibit the keenest personal concern regarding the war in South Africa, especially the fate of the British troops. Each day he receives dispatches showing the latest losses, and these he communicates to the German Princes, who, like himself, have blood ties with England.

War Delays Transatlantic Mails.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—The Post Office has issued a notice to the effect that, owing to the Majestic, Britannic, and Cymric being taken as transports, no White Star Line steamers will go to New York Dec. 27 or Jan. 3. Letters for the United States and Canada will not be dispatched Dec. 27. Letters posted next week will be forwarded by a Cunard Line steamer Dec. 30. The midweek mails will be forwarded by the North German Lloyd Line steamer Trave Jan. 3.

Fund for British Soldiers' Families.

CAMDEN, N. J., Dec. 19.—A movement has been started in this city by the Order of the Sons of St. George to raise a fund for the widows and orphans of the British soldiers killed in the Transvaal, and is meeting with a promising response from the various lodges throughout the country. In Camden and Philadelphia contributions amounting to over $500 have been made, with several lodges yet to be heard from. The three lodges at Trenton have subscribed $1,000. The Grand Lodge of this State and the Supreme Lodge at Chicago have become interested in the fund and the Chicago lodges have pledged $51,000.

"A GREEK SLAVE" TO TRAVEL.

It has been definitely decided to terminate on Saturday night the engagement of "A Greek Slave," which has been presented at the Herald Square Theatre for the last five weeks. This production has suffered one of the roughest experiences that have befallen any piece thus far shown in New York this season. After the close of the comic opera's career in this city William Winterfield, who has financed it, will find that the production has cost him close to $30,000.

Mr. Winterfield last night said that as a musician he felt competent enough to judge what is good or bad in a comic opera. In London last Spring he witnessed a performance of "A Greek Slave." He became enamored of its merits and forthwith opened negotiations for the purchase of the rights from the Augustin Daly estate. He visited the theatre in London where the opera was given six times, and then came home, prepared to back his judgment with the necessary cash, and even now, in spite of the heavy losses thus far sustained, Mr. Winterfield still has confidence in the production. He will take it on the road, beginning with a three weeks' engagement at the Columbia Theatre, in Boston.

Mr. Winterfield said that he had been negotiating with several prominent theatrical managers of this city who are desirous of purchasing the rights, but that he thought he was able to retrieve his losses alone.

"The whole trouble," said Mr. Winterfield, "is that I am not a theatrical man myself, and was forced to accept the judgment of others. I was in the West when the cast was engaged, or I would have insisted upon many changes. I deposited a guarantee of $3,300 to open on a date when those in charge of the rehearsals knew it was not possible to get the production ready at that time. Notwithstanding all this, I consider 'A Greek Slave' a splendid piece of property."

New Jersey School Organization.

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 19.—About 200 representatives of School Boards throughout the State met in the Senate Chamber to-day and organized the New Jersey School Board Association and adopted a constitution and elected officers. H. Brewster Willis of Middlesex was elected President. President Willis said there was no foundation for the claim that the organization was being formed in opposition to the State Teachers' Association.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Vanderbilt in Newport.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Dec. 19.—Mr. and Mrs. George W. Vanderbilt were here to-day and current report has it they are looking for a cottage for next season.

CANADIAN SOCIETY DINES.

Sir Roderick Cameron Talks of Canada's Future and the War in South Africa.

The Canadian Society held its third annual Christmastide dinner at the Hotel St. Andrew last evening, and had for its guests Sir Roderick Cameron, Frederick Massey, and M. J. McDougal. Women were present for the first time at a society dinner, and apparently took as much interest as the men in the speeches for Anglo-American friendship and responded heartily to the toasts drunk standing to the Queen and President McKinley. The Rev. Dr. Edward H. Krans, President of the society, presided. Speeches were made by Dr. Krans, Dr. Wolfred Nelson, Sir Roderick Cameron, and others.

Sir Roderick, in the course of his remarks, said that he had great hopes of the Dominion of Canada. "The people of the north,' he went on, "have always been famous fighters, and some day I think the Canadian people will be the ruling power on this continent. [Cries of "Hear, hear," and subdued laughter.] I am as confident of that as I am of anything. If ever there is a change, I believe the Dominion of Canada will anex the whole of New England, such parts of New York as she sees fit, and may extend her new teritory out into the Western plains."

Later, referring to the Transvaal war, he said: "I don't object to a little bloodletting now and then. I don't sympathize with the idea that the latter days of her Majesty's reign are going to be sad ones. The army that England has sent out in a little over six months is the largest one ever put out. In the French or German war there was not at any time an army of over 80,000."

Here Sir Roderick was interrupted by one of his friends at the guest's table, who in an undertone seemed to question his statement referring to the "largest army."

"Well, so far as the Transvaal war is concerned," he said, "it will be over in less than ninety days. No doubt Oom Paul now is ready to sue for peace."

Then Sir Roderick, with a passing reference to the late battles, said that an Englishman never knows when he is beaten, and he never allows himself to know it. Great Britain's victory, he said, would make an impression on the whole world. Sir Roderick was heartily cheered when he sat down.

Dr. Krans spoke for friendship between the two nations of England and America and said that the moral support of this country so unreservedly manifested by the organs of public opinion for England will never be forgotten.

Dr. Nelson said: "As a Canadian of mixed descent, English and French, and as a former Canadian volunteer, I wish to emphatically contradict a statement that has appeared in some newspapers on this side of the border. It has been stated that our French-Canadians are not loyal to Canada and the Throne of Great Britain. This pernicious falsehood was sent by a press correspondent in Canada to an American paper. It is false, wilfully false, in every fibre of its make-up."

SIGNALS FROM THE GRAVE.

Gilt Hall, Bell, Skyrocket, Bomb, and Lamp in a Contrivance to Prevent Premature Burial.

At the Academy of Medicine last night was exhibited a novel contrivance for the prevention of premature burials. The device is the invention of Count Michel de Karnice Karnicki, Chamberlain of the Emperor of Russia, and has been brought here by M. Emile Camis of Paris.

The apparatus used for the demonstration presented a gruesome spectacle. On the platform rested a coffin, with the front side left out to give a view of the interior. Four stanchions 6 feet high, corresponding to the depth of a grave, supported a scaffolding, upon which rested the apparatus proper.

"La Karnice," as the Russian invention is called, consists of an iron box about two feet square, from the under side of which a four-inch iron tube extends downward and fits into a hole in the coffin near its head. Through this tube extends a small iron rod, having at the lower end a rather ornate handle extending to within five inches of the chest of the body. The latter was represented last night by an exceedingly live French youth. The upper end of the bar connects with the mechanism in the box above.

On the outside of this box is rigged a large gilt ball on a six-foot lever, which, when the instrument is wound up, is held in a horizontal position by a sort of trigger. The grave is supposed now to have been filled in, leaving the box of machinery and the gilt ball inert on top. No one is supposed to be left in the vicinity except the cemetery keeper or gravedigger.

"Now we will suppose the body suddenly comes to life," said the man, whom Mr. Camis delegated to explain the contrivance, addressing the audience, which looked rather uncomfortable. "Which will you have the corpse do, pull the rod at his breast or push it? It works perfectly either way. Pull it? Very well, then."

At a signal the recumbent youth in the coffin pulled the rod. Instantly on top of the supposed grave the gilt ball flew up on its lever with a bang. The lid of the machinery box flew open, and a bell within with the capacity of a dozen alarm clocks began to ring energetically, and fresh air was admitted.

The interior of the box displayed a lamp which it was explained could be left lighted at night. The automatic opening of the box released a reflector which adjusted itself near the lamp. This reflector, it was explained, would throw the cheerful light of the lamp down through the four-inch tube into the coffin, so lighting up the interior that "one could read a newspaper with ease." The lecturer referred to this last feature several times as being particularly comforting.

The interior of the machinery box further contained a small double-barreled arrangement whereby simultaneously with the agitation of the gilt ball, the ringing of the bell, and the lighting of the lamp, a small skyrocket would be set off, and a lighted bomb would be thrown a short distance away there to explode. By this time, it was but fair to assume, the lecturer said, that the cemetery keeper if not the entire neighborhood would be apprised of the fact that something was wrong at that particular grave.

In case, however, it was demonstrated after a reasonable time that death had been real the machine could be pulled from the grave the same as a small post. The aperature left in the top of the coffin would be closed by a spring valve. The machine would then be ready for use again.

"What about small children who do not know enough to pull the rod?" asked a physician. "The lecturer was slightly confused, but said that some movement of the infant might push the rod connecting with the machinery.

It was suggested that the machinery box of the apparatus might be connected by telephone with the sexton's house. The lecturer said that might be arranged.

HOUSE HAS A NEW HUMORIST.

Cushman of Washington Develops Into a Wit at the Capital.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Representative Cushman of Washington, who has bloomed here as a new humorist, and disappointed himself when he fell into making a funny speech on the Currency bill when he had prepared to be serious, is long and lank, not at all well favored, and his homeliness is of wide repute at home. Sometimes he has been called the Abe Lincoln of Washington, because of the similarity of his style with that of the rail-splitter who became President.

Cushman tells a story on himself, and it is being retold, but in such shape as to deprive it of the humor that he imparts to it. His version is that on one occasion, speaking at a country meeting, the Chairman of the county came to him. He had heard that Cushman looked like Lincoln.

"I've heard that you were like Abe Lincoln," said this plain-spoken man. "I want to shake hands with you. I met Lincoln, who was certainly very homely and a man of brains. I'm bound to admit that you resemble him in one of these respects."

COLONIAL SUGAR COMPANY.

Certificate of Incorporation Filed Allowing $100,000,000 Capital.

Special to The New York Times.

WILMINGTON, Del., Dec. 19.—A certificate of incorporation was filed at Dover today for the Colonial Sugar Refining Company, with a capital of $100,000 and the privilege of increasing that amount to $100,000,000. The company purposes to operate in the new possessions and is said to be a rival to the Sugar Trust.

The company is chartered to engage in the production, manufacture, and refining of sugar, molasses, and melada. The real promoters of the company are keeping their transactions quiet, and the incorporators named in the charter who are merely acting are James Lord, James Virdin, and Civil Engineer John C. Hopkins.

NEW IRON MILL FOR CHICAGO.

Plant Expected to be Under Way in Ninety Days.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 19.—The Emlyn Iron Works, has closed a contract with East Chicago land companies, through A. De W. Erskine, for fifteen acres of land along the canal leading to Lake Michigan, where it expects to establish a large plant within the next ninety days for the manufacture of merchant iron.

It will employ 300 men from the start, and increase the number to 400 before the first year has ended.

Business men from Pennsylvania, Indiana, and Illinois compose the new corporation. The company has $1,250,000 behind it to begin with, and, it is asserted, any sum required to advance its interests will be placed at the command of the Directors when matters are fairly under way.

COTTON MILL TO BE ENLARGED.

Dallas Factory at Huntsville, Ala., Increases Its Stock.

Special to The New York Times.

HUNTSVILLE, Ala., Dec. 19.—The stockholders of the Dallas Manufacturing Company to-day authorized the capitalization of that corporation to be increased $614,000 for the purpose of adding 25,000 spindles and 1,200 draper looms. The present mill of 25,000 spindles and 800 double looms will be used for fine sheetings, and the new portion will be devoted to the manufacture of coarse goods for export.

Work will begin on the additions, and when completed the Dallas Mills will be the largest in Alabama, excepting alone the Merrimack Mills, also located in this city. The action of to-day increased the capital stock to the full amount authorized by the legislative act of incorporation, $1,250,000.

OHIO'S TAX ON TELEPHONES.

Supreme Court Says Bell Company Should Pay on Rental Value.

Special to The New York Times.

COLUMBUS, Dec. 19.—The Supreme Court to-day, in a test suit brought by the Auditor of State against the Auditor of Franklin County, decided that telephone instruments must be placed upon the tax duplicates of the various counties at a valuation based upon their earning capacity. Only the wires, poles, and other tangible property have heretofore been taxed. The decision follows the principle of one by the United States Supreme Court in what was known as the express case, where it was held that the earning power is the true basis of taxation where the property taxed is protected by patents.

The boxes owned by the Bell Telephone Company were taxed at a valuation of $3.42 each, and it was the contention of the State that they ought to be taxed at their net rental value of $160 per instrument. It is estimated that there are 25,000 instruments in use in this State, representing an earning capacity of $5,833,000 and putting the telephone companies on the same basis as the express or telegraph companies, the State will gain in taxes about $80,000 annually.

GEN. ANDREWS'S SUCCESSOR.

Favored Candidate Said to be Capt. Landon of the Seventh.

A dispatch from Albany yesterday stating that Gov. Roosevelt has under consideration fully half a dozen names for a successor to Adjt. Gen. Andrews, and that he will not appoint any one who is not thoroughly approved by Gen. Andrews, gave rise to a report that the candidate favored by Gen. Andrews, and also by Major Gen. Roe and Brig. Gen. Fitzgerald, is Capt. Francis G. Landon of Company I, Seventh Regiment.

Gen. Roe, when seen last night in regard to the report, declined to say anything in regard to the possible appointment of Capt. Landon, as he did not know what the Governor would do, and was not in a position to discuss Gen. Andrews's successor.

It was learned that the Republican State organization has not presented the name of any man to succeed Gen. Andrews, and it is not thought that the organization will have any candidate for the place. In view of the fact that Gov. Roosevelt takes a personal interest in National Guard affairs, the organization leaders have decided to refrain from urging any particular man.

The name of Inspector General Edward Morris Hoffman of Elmira, is prominently mentioned in connection with the place, and the organization people believe he will be the man selected.

MARRIED POSTAL CLERKS.

Assistant Postmaster General Heath Says They Are Objectionable.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—First Assistant Postmaster General Heath said to-day that his much-talked-of order against the retention of Post Office employes who marry was a necessary step in the public interest, though it had been spoken of as if it were an attack upon married women. The impossibility of retaining clerks who marry each other, Mr. Heath said, was due to the peculiar unreasonableness of brides and bridegrooms.

"Perhaps there is no reason why two good clerks should not remain good clerks after they are married," said Mr. Heath, "but the unalterable fact is that they don't. Two clerks will work together in the same office and give entire satisfaction, even after they have fallen in love. Finally they are married, and instantly there is a change. They refuse to be treated like other clerks. They are on an entirely different plane. They can no longer be regarded as two satisfactory workers, but as one highly unsatisfactory worker. Their personal relations are continually obtruding themselves and getting in the way of the public business. The only way to restore harmony and have the public service properly performed is to get rid of one of them. Two married clerks are a source of discord to any office.

"I will admit," added Mr. Heath, "that there may be women who could marry fellow-employes and remain in the department performing their duties satisfactorily and never giving the least hint that they expected to be treated differently from other clerks. I should think it quite possible that there might be such women. But I have never seen one and have never heard of one."

Gov. Roosevelt's New Year Reception.

ALBANY, Dec. 19.—Gov. Roosevelt will spend Christmas in Albany with his family. He will hold his annual reception for the members of the Legislature, the State officers, and public men from 12 o'clock until 1 o'clock on Monday, Jan. 1.

GERMANY WANTS ST. THOMAS.

She Will Buy the Island If America Interposes No Objections — Plans to Get Coaling Stations.

BERLIN, Dec. 19.—In Count von Buelow's budget speech last week occurred a passage indicating Germany's need of a number of bases and coaling stations for the German Navy. This passage was purposely worded cautiously, the meaning being somewhat veiled, so as not to attract the suspicions of other nations, but there is the best authority for the statement that Germany's aims, during the next few years, will be earnestly directed to the acquisition of a number of such points in parts of the world where German war vessels, in a time of actual hostility, would need them most, particularly in the Far East, the Antilles, Central America, South America, and Polynesia.

It is asserted here that the Government's denial of the reported German negotiations for the purchase of the Danish West Indies, while literally correct, is in a sense an evasion. Germany really desires St. Thomas, because, with the frequent disturbances in the Central American Republics, by which German property always suffers largely, and with the Nicaragua Canal once completed, a coaling station near by will become highly necessary.

Germany, however, has been restrained from entering into negotiations with Denmark for the purchase of St. Thomas out of consideration for American sentiment, which formerly opposed such German acquisition there. She is now trying to ascertain whether the American objections still continue. If assured that they do not, she will begin negotiations.

SAMOAN TREATY IN DANGER.

The Democrats in the Senate May Vote Against It.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—There are indications in the Senate that the Democrats may take advantage of the requirement that there shall be a two-thirds vote to ratify the Samoan treaty of partition to prevent its approval. The Republican vote is now fifty-one, and two-thirds of the Senate would be fifty-seven votes. All the Democrats are not of the same opinion as the Democratic members of the Foreign Relations Committee.

The Democratic opposition is based upon the assumption that the United States had no right to take the island of Tutuila from the natives, that there has been a usurpation of power, and that there has been a departure from traditional policy in negotiating with two foreign powers to bring about the settlement registered in the treaty.

EARL OF TANKERVILLE DEAD.

An American Girl, Wife of His Son, Is Now a Countess.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—The Earl of Tankerville is dead.

By the death of the Earl of Tankerville another American Countess will be added to the long list of women born in this country who hold exalted titles in the British nobility. Lord Tankerville is succeeded by his son, Lord Bennet, who, on Oct. 23, 1895, married Miss Leonora Van Marter of Tacoma, Washington.

The Tankervilles are descended from Thomas Bennet, who was Sheriff of London in 1594. The late peer was born Jan. 10, 1810. He was the eldest son of the fifth Earl, who married Mlle. Armandine Sophie Leonie Corisandra, a daughter of Antoine, Duc de Gramont. He was christened Charles Augustus, and was educated at Eton and Oxford. In 1868 and 1867 he was Captain of the Corps of Gentlemen at Arms, and the two following years was Lord Steward of the Queen's Household.

Lord Tankerville was a member of the House of Lords before he succeeded to the earldom. After sitting, as Lord Bennet, in the House of Commons for North Northumberland from 1852 to 1859, he was in the latter year summoned to the House of Lords as Viscount Ossulston, a title that had been in his family, and that was revived for his benefit. The same year his father died, and he took the higher title.

On Jan. 29, 1850, the late Earl married the Lady Olivia Montagu, only daughter of George, sixth Duke of Manchester.

The earldom is one of the richest in England, the rent roll being an enormous one. Lord Tankerville owned two seats, one of them, Chillingham Castle, Northumberland, being a historic building.

The Kaiser's New Year's Eve Plans.

BERLIN, Dec. 19.—The Court presentation at 12 o'clock New Year's Eve will include the various Ambassadors and their wives, and even the Ministers of minor States. The Emperor will have a series of original surprises in store for his guests. A symbolical charade, written and composed by his Majesty and by Count Philip von Eulenburg, German Ambassador at Vienna, will be acted. Its theme will be a salutation of the New Year.

Indians Retard Canal Work.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Dec. 19.—Late Colombian advices just received here say that, while the revolution in that republic is not absolutely crushed, good prospects are entertained of an amicable compromise. In the meanwhile hostilities are practically suspended. The United States steamship Scorpion, with the Canal Survey party on board, is reported to be meeting with difficulties in the hostile attitude of the Indians, which has caused the laborers with the expedition to strike.

American Pianiste Plays in Berlin.

BERLIN, Dec. 19.—Miss Celeste Groenvelt of New Orleans, assisted by the Philharmonic Orchestra, gave a successful pianoforte concert this evening at the Singacademie before a distinguished audience. She recently lost her father, mother, and a sister, and the whole American colony in Berlin deeply sympathizes with her in her bereavement.

Died on an Ocean Steamer.

GIBRALTAR, Dec. 19.—Mark Herbert, a saloon passenger of the Werra, Capt. Weyer, from Genoa and Naples, died on board the steamer, and his remains will be taken by her to New York.

TRAIN ROBBERY IN KANSAS.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Dec. 19.—The passengers on the Missouri Pacific's Omaha and Nebraska City passenger train, which left here at 9:15 o'clock to-night were robbed by two masked men, who boarded the train in Kansas City, Kan.

They levied their forced contribution after the train started, holding up the passengers in the Pullman coach. The conductor was among the persons robbed. At Nearman, Kan., six miles out of the city, the train slowed up for the station and the bandits dropped off and disappeared.

The booty secured by the robbers was five gold watches and about $100 in money. No shots were fired and no one was injured.

INDEPENDENT CLUB DINES.

Twenty-first District Citizens Hear from Their Legislators.

The Independent Club of the Twenty-first Assembly District, composed of west side citizens, many of whom were active in the fight against the laying of four tracks on Amsterdam Avenue, gave a dinner last evening at the Arbor, 2,648 Broadway. Covers were laid for fifty. The Rev. Dr. John P. Peters presided, and the guests of the evening were Controller Bird S. Coler, Senator John Ford, Assemblyman-elect Fallows, and Alderman-elect Matthews.

Senator Ford, in a speech, touched upon the bills he had under consideration, mentioning a School bill providing for a separate fund for teachers' salaries, a bill to compel the New York Central Railroad Company either to remove or elevate its tracks on Eleventh Avenue, and a measure providing for the taxation of trust companies. He also spoke in favor of increasing the debt limit to 20 per cent., and the improvement of the Erie Canal by deepening it to fourteen feet.

Assemblyman Fallows spoke in favor of the Massachusetts ballot law, exhibited specimens of the ballots, and explained their advantages. He intends to introduce a bill providing for the adoption of this ballot.

Democrats Elect Mayor of Meriden.

Special to The New York Times.

MERIDEN, Conn., Dec. 19.—The municipal election here to-day resulted in the choice of E. E. West for Mayor by a majority of 394 over the Republican candidate, W. A. Kelsey, publisher of The Morning Record. For the other city offices the Republicans were successful.

MORE TROUBLE IN SAMOA.

Followers of Mataafa Drive Out Supporters of Malietoa.

APIA, Samoa, Dec. 13, (via Auckland, N. Z., Dec. 19.)—The German flag was hoisted over the Court House to-day as an official notification of the annexation of the islands, by agreement, to Germany. The German Consul, on board the Cormoran, was interviewed by the Samoan chiefs. He replied that the Samoans could have their own King and chiefs. They then informed the Consul that Mataafa would be selected.

Having declared their Government established, the Mataafaites are driving the Malietoans out of the villages. Trouble appears imminent.

SHEEHAN STILL THE LEADER.

Opponent of Mr. Croker Re-elected in the Ninth Assembly District.

John C. Sheehan was unanimously re-elected as executive member of the Tammany Hall General Committee of the Ninth Assembly District at a meeting of the District Committee last night. The election was in accordance with the new primary election law, but it was discounted in effect by the result of the primaries last September.

In accepting the election, Mr. Sheehan said that he would continue throughout the year as the leader of the district, and that "the rights of the district" would be upheld. Although the remark was made in quiet tones, it was interpreted by those who heard it as a defiance to Richard Croker and any others who should interfere in the affairs of the district, and was received with loud cheers.

The other officers chosen were Bernard Courtney, Chairman; John McGarry, Dennis Clifford, Dr. J. J. Goodman, and Philip F. Olwell, Vice Chairmen; Senator Louis Munzinger, Treasurer, and Frank Worder, Albert Creelman, Charles B. O'Neil, and Bernard Cummings, Jr., Secretaries. Six hundred names were added to the list of the District General Committee.

It was said at the Pequod Club, where the meeting took place, that in the fight for supremacy in the district, Mr. Sheehan spent $8,000 and Senator Munzinger $4,000 to defeat the revolt which was led by Councilman Frank Goodwin and Thomas F. Smith, as representatives of Mr. Croker.

WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S

Only Three More Nights of Christmas

WEDNESDAY, Thursday and Friday nights only, to see Wanamaker's in its Christmas toggery under the glint of its thousands of electric lights. The store will be closed at 7 o'clock Saturday evening—for that's the secular Christmas Eve.

If you've been here during the month—and you probably have—you liked the store unless there was a fly in its ointment of good service. If you saw anything in the conduct of the business that was wrong in fact, or supposedly wrong; if ever-so-slight blunder occurred in your transactions, please tell us—write it down. The Wanamaker store system is proven right and helpful; there may be troubles of administration. Will you help us right them—help us by pointing them out? Let us have a composite store—your ideal and ours.

The swing of the Christmas business is splendid—the volume of it is such an endorsement as even New York has almost never given. But the sliver from a toothpick may cause one a nightmare. Have we helped you to a merrier Christmas? That's the question we hope can be answered with a "yes."

We want you to look upon Wanamaker's as your store—to be proud of; to have in mind as a place to bring friends to. We want you to believe it

The Brightest, Carefulest, Most Economical Store in New York

That is its best excuse for being the busiest. Yet there is never a scramble here. Even during the Christmas rush it has been comfortable—for you are one of a pleasant throng at Wanamaker's.

Women's Suits--Some Great Values

There is a patent on this business—the freshness of stocks. The best stores you or we know have not infringed on our methods. It takes courage, to be sure, to sell almost-brand-new things at half price, but we do. Full stocks of everything up to the last safe moment. Then out goes the surplus, let it cost us what it may. Next morning the store is new because of the newness in it. To-day—

A hundred Tailored Suits, values up to $18, are reduced to $7.50.

Fifty Tailored Suits, values up to $22, are reduced to $10.

And this means an absolute clearance of these lines. Think it over—then (excuse the hint) hurry!

Second floor, Broadway.

Overcoats---Men's and Boys'

We sell more clothing for men than for boys, because men are particular and they like the carefulness and safe economy of this store. Women buy the boys' clothes—and, despite the many who come here, it is safe to say that two-thirds of the boys' clothing is bought at too dear a price. Extravagant prices are dear: poor clothing is dear—maybe extravagant prices are the safer waste. But you can skip both.

Men's Overcoats, American Montagnac, $25. Silk-lined; edges piped with cloth.
Men's Overcoats of Carr melton; Oxford-gray and black; silk lined, $30.

Other sorts up to $55, and down to $8.50.

Boys' Overcoats—one hint of a store-ful—
Of all-wool Frieze—brown, Oxford-gray or navy blue—stylishly made. $5. For ages 4 to 16.

Second floor, Fourth Avenue.

Imported Capes By the way, these newest Capes from Paris and Berlin are charming gift things.

Look at one—
Of pastel-gray broadcloth, 44 in. long. Seven rows of white braid are swished round it in pleasing curves and twists; shoulders seem to be made up of similar braiding. There is a large flaring collar, edged with white fox. The cape is full lined with quilted white silk. The price is $73—and this one of the Paris conjurings.

Others run from $32 to $137.50. It's safest of all to buy a cape because there is no bother about the fit.

But we're careful to make other presents right—even by after-Christmas alterations.

There are black capes — some especially suited to elderly women—$25 to $68.

Second Floor.

Warm Waists and Wrappers Think it over, are there not half a dozen people whom you should remember, and can best remember—by giving them something to wear? We are not thinking so much of the abjectly poor as of those under your roof.

Pretty Flannel Waists, at $5. Others at prices touching as low as $1.25.
Flannelette Waists, 75c and 95c.
Flannelette Wrappers, $1 to $3.25.
Eiderdown Wrappers, $2.75 to $13.50.
Cashmere Wrappers at $3.75 to $20.
Silk Wrappers, $10 to $36.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Girls' Shirt Waists These are garments for girls of 12 to 16 years. Warm, well-made waists, and, withal, stylish. Of various flannels and velveteen. At $1.75 there are waists of fine flannel, attractively trimmed with rows of white braid. Some also at $2.50 and $3. And at $3.75 pretty waists of velveteen, with full front and French back.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Books for Giving We have dressed up the brain-children of Dickens, Thackeray and the rest in good clothes—made library editions that appeal to book lovers. We are not book publishers in the broad sense, but book buyers—but we do manufacture these splendid holiday editions, because we're particular and because you appreciate the real economy of such work.

CARLYLE, THOMAS—Complete. 10 vols., cloth, $7. The French Revolution, 3 vols., cloth, $2.25.
DUMAS, ALEXANDRE—Romances, 15 vols., cloth, $10.50; half calf, $16.50.
ELIOT, GEORGE—Complete. 8 vols., cloth, $5.50; half calf, $8.
GREEN, JOHN RICHARD—History of the English People. 4 vols., cloth, $2.75; half calf, $4.50.
GUIZOT, M.—History of France, from the earliest times. Translated by Robert B. Black, M.A. 8 vols., cloth, $6; half calf, $9.
HUGO, VICTOR—10 vols., cloth, $7; half calf, $10.50. Les Miserables, 3 vols., cloth, $2.25; half calf, $3.75.
IRVING, WASHINGTON—8 vols., cloth, $5.50; half calf, $8.
MOTLEY, JOHN LOTHROP — Dutch Republic. 3 vols., cloth, $2; half calf, $3.50.
THACKERAY, WILLIAM MAKEPEACE —10 vols., $7.

Two Book Stores—in the store, Ninth street side. Across Ninth street at No. 74 E. Go to whichever one seems roomiest.

Christmas Wreaths We've a thousand ready. We'll try to keep up with the demand—and probably fail to do so.

Wreath, with centre star of immortelles, 40c. Without star, 25c.

With the plants in the Basement—by the way, we heard a woman say our palms "looked real natural." They are—we find no satisfaction in selling the prepared palms.

Wreaths on Fifth Floor, as well.

Furs for Gifts

We couldn't conduct a "dry goods fur business"—you wouldn't let us. We have asked you so often to believe in the store, and to hold it to strict accountability, that to sell the riff-raff of any goods would mean simply that we'd get the stuff sent back again. That's right.

So we haven't a "fur department," but we have a fur store that brings peltry from the best marts and fur fashions from St. Petersburg and Paris.

Furs. Would you buy a diamond at hap-hazard? And furs are next to gems in any list of the luxurious.

Persian lamb Collarette, top collar, ruffle and tabs of black lynx, $100.
Collarette of blended stone marten; tabs and tails, $100.
Collarettes of Alaska sealskin, top collar and border of natural Hudson-bay sable. Tabs finished with twelve tails. $150.
Collarette of beautiful dark eastern mink, $200.

But why bother with more list? If possible, do a little shopping—our furs look all the better by comparison.

Second floor.

Men's Rain Coats This is an ideal coat we tell of to-day—a high-grade, stylish, durable garment, rain proof. The material is a closely woven English fabric, made by a new process that renders it rain-defying. Very full in skirt; sleeves starting from collar seams with outside strapping down centre of sleeves; soft-roll cuffs—in fact, swell. Tans, browns and grays—$16.50, $25 and $30.

Men's Store, Ninth and Broadway.

Rubber Boots and Shoes If Santa Claus has had fifty thousand letters this year from New York children, depend on it that forty-six thousand have asked for gum boots—and the rest of the writers forgot. They surely did not ignore.

If the child wears spring-heel shoes, it is only sensible to buy spring-heel rubber boots. Funny this hasn't been appreciated before.

3-buckle Arctics are gifts for men.
So are Boots—knee or hip high. You can be sure which he wants.

But your own health calls for carefulness—these damp days are much safer for you if your feet are dry.

Women's Rubbers, all the styles, 50c.
Men's Rubbers, "storm" or low cut, 75c.
Slippers. The Christmas stocking of father or big brother should surely hold slippers, even if the ends stick out. And at the rate we are selling them, it looks encouraging for these dear fellows.

Main Shoe Store, First floor.
Bargain Shoes and Slippers, Fifth floor.

Handkerchiefs Busier than ever, at Handkerchief selling—more counters; more helpers.

Of course, if New York really appreciated the Wanamaker way of selling handkerchiefs we should have more than half the trade of the whole city—and be at a loss what to do with it. But we shall grow as fast as does your appreciation.

Men's hemstitched Handkerchiefs, 12½c ea.
Men's Handkerchiefs, hemstitched and initialed, 25c.
Women's embroidered Handkerchiefs, 12½c each.
Finer at 25c and up to many dollars a piece.

Pure linen in every case—that's what makes this the safe handkerchief store. There are just two more in this whole land.

Broadway.

Decorative Plates Reduced! Small lots left of many beautiful styles. To be sure, nobody buys them by the dozen—they're sold by the piece. But we can't afford sample room when stocks run low. Hence—

Dresden Plates, $1.25, $3 and $3.25 each—values up to $5.
Cauldon Plates, $5.50 and $8 each—values up to $12.
Doulton Plates, $1.25 and $2.80—values up to $4.20.
Vienna Plates, $2.75 and $3.25—values up to $5.

In the Basement Art-Room, with the marble figures, bronzes and other bits of beauty.

Basement.

Gifts of Gold It would seem that the store that deals in precious metals, which have intrinsic and easily ascertained value, and in precious stones that come near to having a fixed basis—it would seem that such a store could not excel another store, unless in variety.

But it can—because gold in jewelry doesn't sell at bullion value but at an artistic valuation. And therein comes the chance to charge too much.

To say that we have gold scarfpins at $1.50 to $50 means nothing at all until you see the pins. But you rest on two things—that we have variety and that Wanamaker's prices, whenever tested, prove lowest.

Things to give—

Scarf Pins	Brooches
Links	Cuff Pins
Rings—men's, women's and little girls	Hat Pins
Cigar Cutters	Lockets
Match Boxes—finest is $50	Pocket Knives—finest is $25
Pipes—$5.75 to $9.50	Pencils
And, of course, Watches.	Tie Clasps

Broadway and Tenth street.

Vienna Bronzes Tiny pieces—some no larger than grasshoppers—some in the form of grasshoppers; and hundreds of queerly-wrought shapes. Rather expensive; very nice.

Stationery Store, First floor.

Gifts in the Japanese Store There's much to interest one in this collection of things Japanese. Quaint and curious specimens of ceramic art, wonderful carvings in wood and ivory, rare vases of bronze, odd-looking pistols and swords for wall adornment—many another most acceptable gift for man or woman.

Some beautiful screens that show the remarkable skill of the Japanese in carving and inlaying. One of these is $100—another $200. Plenty much less expensive, though not much less attractive.

Sets of sweetest toned chimes, and soft-sounding, melodious gongs—the former a full octave, $50, $60 and $75. The gongs in sets of 5 for $40, sets of 6 are $55 and sets of 8, $95.

A unique collection of Phoenician glass—made about 300 to 500 B. C. Much of it has been sold. Some excellent specimens still remain.

A belated lot of teakwood furniture has just arrived. It's marked very reasonably.

Basement.

Cameras Photographing is easiest of the arts—just press the button. To be sure, the preliminary work and the finishing have to be thought of—but you needn't worry over that. Any boy or girl can "take" pictures—and will appreciate a camera for Christmas.

Kodaks are sold right now at a third off the list prices.
Wizard Cameras are just reduced one-third—which makes the Cycle Wizard sell at $6.67, and so on to the long-focus wide-angle Wizard, with diaphragm shutter, telephoto and extra railroad lenses, $33.35.

Basement.

Christmas Candles Five-pound box of really good Mixed Candy for $1. That's one of the Christmas attractions.

Tissot's Life of Christ

The French are slaves to art and artistic perfection. Were it not so they never could have held their position as producers of beauty for the world. Add to the art instinct the veneration of an adoring worshiper and you begin to see why Tissot, skilled and famous, gave ten years to painting The Christ. He lived in the valleys and on the hills where the Saviour walked; he drank in the atmosphere and color of the Holy Land.

But only a few could see the pictures as he painted them. Then the printers' work, and a hundred of the most skilled workmen of Le Mercier & Cie of Paris, were put on the task of reproducing them. It took four years under the constant guidance of M. Tissot. The task was finished and the world has

GEN. H. C. KING ON PATRIOTISM.

Denounces Free Silverites and Those Who Espouse the Cause of the Filipinos.

Gen. Horatio C King addressed the members of the National Civic Club of Brooklyn last evening on "Patriotism vs. Partisanship." His speech, which is in the nature of an answer to addresses made by Edward M. Shepard and others before the club, was a caustic review of the Chicago platform, and of the attitude of those who espouse the cause of the Filipinos.

"In the election of 1896," said Gen. King, "morality and religion joined hands to save the Nation from lasting disgrace and humiliation. The echoes of the divine edict thundered from Sinai, 'Thou shalt not steal,' have reverberated through the ages, and woe to that nation which under political, economical, or other subterfuge shall dare to disregard them."

Referring to the Indianapolis Convention he said: "This old guard of the Democratic Party, true to the principles upon which this Republic was founded, enunciated that noble platform that rallied to its support a grand army of unselfish followers and defeated the purpose of that undemocratic mob which, crazed by the blasphemous metaphor of a Populist orator, nominated William J. Bryan for President."

Of the attitude of the anti-expansionist, he said: "Aguinaldo, who the anti-expansionist would have us believe is a modern Washington, was encouraged by this apparent division of opinion to strike a blow for independence before he could know what policy the Government intended to pursue. And it cannot be gainsaid that the continued agitation by the minority in this country has emboldened him to persevere until now his army is scattered and he himself is a fugitive from merited punishment. In a great emergency there is no room for political divisions on the question of maintaining the honor of the flag. Lack of unanimity means aid and comfort to the Filipinos who are in rebellion.

"For my own part, I have no fear that the final judgment of this Nation will ever work injustice to any one. The work before us is to prepare the inhabitants of these fertile islands to govern themselves; to develop the riches so long neglected; to fill their land with churches and schoolhouses; in a word, it is for us to carry to them all the blessings of civilization of which they now have little or no conception. If this noble purpose brings wealth to our own land who will deny to us this honorable reward? The Filipinos will soon learn the difference between Spanish tyranny and American protection.

"The duty before us is plain; we cannot recede with honor. To throw obstacles in the path of the Government in its efforts to restore order is not true patriotism. The blood of our soldiers is on the heads of those who have encouraged Aguinaldo to resistance, who by the most reprehensible methods have led him to believe that by prolonging the unequal contest this Government would recognize his authority and place him in supreme power."

At the conclusion of Gen. King's address there was a debate, in which Edward M. Shepard, A. Augustus Healy, and James L. Bennett took part Mr. Shepard expressed some forceful arguments in opposition to the views of Gen. King on the matter under discussion.

HUGH BONNER'S COMPANY FAILS.

Fire Protective Concern to be Reorganized—Liabilities Small.

The Greater New York Fire Protective Company, of which ex-Chief Hugh Bonner is President, made an assignment yesterday for the benefit of creditors. The assignment was made to George F. Willis, who is the General Manager of the company, and it was taken in order to effect a reorganization. William Van Steenbergh, attorney for the company, said the liabilities amounted to only a few thousand dollars.

The company was organized June 1, 1898, with a capital stock of $50,000. The officers, in addition to Hugh Bonner, are J. J. Nevin, Vice President; A. C. Greenwood, Secretary, and John J. McDavitt, Treasurer. The purposes of the company were the installation of fire alarm systems connected with the City Fire Department in buildings, as well as furnishing a patrol for removing and guarding valuable property during and after fires. Subscribers paid $25 a year.

The company, besides its central station and offices, at 127 West Thirty-seventh Street, maintained stations at 3 and 4 Congress Street and at 238 St. Nicholas Avenue. Wagons were sent to every fire of importance night or day, and upon the occurrence of a serious fire the owner of the property and the business tenants were at once aroused at their homes and taken to the scene in one of the company's wagons.

A similar concern organized in Boston has done a big business. The company here has a list of 250 subscribers, including many of the big dry goods stores, the City Chamberlain's office, the Controller's and Register's offices, but this number is not sufficient to support the business as at present organized. An order issued by Fire Chief Croker a month ago, prohibiting the employes from entering any burning building except those in which the company has subscribers, is said to have been a serious blow to the new organization, preventing the demonstration of its worth to possible subscribers.

A meeting of creditors of the company will be held next Friday. It was announced that the company would retain its central office and had notified its subscribers that it would resume its service within sixty days.

COLUMBIA IRON WORKS FAILS.

Shipbuilding Concern in Baltimore in the Hands of a Receiver.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 19.—Judge Phelps, in the City Circuit Court late this afternoon, appointed Harry A. Parr receiver for the Columbia Iron Works and Dry Dock Company. Mr. Parr gave bonds for $100,000. The receiver was appointed by consent. The Columbia Works built several vessels for the navy.

In the petition, which was filed by Mr. Parr, it is alleged that in the course of the transaction of its business the company has subjected itself to many obligations, now aggregating between $375,000 and $400,000, including about $172,000 in promissory notes held by Baltimore banks, indorsed individually by ex-Mayor William T. Malster, the President of the company; by Christian Devries, the President of the Charles A. Vogeler Company, which assigned to-day, and by the petitioner. Notes aggregating $75,000 indorsed by the three gentlemen named and by Charles M. Swain of Philadelphia, it is stated, are held by banking institutions in the Quaker City. Of these notes, the petition recites, about $30,000 have already matured, and others are about to fall due. The company is insolvent, it is stated, and has no available cash to meet its obligations.

In view of the fact that the petitioner has indorsed a large amount of the company's paper, it is alleged that he and other individual indorsers are in danger of being made responsible for the same. It is therefore of the utmost importance to him and to them that the assets of the company be protected "from the disastrous results of an unseemly scramble on the part of the company's creditors."

In the answer of the company it is stated that it has a large claim against the Federal Government for work done by it in constructing vessels, and that, if sufficient time is allowed to finish its work under existing contracts, it will be able to pay all its obligations. It is essential, the answer states, that some time be allowed, and that some method be devised by which it can acquire the money necessary to complete its work. It consents, therefore, to the appointment of a receiver.

The answer was signed by Mr. Malster, as President, and by Samuel K. Thomas, Assistant Secretary of the company.

In Memory of Jewish Soldiers.

A project to build a monument to the memory of the Jewish soldiers who fell in the civil war, and also of those who died in the war with Spain and in the Philippines, has been started by the Hebrew Union Veteran Association. At a meeting of the association in the vestry room of Temple Emanu-El Sunday a committee of nine was appointed as a Finance Committee, and seven members were named for a Committee on Plans for the monument. The monument will cost $25,000 and the Temple Emanu-El has donated a plot of ground in Salem Fields Cemetery, valued at $8,000, as a site for it.

Death Followed Fall in Street.

Bernard Schweidring, fifty-seven years old, who lived at 827 Avenue A, fell upon the pavement, at Fifty-ninth Street and Seventh Avenue yesterday afternoon, and died about two hours later at Bellevue Hospital of apoplexy. He leaves a wife and a son. He was connected with many German clubs and organizations.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

"Just how far-reaching is the effect of the panic in Wall Street," said E. S. Brower of Fayette, one of the extreme southwestern counties of Pennsylvania, "is shown by the interest taken in it by the people of our section, about which the great world knows almost absolutely nothing. We have been a quiet farming community up to last Summer, and few expected that we should ever play an important part in the manufacturing life of the country. But all that has been changed in a sixmonth. Now the southwestern section of our county is being invaded by engineers and miners and railroad builders. Farms are being wiped out of existence, steel rails are going down, and buildings are going up, until it seems to us as if Fayette County were the centre of all the activities of the country. The Pennsylvania and Baltimore and Ohio Roads are rushing work building roadbeds, and there is a bustle and confusion that has set us all by the ears. It all comes about from the fact that there is now being developed there one of the largest coke sections in the world, and one that is destined to become larger than the Connellsville region, of which the whole world knows. Why we have an interest, and more than a passing one, in this Wall Street flurry is because all the work that is being done is for the big industrial combinations, whose securities are now being tossed about in such a fashion that we do not know whether our boom is to continue or to come to a premature end in the borning. The Federal Steel, American Steel and Wire, Republic, and National Steel Companies have all become interested in our coal beds, and have taken up territory aggregating over 25,000 acres for their coke works. They and the railroad companies that are assisting them in the development of the territory have prepared to spend about $3,000,000 for that purpose alone. If the schemes laid out, and on which a lot of work has already been done, go through, it means a lot for that almost undeveloped section of Pennsylvania. If this Wall Street business means a check to it, it means also a serious check to our hopes at least, and incidentally, we fear, it means also a loss of what to our people seems a tremendous lot of money, for it is our all."

"Speaking of Christmas shoppers," said a conductor on a Broadway car yesterday, "it is a singular fact that we have had more seasickness on Broadway in the past two weeks than there was in the harbor at the time of the international yacht races. I have hardly made a midday trip through the shopping district without having some woman from the country complain of it, and more than a score of times I have been compelled to stop my car to let some woman get off who was actually suffering so that she was afraid to stay aboard any longer. Can't tell what it is that causes it, but I suppose it is the jerky motion made by stopping and starting so frequently, coupled with the fact that the women always look out of the car windows, and so get something of a motion that completely upsets their stomachs, just as it does on the water. It's funny, but it's a fact."

"Kindergartens are well enough in their way, I have no doubt," remarked the oculist as he finished the examination of the eyes of a child of six or eight years, who had come to be fitted with glasses. "My children will not be sent to them, however, as I wish to preserve their eyes. I have a notion that the work the children do in perforating, drawing, working with beads, and all that sort of thing is the cause of half the trouble that we eye doctors have to deal with. It strains the eyes, and makes as much trouble as does the fine needlework that is the fad among the older girls. The work set for the children at the kindergarten may be, and of course it is, instructive and entertaining, but it does create defects in vision that have to be corrected early in life in order that the eye may be saved from permanent injury."

George B. Hulme, Charles A. McCully, and Samuel W. Taylor are back from Pittsburg, where they acted as judges at the Horse Show, which was ended on Saturday night. It was for the Smoky City as great a success socially and from a horsey standpoint as was the recent affair at the Madison Square Garden, and all three say that the Pittsburgers are as thoroughly up to date in all the niceties of traps, harness, and carriage appointments as is New York City. This proves that the Pittsburg contingent that was here during the National show learned their lesson well, and are as willing to spend money lavishly to get blue ribbons as are New Yorkers. Sidney Holloway, the young man who rode so well at the Garden show, was there with a string of hunters, and managed to pick up a lot of prizes to add to the collection at his New Rochelle home.

Now that James R. Keene has added a number of millions of dollars to his already large collection by his successful bear campaign in Wall Street, there is no good reason why he cannot successfully carry out his proposed racing campaign in England. That he will go across the ocean next Summer is now a certainty, and there will be a sigh of relief in certain down-town quarters when he takes his grip in hand and starts for Epsom Downs and Newmarket Heath. There are people who would not have mourned if he had started a month ago.

"Phil" King, he of great fame at Princeton as a football player, is liable to have "Prof." tacked on to the front of his name. That is not because he has been perfecting himself intellectually since he graduated and became a football coach, but because the graduates and undergraduates of the University of Wisconsin want him to remain at that college for several years to come. King's family has objected to his remaining a football coach, but it is believed that these objections may be overcome if he is made a member of the Faculty of the Wisconsin institution as a Professor of Physical Culture or something of that sort, and given a place similar to that held by Stagg at the University of Chicago. The chances are, says a friend of his, that the request of the alumni of the institution will be granted, and that for a few years to come, at least, King will be the coach of the Badger baseball and football teams, but under another name.

Some of the insurance men and brokers have found a way to dodge the new regulation for the cancellation of revenue stamps. This requires that documentary stamps of the value of 10 cents or over shall be mutilated by three parallel incisions across their face. Labor-saving handlers of the stamps now affix five-cent stamps in a string to the necessary amount where it is possible, and so save the trouble of complying with the regulations.

One way in which men of vast capital make one hand wash the other, without wasting any of the soap, was cited by a lumberman who has just returned from a trip to Mississippi and Louisiana in search of Southern pine lands. While on an inspecting tour he found that the Big Creek Lumber Company in Louisiana, which is cutting about 120,000 feet of lumber a day, is only another name for George Gould. That fact, he is inclined to think, may have a trifle to do with the fact that the Big Creek Company is not annoyed by competitors when the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company desires lumber of any sort for repairs or new construction work along its line.

Methods More Modern

Are employed in these days to cure gout and rheumatism.

No longer is it necessary to counteract the poisons that cause these troubles by noxious drugs.

Londonderry Lithia Water is recommended by physicians who know.

The salts which it contains accomplish the desired result.

Londonderry Lithia also prevents as well as cures. That it is delicious is testified to by all who have ever tasted it.

It is a wholesome, sparkling beverage that is served by the best hotels, clubs, and families, of our land where modern methods are endorsed.

EX-CITY OFFICIAL ON TRIAL.

Robert W. Fielding Charged with False Audit of a Bill.

The trial of Robert W. Fielding, indicted for alleged conniving in his official capacity as Deputy Commissioner of City Works of the former City of Brooklyn at the audit and allowance of alleged fraudulent bills brought against the city, was begun yesterday before Justice Wilmot M. Smith, in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn. When the court adjourned six jurors had been obtained

It is charged in the present indictment that Fielding fraudulently audited a bill of Daniel F. Doody for repairing New Utrecht Avenue in 1897.

Railroad Franchise Invalid.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday handed down an opinion in the suit between the Tarrytown, White Plains and Mamaroneck Railroad Company, as respondent, and the New York, Westchester and Connecticut Traction Company, as appellant. The opinion says: "We have recently decided in the cases of Dusenbury and the village of Bronxville against the defendant that the duty lies on the company of showing affirmatively that it has the necessary consents of the property owners to constitute a valid franchise for the construction of its railroad in the street. The plaintiff in this case entirely fails to sustain that burden."

ROBERTS ON THE DEFENSE

Witnesses from Utah Give Testimony Against Him.

PLURALITY OF WIVES CHARGED

Accused Representative-Elect Asks to Bar All Evidence as to Facts Prior to His Selection to Congress.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—A number of witnesses from Utah appeared to-day before the committee of the House which is investigating the case of Mr. Roberts of Utah. They included Mrs. Dr. Luella Miles, a practicing physician of Salt Lake City; Mrs. McDougall, Mr. E. L. McDaniel, and S. E. Wishard, all of Salt Lake City.

Mrs. Dr. Miles of Salt Lake was the first witness. She gave details of a call she made at the house of Mrs. Dr. Maggie Shipp Roberts on April 12, 1897. She addressed Mrs. Shipp Roberts as "Dr. Shipp," whereupon the witness said she was interrupted with the request, "Doctor, you can call me Dr. Roberts." Mrs. Roberts went on to explain, the witness said, that she had been married to Mr. Roberts for seven years.

When Mr. Roberts cross-examined the witness, she repeated the same story.

After the witness had stepped aside, Mr. Roberts submitted an objection to the effect that this testimony related to 1897, whereas the committee had no jurisdiction over him prior to his becoming a member of Congress.

"Then you contend," said Chairman Tayler, "that the testimony should be confined to polygamous practices subsequent to March 4, 1899?" "I do," answered Mr. Roberts.

"The objection will be noted," responded the Chairman.

The Rev. S. E. Wishard was the next witness. He gave his business as that of Superintendent of the Home Missionary Work of the Presbyterian Synod, embracing Utah. He knew both Mr. Roberts and Mrs. Dr. Roberts, and related his first meeting with the latter in September, 1897. This occurred, he said, on the train at Manti, Utah. He was in the car with Roberts and spoke with him. A lady sat beside him and he beckoned to her, and then introduced her, saying: "Mrs. Roberts, Mr. Wishard."

Whether Roberts said "My wife" in making the introduction or simply said "Mrs. Roberts," the witness was not sure. But he was positive the introduction was as wife. Subsequently Mr. Wishard said he called on Mrs. Roberts at her home, to make sure he had made no mistake. The sign in the front of the house read, "Dr. Margaret C. Roberts." In the parlor he saw on the wall a large portrait of Roberts, and on a table a small picture of him. He saw Mrs. Roberts, recalled to her the introduction on the train, and she remembered it.

On cross-examination, Mr. Roberts brought out Mr. Wishard's opposition to Mormonism, and then asked: 'Was Roberts drunk when he made this introduction referred to?"

"Not that I know of."

"Was he insane?"

"I do not know."

Mr. Wishard said that in conversation with Mrs. Dr. Roberts he had asked her if the young lady in Washington with Roberts was her daughter, and she answered in the negative.

Mrs. Maria C. McDougall testified to an incident occurring July 22, 1898, when she was on the train from Butte, Mont., to Salt Lake City. Mr. Roberts and Mrs. Dr. Roberts traveled on the same car as far as Pocatello.

"Once I heard Mr. Roberts introduce his companion as 'my wife,'" testified Mrs. McDougall, "and repeatedly as 'Mrs. Roberts.'"

Edwin McDaniel, former manager of The Salt Lake Herald, was examined at considerable length, mainly on the politics and convention affairs pertaining to Roberts's nomination to Congress. In 1896, while managing The Herald, he had a conversation with Roberts, in the course of which Roberts told him he had three families.

Mr. Schroeder, the Gentile representative who conducted the direct examination, submitted a copy of an editorial by Roberts in The New Era relating to polygamy and its Biblical status.

Mr. Roberts presented a formal objection to the testimony on the general lines already stated. His statement follows: "Roberts submits that no testimony should be considered which concerns acts now beyond the limits fixed by the Statutes of Limitations. The member from Utah in a criminal prosecution would be protected from the consideration of acts barred by the United States Statutes of Limitations; how much more, then, ought the limitations to be invoked to bar the consideration of alleged acts in this proceeding."

After citing Sections 1,044 and 1,046 of the statutes, the objection adds:

"As the authority of this committee over the member from Utah, even if given the utmost stretch of its latitude, only extends to the time of his membership, viz., from March 4, 1899, he asks that the inquiry as to evidence before this committee shall be limited to that time."

At the afternoon session Mr. T. J. Brandon, a resident of Centreville, Utah, where he had been Postmaster and Probate Judge, testified that he had known B. H. Roberts for years; also Louisa Smith Roberts and Celia Dibble Roberts. He knew the children of Louisa Smith Roberts, five or six in number. Celia Dibble Roberts also has six children, if he remembered correctly.

He knew that on the morning of Aug. 11, 1897, it was currently reported about Centreville that B. H. Roberts had twins born to him by Celia Dibble Roberts. He had seen them frequently since then. He also gave circumstantial details of other children of Celia Dibble Roberts, who, he said, were recognized in the town as the children of B. H. Roberts. These children called for the mail of Celia Roberts, and also occasionally for B. H. Roberts, while the witness was Postmaster. Celia Roberts was publicly and privately reported to be the wife of B. H. Roberts. The latter was about the house frequently.

Mr. Brandon said Celia Dibble Roberts now occupied the house formerly occupied by Louisa Smith Roberts, who had moved into a new house built by B. H. Roberts. This change of homes occurred about four years ago. B. H. Roberts owned both buildings, according to general repute. While Postmaster, when one of the Roberts children called for mail for "father" he delivered the mail of B. H. Roberts.

Mr. Ray Brandon, son of the former witness, also related events occurring at Centreville. He knew Roberts, Louisa Smith Roberts, Celia Dibble Roberts, and most, if not all, of the children. He said it was generally reported that twins were born to Celia and B. H. Roberts, and he had seen them and talked with them. He had seen Roberts about the Celia Roberts house, just as any husband and father would be about working around the house and barn. A short time ago, the witness said, he was passing the Celia Roberts house, when one of Roberts's nieces presented the twins and said they were the twins of B. H. Roberts.

Mr. Schroeder stated that this closed the evidence on hand, and would be all unless the committee wished further testimony. There were two other gentlemen who could testify, and if the committee desired more direct testimony, it could be had only for summoning the women reputed to be wives of Roberts.

Chairman Tayler asked Mr. Roberts what line he desired to follow. He said he had no witnesses, but he had some documentary evidence he wished to present, and hoped it would arrive to-morrow.

"Do you expect to place yourself on the stand as a witness?" asked Mr. Miers, a member of the committee.

"I do not," replied Mr. Roberts.

At the request of Representative Page Morris of the committee, Mr. Brandon returned to the stand and was asked by Mr. Morris as to the marital repute of Roberts and Celia and Louisa Roberts.

"There is such a general repute," the witness replied. "It is that Celia Dibble Roberts is recognized by the entire community as B. H. Roberts's second wife. She is dealt with by the Mormon Church as his second wife."

"How about Louisa Roberts?"

"She is recognized as his first wife."

Mr. Brandon said the third reputed wife, Margaret Shipp Roberts, had come there once to attend the funeral already referred to.

The records of these marriages, the witness said, were in the temple, which was the only depository of plural marriages. He said it was generally understood that Roberts was in the employ of and paid by the Church.

This brought about quite a sharp exchange between the witness and Roberts.

"Do you not know," asked Roberts, "that the Mormon Church does not pay those ministering for it?" "I know," replied Mr. Brandon, "that the rank and file are not paid, but the higher ones are paid."

"And is not E. H. Roberts in the rank and file?" "No, sir; you are considered as one of the influential ones, and at the time you were called down it was sated that you received $100 per month from the Church."

"Did not Roberts deny it publicly?" "I know," said the witness, "that the Bishop says he sends a part of the tithing up there (Centreville) to pay you."

"Do you not know that none of the tithing is sent there?" "I only know what the Bishop says."

It was decided to hear the arguments on the case on Jan. 4.

GLAD ROBERTS IS OUT YET.

Miss Helen Gould and Others at Home Mission Meeting Formally Thank Congress.

More than usual interest attached to the regular "third Tuesday" open meeting of the Women's Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church, held at the Presbyterian Building, Fifth Avenue and Twentieth Street, yesterday morning, from the fact that representatives of other Protestant Churches were present as guests. The announced subject was "Our Country," but the ruling topic was the advantage which the opponenets of the Mormon, Brigham H. Roberts, have gained in their fight to prevent his taking the seat in Congress to which he was elected. Many congratulations were extended to Miss Helen M. Gould by acquaintances whom she met at the meeting for the work she has done in this cause. Mrs. D. E. Finks presided.

The first resolution bearing on the Roberts case was offered by Mrs. R. S. MacArthur, Vice President at Large of the Women's Home Mission Work of the Baptist Church, and was as follows:

"Women of New York and vicinity, in council assembled, representing various organizations co-extensive with our Republic, desire to express their hearty appreciation and gratitude for the patriotic action taken by the members of the House of Representatives in preventing Brigham H. Roberts from taking the oath of office. They are assured that the same high sense of honor and zeal for our country's welfare will prevent the disgrace of his admission to the House to share in the councils and legislation."

This was unanimously adopted, as were all the others, and then Miss Gould read the following resolution from the platform:

"Women of New York and vicinity, in council assembled, representing various organizations co-extensive with our Republic, desire to convey to R. W. Tayler of Ohio, member of the House of Representatives, their high appreciation of the action taken by him of preventing Brigham H. Roberts from taking the oath of office in the House. They are watching with intense interest the proceedings of the committee to which the subject is referred, assured that the exhaustive investigation being made will result in such recommendations to the House as shall vindicate the honor and integrity of our country."

Mrs. John S. Bussing, President of the Women's Executive Committee of the Reformed Church in America, then presented a similarly worded resolution thanking Congressman Thomas C. McRae of Arkansas and Mrs. William Kincaide, who represented the Congregational Church Home Mission Work, presented a petition to the United States Senate to enact during the Fifty-sixth Congress such legislation as shall add to the Constitution of the United States an amendment prohibiting polygamy in every State and Territory of the Union. Mrs. Clinton B. Fiske, President of the Women's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, before presenting a like petition to the House of Representatives, told in a half-humorous way of her experience in making a Thanksgiving Day call upon Orson Davis, a Mormon, several years ago. She was directed from one of his homes to another by women and children who answered her knock, until at last she found him in one of his establishments.

The Rev. Dr. Josiah Strong delivered the address of the day. He gave many words of encouragement to the women of the Home Missionary Boards and complimented them highly for what they had done in the Roberts matter. He spoke in favor of expansion and predicted that the coming century would see a great contest between the Anglo-Saxon and the Slav for the supremacy of the world.

Miss Helen M. Gould has addressed a letter to Dr. Strong, as President of the League for Social Service, in which she conveys to him much information which she has gleaned about polygamy and Mormonism from works by Mormon authors. One of them, "Plural Marriage and the Manifesto," was sent to her with the compliments of Nathan Tanner, Jr., the writer. In this pamphlet many citizens of Utah are named to prove that polygamous marriage may be prolific in good results. She finds that Brigham H. Roberts himself advances the theory that the spirits of men formerly had an existence in another world and that he holds that marriage should be not for this life, but for all eternity, and that he also argues that it is possible for men to become gods. She has discovered, too, that Roberts teaches a distinct doctrine of polytheism in one of his works, which has the full sanction of the Mormon Church authorities.

THE FRANCO-CHINESE TROUBLE.

Officials Say America Has Taken No Part in the Difficulty.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—It is asserted at the State Department that our Government has interfered in no degree whatever between France and China in connection with the pending difficulties between the two countries.

It is positively denied that either through Mr. Porter or any other person has the United States addressed any demand upon the French Government for an explanation of its course.

Presidential Appointments.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The President to-day sent the following nominations to the Senate:

Horace Speed, to be United States Attorney for the Territory of Oklahoma; H. G. Ewart, to be District Judge for the Western District of North Carolina.

Capt. George W. Melville, to be Engineer in Chief and Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering in the Department of the Navy, with rank of Rear Admiral.

W. G. Simpson, to be Postmaster at Highbridge, N. J., and C. T. Knight, to be Postmaster at Monroe, N. Y.

Presidential Nominations Confirmed.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The Senate to-day confirmed a large number of nominations, including the following:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.—C. H. Brown, Northern District of New York.

POSTMASTERS. — CONNECTICUT — E. E. Crowe, South Norwalk; W. Holmes, Shelton.

NEW JERSEY—L. E. Jeffries, May's Landing; D. M. Merchant, Morris Plains.

NEW YORK—T. H. Dickinson, Champlain; G. T. Eveland, Franklin; G. E. Marcellus, Lercy; W. Holden, Portville; C. E. Parker, Nepera Park; L. I. Pearsall, Seacliff; F. M. Preston, Oswego Falls; G. L. Rapelye, Corona; I. S. Slaight, Tottenville.

Want Prohibition in Washington.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The Anti-Saloon League is circulating petitions asking Congress to make the District of Columbia a prohibition community. The league believes Congress will act if a number of Washington business men join in the request.

Fourth-Class Postmasters.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The following fourth-class Postmasters were appointed to-day:

NEW YORK—Haynes, A. H. Dresser; South Troupsburg, James B. Potter; Tyner, Milo H. West.

NEW JERSEY—Stanley, Walter V. Sayrs.

Congressional Notes.

A bill creating a commission of five to revise and codify the pension laws of the United States was passed by the Senate yesterday.

Stewart of Nevada handed up a joint resolution granting the Commercial Cable Company the right to lay a cable to Cuba. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Relations with Cuba, of which Senator Platt of Connecticut is Chairman.

Senator Hansbrough of North Dakota offered a bill for the establishment of "a high court of patents, trade marks, and copyrights, to consist of seven Judges." The bill provides that the proposed court shall be a court of record and of appellate jurisdiction.

Senator Sullivan of Mississippi presented a bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund money realized on cotton captured in the Southern States during the civil war and from the tax levied upon cotton in those States at that time. This money was covered into the United States Treasury.

The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections agreed to take up on Friday, Jan. 5, the protest against the continuance of Senator Clark of Montana to occupy his seat in the Senate. No decision was reached in the Scott case. The Quay case was not considered in committee.

William V. Allen, the recently appointed Senator from Nebraska, was present when the Senate convened, and at the conclusion of the reading of the Journal Mr. Thurston, (Rep., Neb.,) his colleague, presented him at the Secretary's desk, where the oath of office was administered. Mr. Allen was cordially greeted by his old colleagues.

CURRENCY BILL IN THE SENATE.

Substitute, with Amendments, Offered for the House Measure—Discussion Set for Jan. 4.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The Financial bill passed by the House yesterday was received from the House, and at the suggestion of Mr. Aldrich, (Rep., R. I.,) Chairman of the Finance Committee, it was referred to that committee.

The committee had authorized Mr. Aldrich to report the Senate Financial bill as a substitute for the House bill as soon as the House bill should be received, and Mr. Aldrich lost no time in carrying out this instruction. He gave notice that he would ask for consideration of the substitute bill Jan. 4, at 2 o'clock, and this was agreed to.

The committee agreed to several changes in phraseology of the bill. One of these changes was made in the second section relating to the sale of bonds for the maintenance of the gold reserve, and is as follows:

"The gold coin received from the sale of said bonds shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury and exchanged for notes which have been redeemed in the manner hereinbefore provided, and the amount of gold coin and notes in the reserve fund shall at no time exceed the maximum sum of $150,000,000."

Another change applies to the provision concerning the issuance of notes by banks so as to provide explicitly for the application of this provision to banks "upon which an amount of circulating notes has been issued less than the par value of the bonds."

A provision is also added for the repeal of the present law limiting the issuance of bank notes to less than the par value of bonds deposited.

TO RESTRICT REPRESENTATION.

Congress Will Consider a Bill Providing for a New Basis.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—For expediency the Payne plan of reapportioning delegates to the Republican National Convention was not voted on at the recent meeting of the committee, but there are indications that the project to restrict representation in Congress will be taken up with the view of limiting the strength of a State's representation to the actual number of voters reported as participating in Congressional elections.

Representative Hopkins, who was made Chairman of the Census Committee in the House, finds a strong sentiment in favor of such a measure on the Republican side. Mr. Hopkins did not propose the measure, it having been brought into the Fifty-fifth Congress by Mr. Crumpacker of Indiana. The bill will undertake, under the sanction of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution, to reduce representation because of the fact that certain citizens are prevented from voting.

There are Democrats here who would be surprised to see such an act passed, and who would not regard it, if passed, as not entirely uninvited. Democrats in Kentucky declared after the Gubernatorial election that colored voters were excluded from the polls at precincts in Lexington and Frankfort by the election officers. Louisiana Democrats have stated that there was no doubt that colored voters have been excluded from the polls in Congressional elections.

One eminent Southern Democrat has said that if such a measure is passed it will be because it has been invited.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE DISCUSSED.

Ex-Speaker Grow Defends Retention of the Philippines.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—In the House to-day Mr. Payne, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, presented the resolution for the distribution of the President's message to the various committees having jurisdiction.

It was in the usual form. Mr. Payne stated that Mr. Grow, the venerable ex-Speaker of the House, desired to address the House for forty minutes upon the resolution, and it was arranged that the Democrats should have an equal amount of time if they desired it.

Mr. Grow read a carefully prepared speech in defense of the policy of retaining possession of the Philippines as a logical result of the war with Spain and Dewey's victory in Manila.

He said the people of the District of Columbia would have just as much right to rebel against the authority of the United States as the people of the Philippines. The "copperheads" of 1861-5 were succeeded by the "anti-imperialists" of to-day. Both sought to embarrass the Government.

Mr. Hall, (Rep., Col.,) submitted some remarks in criticism of the statements in the President's message about the prosperous condition of the country. He charged that a large proportion of the alleged prosperity was fictitious, and instanced the case of the numerous industrial trusts which, he said, had been inflated with wind and floated. Many of these bubbles had been pricked within the last few days, and to-day the newspapers were filled with the stories of disaster on Wall Street.

Mr. Gaines, (Dem., Tenn.,) spoke briefly in opposition to Mr. Grow's statement last Friday that from 1860 to 1878 "coin" was understood to mean and did mean "gold." The resolution was then adopted.

AFFAIRS OF NEW POSSESSIONS.

Dissatisfaction in Congress Over Naming of Additional Committees.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—It is apparent that some dissatisfaction is felt by the members of the Foreign Affairs Committee in the House and the Foreign Relations Committee in the Senate over the creation of the Insular Committee in the House and three new committees in the Senate to take care of the affairs of our new possessions. It is not maintained that Cuba is a foreign country, so it is not considered appropriate by the Speaker that its affairs should be taken up by a Foreign Affairs Committee.

Puerto Rico is certainly not foreign, and its affairs should be considered, it is contended, by a committee other than that on foreign affairs. But it is plain that the work of the Foreign Affairs Committee must be affected by the reference to the new committees of business for which the members of the older committee have been prepared and which they unquestionably expected to take up and consider.

Mr. Hitt goes upon the Insular Committee of the House, but he is the only member of the Foreign Affairs Committee who gets a place in that body.

ARIZONA SEEKING STATEHOOD.

Gov. Murphy Thinks the Territory Will Be Admitted This Winter.

Gov. N. O. Murphy of Arizona, who is at the Holland House, is sanguine that that Territory will shortly be admitted to the union of States.

"I don't want to say much at this time," he said yesterday, "but the outlook is most favorable. We have a population largely in excess of very many of the Territories heretofore admitted to Statehood. Our country was never before so prosperous, both in mining and agriculture. The people are contented, progressive, and industrious. Everything is moving along excellently on industrial lines, and the people are a unit on the question of Statehood. I shall return to Washington to-morrow. We have been patiently knocking at the doors of Congress for some time, and I sincerely believe we are to be admitted soon after the opening of the new year."

New Bills in the House.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Among the bills introduced to-day in the House were the following:

Mr. Hull of Iowa, to authorize the Secretary of War to examine the property known as Bulls Ferry, opposite Eighty-sixth Street, New York Harbor, with a view to its utilization as a home for the army transport service.

Mr. Taylor of Alabama, on behalf of his colleague, Gen. Wheeler, to require the First Sergeant of each company of the United States Army to call each month the names of the members of his company killed in battle.

Mr. Lacey of Iowa, providing that any person who shall be found guilty of obstructing any train carrying United States mails shall be punishable by a fine of $10,000 or imprisonment for ten years, or both.

Missionary Board's New Secretary.

The Rev. Robert Bootman Kimber, rector of Trinity Episcopal Church, Seymour, Conn., has been elected local Secretary to the Board of Managers of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church. The office is one newly created. His duties will be confined to the routine of the office of the Associate Secretary to the board, at the Church Missions House, Fourth Avenue and East Twenty-second Street.

SPAIN WILL PAY INTEREST.

To Continue Payments to Americans Under the Treaty of 1834, Although Not Compelled by Law.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The Spanish Government has undertaken to continue the payments which it was pledged to make under the treaty of 1834, and the State Department has been notified that the Government at Madrid has drawn two drafts for the payment of the interest due on what are known as the "perpetual rentes of 1834." These drafts cover the arrears of interest for the years 1898 and 1899, the payments having been suspended upon the outbreak of war. It was entirely within the technical right of the Spanish Government, under international law, to refuse to be bound by the treaty of 1834, and its action is regarded by the State Department as peculiarly gracious.

The payments under this treaty are made on account of illegal blockading operations by the Spanish naval forces early in this century, when the Spanish South and Central American colonies were struggling to achieve their freedom. American shipping and mercantile interests generally suffered from these blockading operations, and a joint commission assessed damages against the Spanish Government in favor of the American claimants to the amount of about $600,000. Instead of paying the cash, the Spanish Government, with the consent of our own Government, as well as of the claimants, inscribed the names of the latter upon what is known as the roll of "perpetual rentes," guaranteeing to pay the claimants the interest upon this principal in perpetuity.

SAMPSON WAS PAID TOO MUCH.

Controller of the Treasury Cuts Off $549, and Rules He Was Not Entitled to Rear Admiral's Pay.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—R. J. Tracewell, the Controller of the Treasury, has revised the action of the Auditor for the Navy Department in allowing the claim of Rear Admiral William T. Sampson for pay as Rear Admiral while performing the duties of that grade.

In making the readjustment Controller Tracewell finds that Rear Admiral Sampson was allowed $549 too much by the Auditor for the Navy Department in arriving at the differences in pay in the various grades which Admiral Sampson held.

The Controller holds that an officer of the navy nominated for advancement in number in pursuance of Section 1,506, Revised Statutes, which advancement is not concurred in by the Senate, and who receives an ad interim appointment for such advancement while his case was pending before the Senate, is not entitled to the pay of the grade to which it was proposed to promote him.

The Controller also holds that there is no law authorizing the payment of the pay of Rear Admiral, United States Navy, to an officer below that grade because he performs the duty and is accorded the rank of said grade.

BYNUM EXPECTS CONFIRMATION.

Denies that He Ever Joined the Republican Party.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—William D. Bynum, formerly of Indiana, and recently appointed a member of the Board of General Appraisers at New York, that he had ever stated that the Republican Party. He when on the stump favoring he had always said that he with the Republicans except on the financial question.

He said he had never voted the Republican ticket, and never took part in a Republican convention of any kind, and he did not see how any one in the Senate or anywhere else could consider that he was a Republican. He added that the law in regard to members of the Board of Appraisers being of different political faiths, simply provided that they should not all be of the same political party. He was confident that his nomination would be confirmed.

CALLS FREE MASONRY SINFUL.

Father Thomas Cusack Creates a Sensation in Flushing.

The Rev. Father Thomas Cusack, who is assisting in conducting a mission at St. Michael's Church, in Flushing, L. I., has created a sensation by certain statements he made against Masonry. Flushing is one of the strongest Masonic centres on Long Island, many prominent members of the order living there.

In response to a question by one of the attendants at the mission, "Is it wrong for Catholics to become Freemasons?" the Father replied: "It is. Freemasonry teaches the natural religion of man instead of the supernatural or revealed religion of Jesus Christ. The very oath that a man takes on becoming a Freemason is sinful.

"On taking the first degree a man takes an oath that if he divulges any of the secrets of the order a knife may be drawn across his throat, his tongue pulled out, and his body divided. On taking the second degree the oath is that a man's left breast may be cut open and his heart pulled out if he divulges a secret. On taking the third degree the obligation is that a man shall be disemboweled for violating the oath of secrecy."

PROSPEROUS YEAR FOR KANSAS.

Gov. Stanley Tells of the Increase of Wealth in the State.

Gov. W. E. Stanley of Kansas is at the Holland House. Talking with a reporter yesterday he said:

"Kansas was never in better shape than at present. In the last year we have refunded $3,000,000 of State bonds at lower rates. We were paying 6 and 7 per cent. Now we are paying 4 and 5. Our bank deposits were never before so large, and we have more than $8,000,000 surplus above the required legal reserve. Why, in Brown County, where there are no large towns, the bank deposits exceed $60 per capita.

"Everything possible is being done to safeguard the people, and you would be surprised at the rapidity with which private debts are being paid off. To add to our good fortune, additional zinc deposits of great value have been found. Kansas will soon be one of the richest States in the Union."

WANTS CANALS IMPROVED.

State Commerce Commission to Urge Legislature to Action.

Members of the State Commerce Commission are busily engaged on their report, which is to be presented to the Legislature some time between Jan. 10 and 15. It is known that among other recommendations the further improvement of the artificial waterways of the State to a considerable extent will be urged.

Many arguments have been made against the canals, for there are many opposing interests, but all have failed, and much new and valuable matter bearing on them and other subjects in the scope of the commission's labors will be placed in the Governor's hands. Ex-Mayor Charles A. Schieren of Brooklyn is the Chairman of the commission, the other members of which are Alexander R. Smith, C. C. Shayne, Andrew H. Green, and Hugh Kelly. The Commissioners decline to discuss the forthcoming report.

Held Blameless for Son's Death.

Coroner Bausch and a jury yesterday exonerated Lawrence Doyle from all blame in connection with the death of his son, Thomas Doyle, who died in Gouverneur Hospital on Dec. 1 from the effects of a stab wound in the stomach. Doyle lives at 25½ Gouverneur Street.

LEGAL NOTES.

LOSS OF PREMIUM OF TRUST INVESTMENT.—The late Jesse Hoyt directed his executors to invest $1,250,000 for the use and benefit of his daughter, Mary Irene Hoyt, and to apply the income "to her use, for and during her natural life, in the most bounteous and liberal manner as to expenditure, and so as to promote her convenience and comfort and gratify her reasonable desires." The principal sum, or the securities in which it should be invested, and any surplus upon the daughter's death, was to go to nephews and nieces of the testator. The executors were directed to distribute or retain without sale all such stocks or securities as the testator might have at the time of his decease, which they thought expedient to hold, but they were not to make any new investments, except in first mortgage bonds and mortgages on unincumbered real estate or United States, State, railroad, and city bonds. In creating the trust fund for the daughter, the trustees did not set apart any of the securities held by the testator, but invested $250,000 in cash, chiefly in Government and railroad bonds at a high premium. Owing to a contest over the will, though the testator died in 1882, the trust was not established until October, 1886. The premiums, which the trustees paid amounted to $245,000, and to restore this sum they retained each year from the income a sum equivalent to the proportionate wearing away of the value of the securities, in order to create a sinking fund. In August, 1895, Miss Hoyt for the first time objected to the retention during the preceding year by the trustees for such purpose of $8,039. A referee reported that the trustees were justified in this course, but the Surrogate decided otherwise. The First Appellate Division, in March, 1898, unanimously reversed the Surrogate's decree, holding that the depreciation in the value of the Government bonds, caused by their approaching maturity, should be borne by the life beneficiary. The Court of Appeals has now reversed the Appellate Division and affirmed the Surrogate's decree. Judge Bartlett, giving the opinion, holds that it was the intention of the testator, derived from the face of the will and the surrounding circumstances, to impose the loss of the premium upon the remaindermen—his nephews and nieces.

PAROL EVIDENCE INADMISSIBLE TO AVOID A RELEASE.—Anthony Van Arsdale Winans, about November, 1894, after the death of his father, Anthony V. Winans, and the probate of his will, received a release signed by Grace E. W. Moore, who was a devisee under the will, and by W. G. Winans, by the terms of which they released to him all their interest in the estate. After Mrs. Moore's death, an action was brought by Francis G. Moore, her executor, to set aside the release, on the ground that it was signed by Mrs. Moore on the representation that all the relatives, devisees, and legatees of the testator were to join in its execution. William W. Moore, husband of decedent, stated on the trial that his wife received a letter inclosing the release, in which she was requested to sign it, and by which it was stated that other members of the family were going to sign, and that unless she signed and they all signed it would be void; and that she executed the release and sent it to the writer of the letter. A judgment of the New York Special Term in favor of plaintiff, holding that, as the paper was not signed by other members of the family, it was void, was reversed by the First Appellate Division two years ago. The Court of Appeals has now affirmed the judgment of the Appellate Division, on the opinion of Justice Rumsey below, in which it was held that the evidence referred to did not show that the release was delivered on any condition, and that an instrument conveying real property, apparently complete upon its face, which must necessarily be under seal, cannot be delivered to the grantee upon a parol condition.

MASTER AND SERVANT.—Thomas Ray, fifteen years old, who had been in the service of various trainers, including one named Albert Cooper, returned to the latter's service as stable boy and jockey in the Spring of 1891, after Cooper had been put in charge at the Morris Park track of the training of thoroughbred horses owned by James R. Keene and Foxhall Keene. In a suit by Ray against the Keenes for injuries he received, he testified that he rode horses for exercise and speeding on the Morris Park track, where he and eight or ten other boys lived together, slept, and ate their meals. After he was through with his work on Aug. 22, and was about to leave with his companions for a swim, Cooper told him to ride a horse belonging to a Mr. Crosson. While coming down the stretch, going very fast, as Cooper had directed him, the horse ran against the fence, threw him off, and kicked him in the head. The liability of the defendants was placed upon the ground that they violated Section 292 of the Penal Code forbidding the employment of any child under sixteen for such purposes. The Court of Appeals has sustained the judgment below dismissing the complaint, holding that the employers of a trainer who employed jockeys to ride racing horses, did not render such owners liable for an injury done to a jockey under sixteen, whose employment for such purpose was forbidden by statute, by reason of his being compelled, contrary to his expressed wish, by the trainer to ride the horse of a third person.

ADVANTAGEOUS CONTRACT PREVENTED.—In an action brought by the St. Lawrence Manufacturing Company against Marcus P. Mason, one of its Trustees, for $53,000 damages for preventing the consummation by parties in Minnesota of a contract made by them with the corporation to furnish certain advantageous inducements for the removal of its furniture and harrow works from Gouverneur, N. Y., to Minneapolis, Minn., it appeared that the Trustee advised such parties that material facts in regard to the condition of the corporation had been concealed from them. A nonsuit, granted on the trial, and affirmed by the Third Appellate Division, was recently sustained by the Court of Appeals. Judge Bartlett, giving the opinion, held that the Trustee had performed only an obvious duty, as a matter of honest business dealing, and that there was no act of his which could be regarded in law as the proximate cause of the abandonment of the contract, but that the abandonment resulted from the report of an expert who examined the condition of the corporation, at the suggestion of its President, after the Trustee's disclosure. Judge Bartlett remarked that it must be admitted that the record was not particularly creditable, either to Mr. Corbin, the President of the company, or to Mr. Mason, the defendant. "The former," the Court said, "is shown to have concealed the truth in regard to this well-nigh moribund corporation, and the defendant seemed willing to have done the same thing if his bonus of $3,200 had been paid him under the Minnesota contract."

MADE HIM LATE FOR SCHOOL.

Chief Concern of Lad Pulled from Beneath Horses' Heels.

Thomas Whitley, nine years old, of 163 Steuben Street, Jersey City, was knocked down in Montgomery Street yesterday by a wagon. He was saved from being run over by James J. Hopkins, Principal of the High School, who dragged him from under the horses' heels. Young Whiteley's chief concern was lest he should be late for school, as he would have to go home to have his clothes cleaned.

"You needn't worry about that," said Mr. Hopkins, "I'll send an excuse to No. 2 school, and you can take your time."

Whiteley is said to be a bright pupil. He clothes himself by selling papers after school hours.

TO LOOK INTO EAST SIDE VICE.

Police Board Has Decided to Act—Captains May Be Transferred.

The Police Board has decided to make a thorough investigation of the moral condition of the lower east side. A resolution was passed Monday authorizing the Committee on Rules and Discipline, consisting of Commissioners Hess and Sexton and President York, to investigate the Eldridge and Fifth Street Precincts, and also to make an inquiry into the charges that a gambling house is in operation at 9 Second Avenue, the proprietors of which are said to be in collusion with the police.

President York would not divulge just how his committee proposed to go about the investigation, but it is understood that a number of persons and representatives of societies and churches who have been complaining about the east side will be summoned before the board to tell what they know. The Captains of the two precincts named, it is said, may be transferred to other commands.

An Extraordinary Offering of Art Pottery.

Marble and Bronze Figures, Mantel Sets, Onyx Tables and Other Rare Specimens

OF INTEREST TO ALL WHO WISH TO GIVE RICH PRESENTS.

The collection of articles involved in this sale consists principally of "Show Pieces." That means they were made for exhibitions, for special displays or for testing the possibilities of certain artists and potteries.
Our buyers secured many of them at about half their real value. They have served us well—in a decorative way—and we have no further use for them. You will find them arranged on the second floor, adjacent to Cut Glass, marked for quick distribution.

Satsuma Kora, dragon cover, 46 inches high, would be a bargain at $50.00; doubly a bargain at $24.87.

Pot and Pedestal—Valluris Faience, turquoise blue shadings. 44 inches high, $28.87.

Roman Gladiator—Teplitz Terra Cotta, 36 inches high—a pure classic—price now is $34.63.

Satsuma Vase, 48 inches high, dragon handles, richly gilded, slightly imperfect, $100.00 would be a fair price for it—we'll sell for $37.31.

Rudolstadt Ewer, authentic Cappo di Monti style, 46 inches high, reduced from $87.41 to $47.41.

Bust of Winter—a Teplitz Terra Cotta allegorization, 32 inches high, no duplicate, $43.49.

Pot and Pedestal, from the Royal Art Pottery, England. The pedestal is five feet high; the Pot is twenty inches in diameter, $49.66.

Piano Lamp, five feet high, Cloisonne Vase, solid brass mountings, complete with handsome globe. The cost of the Vase alone was $100.00; you may own the Lamp for $63.49.

Piano Lamp, six feet high, made of large pieces Mexican onyx, beautiful gilt trimmings, complete with superb globe, $99.63.

Hungarian Vase, ancient battle scenes vividly portrayed in bas-relief, 44 inches high. Only one ever made, $143.66.

Crystal Candelabrum from the celebrated Cristallieries de Baccarat, 87 inches high, fitted for twenty-four electric lights, cut in the most artistic effect, adorned with myriad hanging prisms that sparkle and radiate the clearest and brightest of tints, worth $1500.00; we'll sell it for $498.41.

"The Fisher Girl"—A Castellina marble figure, 34 inches high, reduced from $149.00 to $66.46.

Bronze Figure of Mercury, 33 inches high. A duplicate displayed in the window of a prominent art dealer at $250.00; our price $139.66.

Mantel Set, solid onyx with gold trimmings, including clock and pair of urns, no duplicate, reduced from $187.66 to $99.66.

Onyx Tables, two very elaborate styles of which there are no duplicates, reduced from $118.66 to $49.66

Many other smaller pieces, but equally artistic and desirable, have been reduced in the same way.

THE MUTUAL RESERVE WINS.

Attorney General Says He Has No Facts on Which to Proceed.

ALBANY, Dec. 19.—Attorney General Davies to-day made his decision in the case of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, in which he says he is powerless to take action against the corporation unless facts stated in the report of the Superintendent of Insurance warrant such action. In forwarding the decision to Mr. Payn, Mr. Davies says:

"I am convinced that your report fails to state sufficient facts upon which an action could be predicated by the Attorney General against the corporation under the provisions of the statute."

NOT QUITE DEAD.

The President has placed the money question first in order, and the Republicans in Congress, by taking the matter up at the very beginning of the session, indicate that they regard it as first in importance.

Certainly the money question cannot be dead, when in legislation it takes precedence over a question involving the principles of our Government and the rights of millions of people with whom we are at war. * * * Not until the recent message was sent to Congress has the gold standard been clearly and unequivocally recommended. It indicates that in the next campaign the Republicans will make an open fight for gold monometallism.

Heretofore all parties have advocated the double standard, differing only as to the means of restoring it. Now it will be a clear-cut issue between the double standard and the single gold standard. If the gold standard is accepted by the American people it will only be a question of a short time when silver will be denied legal tender qualities and reduced to the level of subsidiary coinage.—W. J. BRYAN.

No, the money question is not quite dead, but the symptoms of its impending dissolution are so numerous and alarming that public interest in it has narrowed down to the revelations of the autopsy and the ceremonies of the funeral. It is true that the Republican Party will make the next campaign "an open fight for gold monometallism." There is no reason why it should be a secret or subterranean fight. The principle they contend for will already have been established and enacted into law. A Republican Congress and a Republican President will have put upon the statute book a law declaring the gold dollar to be the standard unit and measure of value. The country will then have a currency system unmistakably based upon the gold standard, the single gold standard. We shall not have gold monometallism, for there will be a very great amount of silver coin in circulation and the Government will continue to coin silver, which will retain its debt-paying powers unimpaired under the declarations of the act of 1890. Mr. BRYAN knows very well that we shall be a monometallic country only as to the standard, not as to coinage and circulating medium.

In making an open fight for the sound and honest system they have established, the Republicans will be in the position of a clergyman defending the Ten Commandments before a pious and assenting congregation; of the head of a well-brought-up family asserting at the dinner table that politeness and courtesy are commendable; of an upright man reminding his equally upright neighbors that honesty is the best policy. In the view of the Republican Party and of the very great majority of the American people there is only one side to the money question, the gold side, the honest side, the side which is to be the law of the land as soon as the Senate passes the House bill.

The Republicans will no longer fight in the open country as in 1896, but will defend an impregnable fortress which they have had the wisdom to construct since their former contest with the forces of Bryanism. Their banner will be shown this time upon the outer wall. It is true, as Mr. BRYAN says, that the Republicans were timid about gold in 1896. Mr. MCKINLEY himself shunned the use of the word at first, and the leaders feared to put it into the platform. They compromised with their fears by inserting a lot of empty stuff about international bimetallism. We saw then, and said, what Mr. BRYAN now says, that this was "politics." There was no more chance then of an international agreement than there is now—that is, none at all. The wiser Republican leaders must have known it had no chance, but they did not know the sentiment of the country well enough to risk a campaign on a gold-standard platform, so they "trimmed."

They have quit trimming and no longer make any pretense of interest in international bimetallism. Why? Because they are no longer in doubt about the sentiment of the American people, the American voters. They know that an honest currency based on the gold standard is the choice of the people in so many States that a candidate running on a gold-standard platform will receive a very great majority of the Electoral votes. That is why they have passed a gold-standard law, that is why they will oppose gold to Mr. BRYAN'S silver next Summer.

To the visible and sure proofs of popular belief and preference which have determined the Republican policy Mr. BRYAN and his managers are as blind as bats. After twenty years of active discussion and many costly experiments the American Nation has deliberately chosen the gold standard. Mr. BRYAN is going to ask it to abandon its choice and accept the silver standard, which it has rejected with every symptom of loathing and distrust. He cannot see that the world has moved. He does not even see that some of the Democratic States, or States usually reckoned Democratic, like Kentucky, Tennesee, Maryland, and even Alabama, for local or general reasons, will be likely to vote against him if he puts silver to the front again.

The vain and light-headed ambition of BRYAN is easily accounted for. It is pleasanter for him to run for the Presidency again, to make speeches everywhere and to be in the public eye all Summer, even if he knows that he is going to be disgracefully beaten, than it would be to shut himself up to privacy and honorable toil. But the party, the leaders of the Democracy, why are they blind, why do they insist on plunging over the cataract in broad daylight.

REVIEWING THE SITUATION.

Three points stand out in the various views expressed as to the disturbance in Wall Street on Monday. These are: The relation of the Government to the local money market and the degree to which the Treasury can and ought to come to the relief of the market; the speculation in "industrials," with its effect on general business; the relation of the currency system to business.

As to the Treasury, Mr. GAGE has done all that he can do or can be asked to do by offering to place in the banks the internal revenue receipts, amounting to a million a day, up to some thirty millions. The banks of the Clearing House are seeking to make arrangements, which will not be difficult, to secure United States bonds from the trust companies and from the savings banks to make the required deposit against the Treasury funds. Whatever relief can legitimately be afforded by the Government will be extended in this way. It was the only way left open, for the purchase of bonds at the price the Treasury would pay had been shown to be impracticable. The offers already made had not been accepted. It must be borne in mind, however, that this relief is available only against the effect of apprehension upon general business. It will not give values to stocks that have none, and the money thus made loanable cannot be borrowed on stocks of that character. It will be a definite and substantial source of tranquillity and courage, among the class that were "short" of those qualities. That is all that can be expected from it and all that is intended by it.

As to the effect of the speculation in so-called "industrials," it is easy enough to see that it has been very great, but it is not easy to say whether it is yet exhausted. A very large amount of the accumulated capital of the country, resulting from a long period of enforced economy followed by a period of good crops and good prices, has been locked up in the securities of this class. But all industrials are not speculative, and even those that are in some degree speculative have a solid basis of earning capacity, not equal to the superstructure of securities, but sufficient to make these securities valuable if they can be held a reasonable time. The dangerous industrials are those in which the proportion of the securities manufactured for the Street and not based on actual earning capacity is so large that the holders cannot carry them or unload them in a sober market. For these the only possible disposition is extinction or such contraction as will bring them to a safe basis. A good deal of this has been accomplished, and every effort will be made to do what remains to be done with the least strain on general credit. Fortunately the bulk of this speculation appears to have been confined to the East, and chiefly to New York. The rest of the country has largely furnished the elements for the combinations and we have kindly undertaken to float the securities of these combinations. The disturbance of credit and confidence caused by the inevitable reaction has been pretty well confined to this section.

For this state of things it is plain that the operation of our currency system is to an appreciable degree responsible. We have all heard in the last two days the cry that there is "not money enough," and that there should be some easy way to get more when it is needed. But the real difficulty has been that when there was too much money there was no way of contracting it. When it was not in active use in the various parts of the country it flowed to the money centres, and especially to New York, and helped to promote the very speculation that has caused our present trouble. If the currency so congested in New York had been retired when it was no longer needed in exchanges throughout the country, the temptation to the inflation of credit that has taken place would have been far less. So far as the volume of the currency and its character are involved in the actual situation the lesson of that situation is that the currency should be made truly elastic. It should stretch to meet legitimate demands and it should shrink when these demands cease.

COMMISSIONER SCHURMAN ON THE PHILIPPINES.

There is much common sense and real statesmanship in the recent utterances of President SCHURMAN as to the future of the Philippines. Whether that future is to be reasonably peaceful and prosperous is the problem for us to solve, and its solution is the test of the right or wrong of our whole policy.

Our chief difficulty is in the distrust of the natives. The only way to remove it is by actually proving ourselves trustworthy. The great mass of the natives judge us by the Spaniards, who are the only whites they have known. The Spaniards, in too many cases, deceived, cheated, robbed, and persecuted them. They expect like treatment from us. So far we have had little chance to prove that the expectation is not founded in fact. We have been forced to fight the only class of the natives that had shown much ability to manage affairs. These naturally have spread the notion that we are seeking conquest only for gain. As the insurrection yields it is our plain duty, as President SCHURMAN insists, to establish local civil government with the largest participation possible for the natives and with the public pledge to extend that participation as rapidly as the natives show that they can make good use of it.

For the supervision of this process we need a tested and trained civil service, independent of all the political jobbery that has so largely prevailed in our own country. We are bound to give the Filipinos a better service than our own, because we are acting as trustees, and have no moral right to act at all except as trustees. We may sacrifice our own interest to partisanship; we have no right to sacrifice theirs. This is the substance of President SCHURMAN'S teaching from the rich experience he has had. It is a vital and much needed lesson.

MR. ALGER ON MOVING ARMIES.

But for himself Mr. RUSSELL A. ALGER would be regarded by his countrymen with a relief not readily to be distinguished from admiration. When anything occurs to bring him to their minds their amiable impulse is to say: "Oh, what does it matter? He did get out, didn't he? Let the man alone."

Now this state of the public mind is, of all possible states, the best for Mr. ALGER, if he only knew it. Why does he not know it? Has he no friends? As a matter of fact we know he has. We are even frequently informed, and we are willing to be informed, that "personally he is a very nice fellow." But then the friends whom he has made ought to have enough courage to explain to him that the people are willing to forget what he ought to be anxious to have them forget. If he will say nothing about his administration of the War Department they are willing to let it go. That and the facts of his service in the civil war are the only two things about his record that his countrymen have any very strong objections to. They will waive their objections as long as he is content to remain in strict privacy. For the rest of his natural life there is nothing so becomes him as modest stillness and humility.

Why, oh, why, should not the man in respect to whom this singularly amiable temper, so characteristic of the American people, prevails, be not merely contented but overjoyed with his immunity? Why should he force himself upon the public notice. Why, of all things in the world, should he announce that he is preparing a history of his administration of the War Department? Why, in particular, should he institute and invite a comparison between the work of the British War Office in the invasion of South Africa and the work of his department in the invasion of Cuba? Infatuated man! The British War Office has forwarded to South Africa some seventy thousand men of all arms, with all their apparatus and appliances. And there has not been a single scandal about the operation. He managed, with incredible labor, to forward about twenty thousand men from Tampa to Santiago for the invasion of Cuba, not so many days' sail as the other is weeks'. He managed to reduce their apparatus of war to hopeless confusion before they left their native shores, to send away the cavalry without horses and the artillery without sufficient guns, to starve and poison the troops, from the moment they landed, and to expose the military service of this country, except so far as concerned the actual efficiency of the officers and men on the fighting line, to the derision of the world.

Things have changed. Mr. ALGER is out, Mr. ROOT is in. Their countrymen have not suggested the punishment of Mr. ALGER for disgracing the Nation. They have shown themselves willing to forget his service in the War Department. Why will he not let them? Why will he insist upon raking up that sad and disgraceful story when it can be of no use but for reproof and edification? It is hard to tell. The most obvious answer is that Mr. ALGER has no friends or none whose advice has any influence upon him.

TO RESERVE FIFTH AVENUE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Some time ago your paper indorsed a petition or a resolution that was introduced into the Municipal Assembly having for its object the restriction of Fifth Avenue from Twenty-third Street to Fifty-ninth Street during certain hours of the day—after 2 o'clock—to pleasure vehicles, and only those business vehicles requiring to deliver goods on Fifth Avenue, and they only to approach Fifth Avenue from the side street nearest the number where goods are to be delivered. If you will note the condition of Fifth Avenue in the afternoon, and as it has been all the Fall and Spring for several years past, you will see that it is almost impossible for anybody driving a private vehicle to drive there with any pleasure, and certainly not possible with safety; the avenue is so crowded with all kinds of business wagons, some of them a disgrace to the concern which owns them, and the drivers seemingly taking delight in interfering, though I presume their principal endeavor is to see the driving. In no city in this country is it so the case as here, and in no city do I believe would it be allowed where practically the only approach to the park is through one street. There are many thousands on the sidewalk who do not belong to the wealthy class who would like to walk and see the beautiful horses and vehicles who are robbed of that pleasure by the crowded condition of the street, and it is unsafe for any pedestrian to cross it, as the accidents that occur there show. The conditions of that street are forcing a great many people I know out of the city a great deal of the time, as is the subject of remark, but those interested in it don't care to take up the matter, as they have always been defeated upon the plea that it was legislation for a class, which it surely is not. But certainly so brilliant a show of equipages, conceded by everybody who has traveled the finest in the world for the number and variety of turnouts, should be allowed a free chance for the driving upon a street which is practically an entrance to a most beautiful Park and people are entitled to go there safely. CITIZEN.

Our correspondent puts the case accurately as well as forcibly. It is not only an inconvenience to everybody who can afford either to keep a carriage or occasionally to hire one for a visit to the Park, and to strangers as well as to residents, that the one avenue which is available for access to the Park and for pleasure driving below the Park should be so crowded and congested during the driving hours by the drivers of trucks and business wagons which are not allowed within the Park itself at any time. It is also a public nuisance and a municipal disgrace. As our correspondent says, it is not allowed in any other city in the country to anything like the same extent. It is rather a mortifying reflection that no other city has a municipal Legislature composed of persons so unthinking as the members of our own Municipal Assembly. But that seems to be the natural conclusion from the facts.

The nuisance is an old one, but it is a growing one. At this season Fifth Avenue is crowded all the afternoon with pleasure vehicles making their way to or from the Park. If it were reserved, like the drives in the Park itself, for their use during those hours, there would still be confusion. But this confusion is worse confounded when the avenue is opened also to the drivers of business vehicles, who might as well take any one of half a dozen other routes which are not crowded. They take this, as our correspondent suggests, mainly because they can thus see the turnouts on the avenue. But, incidentally, nobody who tries to use the avenue for pleasure driving can have failed to notice that, with a certain proportion of them, there is an added satisfaction in getting in the way of pleasure vehicles and obstructing the procession.

Doubtless the public purpose would be answered if the owners of business vehicles would instruct their drivers to keep off the avenue in the afternoon unless they had business in it; and, if they had, to enter it at the corner nearest their business and leave it at the next corner. But a municipal regulation would effect the same object in a more direct way. If Mr. CLAUSEN and Mr. GUGGENHEIMER would consult about the matter, which both of them doubtless fully understand, there ought to be no trouble in getting the needful regulation.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Evidence of the curious tendency that is in us all to see what we are looking for, and not to see, or, at least, to ignore, things in which we have little or no personal interest, is to be found in the fact that The Philadelphia Medical Journal views the reassembling of Congress with anxiety, not because of what it may do or not do with the currency and the Philippines, but because in its abounding ignorance it may take ill-advised action on the question of vivisection. Our learned contemporary seems to fear the worst from the statesmen whom it calls "our Misrepresentatives," and it more than intimates that all will be lost unless the American people "once more resume the tremendous labor of preventing crimes against civilization and science." Continuing in less impassioned style, the Philadelphian writes: "For us the most important is the attempt, undertaken and represented by the anti-vivisectionists, to legislate against scientific medical progress and the lessening of the great common burden of disease and death. Senator GALLINGER has reintroduced the Anti-vivisection bill as Senate Bill No. 34. It is a wearying struggle, but we must resume it with each session of Congress. Eternal vigilance is here the price of liberty in a most literal sense. Every physician should send protests to his Representatives in Washington, and in any other way bring all right influences to bear to prevent these recurrent attempts at evil legislation." There may be an element of exaggeration in these remarks, but the warning is one well worth heeding, and, while the matter may not be quite as important as The Medical Journal thinks, still it is very far from inconsequential.

—Our own Newburg correspondent made what seemed like a sufficiently moving tale when he recorded the thrilling vicissitudes and finally happy adjustment of the Rev. GEORGE ALLEN'S love affairs. He told, as they will recall whose memories run back to that—journalistically speaking—remote epoch, the beginning of the week, how Mr. ALLEN of Milton engaged himself to one young woman, repeated the pleasing process with another without any preliminary loosening of the former bonds, shot himself in the head six times as the most convenient remedy for the resulting worries, and then recovered, not to face new troubles, as would have been the case with a less fortunate man, but to be released by fiancée No. 2, reaccepted by fiancée No 1, and proclaimed a model pastor by his discriminating congregation. This, as we have remarked, was a well-variegated story, and we had not thought of finding fault with it until we found it rehearsed in The Herald with an added and most remarkable detail—a detail the absence of which left our own version a poor thing, for which humiliated apology is necessary. For from our neighbor's account we learn not only that the Rev. GEORGE ALLEN shot himself six times, but also that every one of the bullets entered whatever there may be within the amiable gentleman's skull through the same hole in his forehead! That circumstance certainly should not have been omitted. Of course, it is an impossibility, but impossibilities are the commonplaces of the Newburg hinterland, and the more of them a narrative from that region contains the more nearly self-evident is its absolute accuracy. The Herald's correspondent had the courage of his opportunities, while ours—but why dwell on a topic so saddening?

—While we are in some doubt about the wisdom of devoting any more space to a question that never should have been raised—the self-answering question as to when this century ends and the next one begins—still it is something that people insist on talking about, and that is enough to show that they find in it a mysterious interest and a more mysterious uncertainty. Those of them who are unable to grasp the fact that a century is 100 years, and who therefore are maundering on with what they imagine are arguments to prove that next month is the beginning of a new era, were much encouraged the other day when a somewhat obscurely worded translation of the Pope's latest decree referred to the coming year as ushering in the twentieth century. The Latin text of the document has now been made public, and in it there is no faintest trace of support for so silly a theory. What the Holy Father wrote was this: "Cum insuper media nocte postremae diei mensis Decembris futuri anni praesens absolvatur saeculum novumque habeat initium, valde congruum est, ut pio quodam ac solemni ritu Deo Gratiae agantur pro acceptis hujus decursi saeculi beneficiis, et potiora impetrentur, urgente praesertim necessitate temporum ad novum saeculum auspicato ineundum." That is clear, accurate, and explicit. It doesn't, of course, prove that "on the last day of the month of December of the coming year the present century will end and the new one have its beginning," but it recognizes the fact in unmistakable language. The German Emperor, apparently, must stand in solitary grandeur as the only man of any prominence who cannot count up to one hundred. If he enjoys the sensation, nobody has a right to complain.

—Attention is called by The Western Electrician to a curious legal problem that has arisen in the City of Memphis. It is one of considerable moment, in view of the existing and prospective competition between telephone companies, and its authoritative settlement is to be desired. It seems that two Memphis telephone companies gave a certain coal dealer the number 343, and the man advertised it until it became familiar to the people. Later one of the companies undertook to give that same number to a competitor of the coal dealer, and an injunction suit has been begun on the ground that the number has become valuable to the original owner as a part of his business. It is thought that the case will be carried to the Supreme Court of Tennessee for a final decision. "The result," says The Western Electrician, "will be looked for with no little interest. Of course, there will be no dearth of calling signals in any event, and unless business competitors attempt to obtain the use of certain numbers with the deliberate intention to mislead, the contention seems to be capable of ready adjustment." This is not an opinion as to what would be a just decision, and really the matter offers many opportunities for argument. It all depends, of course, on who owns a telephone number—the company that allots it or the man to whom it is allotted.

—One RUSSELL A. ALGER, who, as not quite everybody has yet forgotten, was Secretary of War in the days of some time ago, has been watching the progress of events in South Africa, and as a result of his observations he has concluded that the art of war is not as well understood as it was in his day. This is at once amusing and pathetic. The ex-Secretary contrasts the end of the Cuban campaign with the beginning of that against the Boers. If he waits a while he may not find so many excuses for self-congratulation. The best that can be said in his behalf is that Santiago was taken in spite of him. The Britishers, too, have their troubles, and, if not their Algers, men whose foresight and skill can hardly be called perfect. But this is not the time for comparisons—certainly not for comparisons between incommensurables.

SYMPATHY FOR THE BRITISH.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to thank you for your two editorials on the British defeats. You might, I think, have made them still stronger. Our civilizations stand and fall together! The powers of evil, which you represent as rejoicing over England's defeats, will, if England's power be destroyed, attack us next; our experience in the last war showed that.

It is a turning point in the history of the world; cannot the friends of England meet and decide upon some plan of action to defend her cause—at least with tongue and pen—against the attacks now made upon her by the same parties and with the same malignity which persecuted Dreyfus? It is none too soon for such action, and the danger is none too small.

THE BOERS' RIGHT TO FIGHT.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Why should an American newspaper like THE NEW YORK TIMES advocate and defend the cause of Great Britain in her unwarranted bloody trespass in South Africa against a people who are fighting in defense of their homes, for their liberty and independence? Is not the manifest destiny of mankind the world over working to that end, that precious boon, the inalienable right of self-government? Are not the Boers struggling against the power of a mighty empire for that liberty with such heroic patriotism that demands the admiration of freedom-loving people everywhere? Are they not animated with the same spirit that gave us our freedom, thanks to the revolutionary spirit of American patriots? Is it becoming that an American journal should take the side of invading monarchical armies to crush a people that are giving another evidence that our forefathers fought for? When you print, as you do an editorial, "The Deplorable Reverses of the British," you astonish American readers throughout the land and pain your subscribers with such un-American utterances. To be neutral would be bad enough, but to be against a people fighting for their independence and self-government, in defense of everything that a liberty-loving people hold dear, is fighting against what THE NEW YORK TIMES enjoys to-day and supporting the same enemy that tried to deprive you of it.

Our Pro-Boer Sentiment.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I was sorry to see you in to-day's TIMES express sympathy for England, and advocating moral assistance to her, a course of proceeding which, if you continue in, will deprive a great many readers of THE TIMES of their favorite newspaper.

Believe me, there is such a strong pro-Boer sentiment in the United States that any Administration which shows the least leaning toward an English alliance would next year be swept out of existence, even swallowing Bryan as President rather. England is the octopus which sucks the earth for the benefit of a small clique in London, for all her colonies are on the verge of bankruptcy. O. C. LAWLER.

BURNS IN AMERICA.

John MacFarlane in Toronto Globe.

Oh! peasant bard of princely fame,
Whom Scottish hearts enshrine,
Whose songs, a priceless heritage,
With cords of love entwine;
Not by the Doon and Nith alone,
The storied fields of Ayr,
Thy witchery of power enthralls
And prompts to do and dare;
Fair Florida thy worth doth know,
The mighty woods of Maine
Have caught amid primeval gloom
The glory of thy strain;
In silent watches of the night,
At stirring noon of day,
The peerless Hudson oft hath heard
Sweet Afton's magic lay!

From east to west, no distance keeps,
On Texan plains afar
Thy light of song, O loving heart,
Has pierced—a guiding star!
Beneath the Rockies, weird and white,
The herder knows thy cheer,
Touch'd by the spell the hunter dreams
And drops a tribute tear;
For, lo! the weary years have fled,
The heathy hills of home
A moment flash in fancy's beam
Across the Atlantic's foam;
And hushed to hear, the solemn night
Unbends in starry sheen,
While prairie winds seem fluting low
The charms of Bonnie Jean!

Where erst the lilied flag of France
Did guard St. Lawrence tide,
Where Ottawa's dark stream doth flow,
Ontario's waters glide;
The melting sweetness of thy line
The lover's joy endears.
Thy deeper note to Age doth bring
The precious balm of tears;
In camp and clearing, wheresoe'er
The toiler's lot is cast,
Thy clarion-call to honest worth
A benison has pass'd;
Oh! miracle of manhood high!
Oh! pillar'd Hope that turns
Men's longing gaze—the new world crowns
The ploughman—Robert Burns!

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

Two Novelties at the Kneisel Quartet's Concert Last Night in Mendelssohn Hall.

The Kneisel Quartet is always sure of a hearty welcome when it comes to town in these days, and therefore it was to be expected that its concert at Mendelssohn Hall last night would be attended by a large audience. The programme introduced to this public two novelties, a terzetto for two violins and viola, by Antonin Dvorak, and a piano quartet by Richard Strauss. These were heard in the order named, but were preceded by Beethoven's quartet, Opus 74, well known as the Harp Quartet on account of certain pizzicato effects in it. If we mistake not, the Dvorak work, or a part of it, was once played here as an orchestral number under the direction of Walter Damrosch. The Strauss piece had not been heard in public before last night, though it is well known to some of the amateur quartets of the city.

As it was the more pretentious of the two novelties, it may be considered first. The first movement gives the key to the nature of the work as a whole. The first theme, which is introduced at once, is intended to be vigorous, but as is so often the case with Mr. Strauss's conceptions, is simply active. It includes, or rather leads into, a cheap triplet passage, which the composer evidently thought a fecund idea. The cantabile is fluent and is melodious, but its endeavor to be impassioned issues in mere pumped-up sentimentality. The working-out part is much too long and makes an altogether too free use of the triplet passage before mentioned. Indeed it is fair to say that the principal aim of the free fantasia seems to be to present this idea in as many different keys and with as many variations of harmony as possible. The entire movement is cheap and conventional in workmanship, and is superficial in feeling.

The scherzo, which follows, shows Mr. Strauss at his worst. Here he lets loose with a sort of fiendish exultation his stupendous talent for sheer ugliness. He writes against every instrument with an ingenuity which it is painful to see put to such a bad use. Why a man should work so hard and do so much thinking to produce such hideous music is what no one can tell, not ever Herr Richard Strauss of Munich himself. And what a trio! Could Beethoven have heard it, he would have said things not included in any biography. The slow movement is perhaps the most pretentious of the four, but it cannot command praise any more than the others. It is only sentiment, and very poor sentiment at that, for it is not genuine. One can almost see Herr Richard Strauss smiling and saying to himself, "Now we shall make them weep." But they refused to weep. On the contrary, many of them went home. The last movement is an incomprehensible wilderness of cacophony of Strauss's choicest type, and all music lovers know what that means. One can fancy that he hears echoes of those sad pranks of Till Eulenspiegel. But enough of this stuff. It would be a waste of time to give it so much comment, were it not for the fact that there is a determined effort in some quarters to make people believe that this fellow is a genius. But genius elevates; it does not destroy.

Dr. Dvorak's terzetto was written as an exercise for his children, or it was begun as one. The composer soon found that he liked the work too well to let it rest in its original thought, and he developed it to its present form. And a very delightful one it is. The whole composition blooms with charming melody. Slav in color, but so piquant and so fresh in conception withal that he would indeed be blasé who could listen to it without real pleasure. It has four movements, and in all of them the composer has shown fruitful fancy and the highest kind of musicianship in the part writing. The composition is not easy to play, and it is no wonder that it outgrew the capacities of the diminutive Dvoraks. It was played last night in a masterly manner by Messrs. Kneisel, Ondricek, and Svecenski.

In the piano quartet the Kneisels had the assistance of young Mark Hambourg, the pianist. Until this performer arrives at the years of musical discretion, he will not be a satisfactory chamber music player. In the first two movements of the work he kept the lid of the piano down and also himself. But he then had the lid raised, and when he found that he could get more tone out of the instrument, he concluded to try and get more speed also. The result was that the ensemble suffered not a little.

CONCERT FOR THE DEWEY ARCH.

Admiral and His Wife and Gov. and Mrs. Roosevelt Will Attend It.

Admiral and Mrs. Dewey and Gov. and Mrs. Roosevelt have announced their intention of visiting this city on Feb. 6, in order to attend a concert at Carnegie Hall, the proceeds of which will be given to the Dewey Arch Fund. The concert is being arranged by Walter Damrosch, who is a member of the Citizens' Committee for Perpetuating the Dewey Arch. Emil Paur will direct with Mr. Damrosch.

It is understood that several of the most prominent singers now appearing at the Metropolitan Opera House have volunteered their services, and the Oratorio Society of New York has also agreed to take part. The programme will include the "Manila Te Deum," by Walter Damrosch. The affair is to be given under the auspices of the Ladies' Auxiliary Committee of the Citizens' Committee, assisted by Louis Windmüller of the Executive Committee.

STATUS OF DRAMA AND THEATRE.

Henry A. Clapp Thinks It Low, Intellectually and Morally.

The present status of the drama and the theatre in the English-speaking nations is, in the opinion of Henry A. Clapp, dramatic critic, of Boston, who delivered a lecture on this subject at Association Hall, Brooklyn, yesterday afternoon, a very low one indeed, both intellectually and morally. Our drama, said Mr. Clapp, lacks distinction and elevation, has no permanent literary value, and produces nothing that is going to remain in the intellectual stock in trade of the race.

In giving his views of the causes of this decadence, Mr. Clapp began by treating of the character of the audiences.

Fifty years ago, said he, the auditorium was constructed primarily for the comfort and convenience of the gentry, and the play was generally addressed to patrons in the boxes. Now boxes have practically disappeared, except in the proscenium, where they are maintained so that Mayors and Governors and other exalted persons may be seen, and the theatre has been turned into a place where the great public goes to be amused. The fashionable and cultured classes in the community are largely kept from patronizing the theatre by the lateness of the dinner hour, and the theatre, being immediately dependent on the crowd, and having nothing but the box office to regulate its policy, the result is that plays are given to suit the taste of the audience, and there has been a steady drop in taste. The standard of the drama has gone down, and is still descending, with nothing to check it. The theatre never leads anybody. It simply tries to trim its sails to the popular gale.

The lecturer, however, said he had little sympathy with the talk that the toil-weary multitude wanted simply to be amused and to rest and cared nothing about the merit of a play. He admitted that there were some good, rational plays on the stage at present, but said the bulk of the entertainment provided at theatres was cheap and inept. Our great English literature has stopped having plays in it. Not one of the playwrights using the English language to-day is of the first or even second rank of littérateurs.

Speaking of the morality of the stage, Mr. Clapp said that the nature of some of the plays tolerated, and which even young girls were allowed to see, was "horrible." One of the causes which had helped to bring this moral decadence about, he firmly believed, was the World's Fair at Chicago, where in the great picture and sculpture galleries the nude was so conspicuous a feature.

Mr. Clapp thought that the charge of deterioration could not be made against acting, for the combination of the English aplomb and French sensibilities in the American nature had gone to make many admirable actors, and this fact was marvelous when it was considered that there was no great school of acting. The lecturer thought, with William Archer, the remedy for the literary deterioration of plays would be the establishment by wealthy men of an independent theatre, in which the highest standard of dramatic literature would be maintained.

MAY GET "THE GREAT RUBY."

J. Wesley Rosenquest Said to be Negotiating for It.

Manager J. Wesley Rosenquest of the Fourteenth Street Theatre, accompanied by Arthur Rehan, brother of Miss Ada Rehan, who will acquire the rights of "The Great Ruby" after March 1, visited Newark, N. J., last week for the purpose of witnessing a performance of the company touring under the direction of Jacob Litt and appearing at the Harlem Opera House this week.

It was said yesterday that negotiations for the purchase of the rights of "The Great Ruby" from Mr. Rehan by Mr. Rosenquest will soon be consummated.

The company now appearing in the play will, with only a few changes, remain intact, and an extensive tour of the cities not visited by Mr. Litt's company will be undertaken. The production, it is expected, will then return to New York for an extended run at the Fourteenth Street Theatre.

M. Alvarez to Sing in "Carmen."

The first change this season in the scheduled cast to appear in the opera of "Carmen" to be given at the Metropolitan Opera House will occur this evening, when M. Alvarez will be substituted for M. Saleza, who was to sing the role of Don Jose. M. Saleza contracted a severe cold while in Boston last week, which has not as yet yielded to treatment. He hopes to be able to sing either Monday or Wednesday night of next week.

Actress Marries Steamship Purser.

Bonnie Goodwin, an actress connected with a burlesque company, now playing in Jersey City, and S. G. Lyons were married at Police Headquarters, Jersey City, last night by Justice McCormack. It was the bride's second marriage. Mr. Lyons said he is purser of a steamship which arrived here yesterday. Mrs. Lyons said she would retire from the stage at the end of the present week.

BUILDING MEN MAKE PROTEST.

Desire that No Step Be Taken to Name a New Commission.

ALBANY, Dec. 19.—Judson Lawson, Frank E. Conover, James H. Havens, Louis Harding, and John B. Leo, composing a committee from New York City representing the Builders' League, Building Trades' Club, Mason Builders' Association, Master Carpenters' Association, and the New York Lumber Trade Association, waited on the Governor to-day with a memorial protesting against any movement being made to ask the Legislature to appoint a building commission to prepare a new building code for the City of New York.

Among the principal reasons advanced that such action be not taken are:

That it is a self-evident proposition that it is unfair, unjust, and unwise to place laws upon our statute books that would tend to curb the inventive genius of the engineer, the architect, and the builder.

While our political affiliations are in direct opposition to the dominating party in our city to-day, yet in the works of the code commission we cannot find a trace of party advantage, and we deem the code a fair and just one for the protection of all citizens and proper conduct for building operations.

TRADES UNIONS GROWING.

Membership in This State Over 209,000—Immigration Figures.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Dec. 19.—The quarterly Bulletin of the Bureau of Labor Statistics covering the three months of July, August and September has been made public. It shows a rapid increase in membership in the trades unions and a largely reduced percentage of idleness. Within that period there were organized 233 unions, and the total membership of all the unions, old and new, is set down at 209,120, the largest number yet recorded by the bureau. During the quarter mentioned the proportion of members unemployed was 2.3 per cent. In the corresponding period in 1898 the proportion was 5.7 per cent.

In New York and Rochester building operations have been more extensive this year, but in Buffalo and Syracuse there was a slight falling off. The estimated cost of projected buildings and alterations in New York City in July, August, and September this year was $32,552,876, as against $23,220,688 during the corresponding period of 1898.

The volume of immigration, the report says, was larger than it was last year. The largest contingent of immigrants still comes from southern Italy, while the second place is held by the Jews, and the Irish come third.

Of the six chief races represented in the compilation for the quarter ended Sept. 30, 1899, the greatest disparity in the proportion of races was among the southern Italians, 67.8 per cent. of whom were males and 32.2 per cent. females, while the Jews showed the smallest proportional dissimilarity, 51.2 per cent. being males and 48.8 per cent. being females. In the Irish immigration the females were predominant to a very noticeable degree, their percentage being 61.4 to the males 38.6 per cent.

According to the bulletin the movement for shortening hours of labor in this State has made considerable progress. Nearly 20,000 members of labor organizations obtained the Saturday half-holiday since last Spring without any reduction of weekly wages.

The quarterly report of the New York State Free Employment Bureau, says the bulletin, shows an increase in the number of applications for work, of applicants for help and of situations secured as compared with the corresponding period of 1898. The Superintendent calls attention to the law that prohibits the final acceptance of a fee by the keeper of a private intelligence office unless he has secured a situation for the applicant. The Superintendent says he has heard of no cases in which the law has been complied with.

ECHO FENCE WAR SETTLED.

Ansel Smith Brought to Terms After a Two Years' Fight.

PORT JEFFERSON, L. I., Dec. 19.—The Echo fence war is settled, Ansel Smith, who for two years has defied the Commissioners of Highways, having removed the fence he placed in the highway because he claimed the land belonged to him. A week ago the Commissioners of Highways removed the fence by force, but when they departed the posts were replaced.

Commissioner Terry swore out a warrant before Justice Wheeler. Officer Brown went to Echo to serve it, but Mr. Smith had gone away. The fence was again removed while the officer stood by, but before night Mr. Smith returned and replaced it. It was then arranged to have a hearing in the case to-day, but on Saturday Mr. Smith appeared before the Justice and agreed to tear up the fence. He will now receive the $100 awarded him by the Condemnation Commission.

THE PRESBYTERY MEETING.

Dr. Van Dyke Did Not Oppose the Amendment Offered by Dr. Bliss.

The statement in the report of the New York Presbytery meeting in THE NEW YORK TIMES of yesterday, that the Rev. Dr. Van Dyke had opposed an amendment offered by the Rev. Dr. Bliss to the McGiffert resolutions is an error.

Dr. Bliss's amendment, in effect that ministers should "distinguish between theories of criticism and certainties of faith," was offered as an addendum to the joint resolutions presented by Drs. Johnston and Van Dyke, which were adopted after Dr. Van Dyke had left the meeting.

As a matter of fact, the amendment offered by Dr. Bliss was taken from Dr. Van Dyke's own papers on the subject, and expresses precisely, Dr. Van Dyke said yesterday, the views for which he had been contending for the last fifteen years. The amendment, moreover, was presented with the full knowledge and consent of Dr. Van Dyke.

The error arose from the fact that the Presbytery holds secret meetings, and the fragmentary reports which are allowed to get out are sometimes misleading.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.,

BRIDGE-TUNNEL QUESTION

Aldermen Decide to Give Another Hearing on the Subject.

COLER REPLIES TO AN ATTACK

Says that Intimations that He Is Influenced by Private Interests Are Lies.

Although the Committee on Bridges and Tunnels of the Board of Aldermen had decided to report favorably on Mayor Van Wyck's plan for two new bridges over the East River, Alfred R. Conkling, representing a number of heavy taxpayers in this borough, succeeded yesterday in convincing the board that the subject was important enough to make another hearing necessary. Friday at 10 A. M. was set as the time for such hearing. Mr. Conkling, in a letter to the board, declared that sufficient study had not been given to Controller Coler's plan for tunnels instead of bridges, and asked for an opportunity to be heard again.

Mr. Conkling's letter was not the only contribution to bridge vs. tunnel literature which the Aldermen had before them yesterday. J. Rufus Terry, Chairman of a committee of taxpayers of the Borough of Queens, sent to every member of the board a long letter in which he attacked the Controller vigorously, for what he called Mr. Coler's "most reckless, unwarranted and malignant attack upon the Borough of Queens." He also accused the Controller of "misstating facts," and of "jumping at conclusions." Referring to a statement made to the Municipal Assembly by the Controller, Mr. Terry asked:

"Is it possible that a sane man, occupying the honorable and powerful position of Controller of the City of New York, can allow himself to make such false and wicked statements concerning a matter that seriously affects the welfare of nearly a quarter of a million people on the Long Island side of the East River alone, to say nothing of the many thousands more of mechanics and working people that are affected, who now reside on the Manhattan side?"

Mr. Terry then went on to say that the Controller misstated facts when he declared that the Blackwell's Island Bridge would cost $13,000,000. That sum, he said, was one-third too large. Mr. Coler's figures, it may be said parenthetically, were taken from the estimate of Chief Engineer Probasco of the Department of Bridges, who fixed the cost of the structure at over $12,870,000.

After reciting the fact that the centre of population of the city lies near the Manhattan approach to the proposed bridge, and declaring that the completion of the Brooklyn Bridge was followed within three years by the construction of 10,000 buildings in Brooklyn, Mr. Terry said:

"The Long Island Railroad is not in favor of the Blackwell's Island Bridge, and although they are believed to have had control of a charter for building a bridge across Blackwell's Island for many years, nothing tangible has been done toward its construction, and the present President of that corporation, soon after coming into office, was frank enough to say that the building of a bridge by them was not among the probabilities.

"That corporation now controls the only ferry worthy of the name, (the Thirty-fourth Street ferry,) giving a means of communication between the Boroughs of Queens and Manhattan. Probably it would not benefit them to have a bridge, at least for some time to come, so they have of late been diverting the public by talking of a tunnel from Brooklyn to Manhattan. On Oct. 18 last a committee appeared before the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, asking for an appropriation for the construction of the Blackwell's Island Bridge. The Controller is a member of that board, and was then present. No word of protest went out from him at that time. Had he then opposed the measure, the people would have had an opportunity to have presented their argument in its favor.

"He has waited until the last moment to issue his manifesto. What new light has dawned upon him? What has converted him to the embryo scheme of the Long Island Railroad Company? Is it possible that the chief financial officer of the great city has become so interested in this corporation, or in the stretch of lands about Coney Island, that he has ceased to have an interest as a public official in an enterprise so important to the whole municipality as the Blackwell's Island Bridge?

"He had a vision not long ago of a great park at Coney Island, costing millions of dollars, where many of his friends are said to be financially interested. Is his vision of tunnel structures of like character and induced by like motives?"

When a copy of Mr. Terry's letter was shown to Controller Coler, he said that the people of Queens were apparently under the impression that he wished to retard the growth of that borough, though such was not the case. "As for Terry's imputation that I am interested in the Long Island Railroad or lands about Coney Island," he said, "he lies if he makes it as a statement of fact. My position is and always has been that I do not believe the city ought to rush headlong into extravagant expenditure and disregard the debt limit. Only one result can follow such action, and that is that we will in a few years be hampered by a lack of funds to carry on needed improvements. I contend that tunnels offer one way out of the dilemma, and, whether my contention be right or wrong, it is worthy of deeper investigation than has yet been given to it."

The Aldermanic Committee on Bridges and Tunnels, after holding up for a year an ordinance providing for the construction of a bridge over Newtown Creek, between Brooklyn and Queens, at Grand Street, finally reported it favorably yesterday. No action was taken on the report.

An East River Tunnel Franchise.

Assemblyman Brennan yesterday called the attention of an evening newspaper to an act, designated as Chapter 1,014 of the Laws of 1895, which grants to the New York and Brooklyn Tunnel Company the right to construct a tunnel under the East River from any eligible point between East Sixteenth Street and Whitehall Street in the old City of New York and North Eighth Street and Atlantic Avenue in the former City of Brooklyn. He contended that this franchise would preclude the city from building any tunnel within the territory designated without purchasing the right. Controller Coler, however, contends that the franchise is by no means an exclusive one, and that if the city desires to build a tunnel it can do so without consulting any private owners.

ALDERMEN ON EXPENDITURES.

Resolution for a Home Rule Committee's Trip to Albany Approved.

The Board of Aldermen yesterday referred to the Finance Committee a resolution authorizing an issue of $250,000 in special revenue bonds to pay awards made to property owners for damages due to changing the grades of certain streets. The awards were made by the Change of Grade Damage Commission.

A resolution providing for an appropriation for sites for police stations was defeated, but another, instructing the Controller to pay $100 for the expenses of a committee which went to Albany last Winter to urge the Governor to disapprove all measures aimed against home rule, was adopted. Alderman Woodward, in explaining his vote, said: "Home rule is cheap at any price, and the committee accomplished a great deal of good at Albany."

May Fight Tax on "Right of Way."

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 19.—The corporations using the streets of this city for their business, including street railways and electric lighting companies, will probably go to the court and question the right of the city to tax their "rights of way," as the Tax Commissioners to-day decided to assess $1,045,208 upon the North Jersey Street Railway Company for its "right of way." The total assessments now made against the street railway company, including real estate, personal and the "right of way" determined upon to-day is $4,014,768.

Atlas Tack Corporation Sold.

BOSTON, Dec. 19.—The property of the Atlas Tack Corporation was sold to-day at public auction to K. L. Harrison of New York for $200,000. It is understood that he was acting in behalf of H. H. Rogers of the Standard Oil Company.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

Yesterday was not a cheerful day for the members of the gay world, who were obliged perforce, now that they are in harness, to go from one house to another all the afternoon and evening in the heavy rain so as to make an appearance at the receptions, dinners, dances, and musicales which made up the sum total of the day's doings.

The day after the opera that festivity is discussed over tea tables and at receptions. Monday evening could have been more brilliant in some respects, but it showed that fashionable women intended to dress more expensively than ever this Winter. The gowns embroidered in silver and in jewels and the substitution of jewels themselves for material were indications of this. There was also some innovation in the way of dressing the hair. The English women have abandoned the exaggerated structure of last year, notwithstanding that the Princess of Wales clings to it, and in its place have substituted a very severe coiffure. The hair is parted in the middle, and is waved from the temples, and there are many little curls worn over the forehead, which shows a disposition to return to the old ringlets worn in the forties. Lady Colebrook and Mrs. Starr Miller both dressed their hair in this way, and it was extremely effective.

***

The tiara seems to have disappeared almost completely, single diamonds, queer little crowns, or odd ornaments sparkling with large brilliants taking their place. Mrs. Ogden Mills wore a species of diamond headdress which resembled the trident of Neptune, a lyre, or even the more humble tuning fork. Diamond stomachers, and in fact the entire front of a gown, covered with brilliants or pearls or silver, which, at a short distance resembles the tin foil used by confectioners in which to wrap chocolate, are among the new fads. Miss Van Nest and Miss Thomas wore what might be termed cuirasses, in shape like those of Brunhilde and the Valkyrie, and at the same time tight fitting and perfectly supple, clinging to the figure. All these bizarre effects contributed to the brilliancy of the house, but it made the women look as if they had stepped from the pages of some fourteenth century missal or an old window in some ancient cathedral.

That New York society is absolutely divided into cliques and clans this season could be seen at a glance on Monday night. The clans stick to one another, and the visiting was among the individual boxes of particular sets, whose members did not seem to know each other. The second tier boxes have become more fashionable than last year, and the presence of Miss Burden, Mrs. Frederic Neilson, and other women of the Newport set in them, showed that society is broadening even in its divisions. The absence on Monday evening of quite a distinctive number of women who are conspicuous in society was noticed. Mrs. Oliver Harriman, Jr., Mrs. T. Suffern Tailer, Mrs. John Drexel, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Mrs. I. Townsend Burden, Mrs. R. Fulton Cutting, Mrs. Adolph Ladenburg, Mrs. George B. De Forest, and Mrs. Duncan Elliot were not seen in the parterre or tier boxes, and their absence on an opera first night seemed odd.

The second of the fortnightly dances organized by Mrs. Lewis Livingston Delafield took place in the Astor Gallery at the Astoria last evening. The first of these dances, as will be remembered, fell on the same date as that of the first junior cotillion, and both affairs suffered thereby. Last night the dance clashed with the junior ball of Columbia College at Sherry's, and as many of the young men and most of the young women who are members of the fortnightlies had also invitations to the Columbia ball, they tried to take in both, some going first to the fortnightly and afterward to the college ball, and others pursuing the opposite course. The fortnightly dance was a pretty and enjoyable one and, considering the bad weather, was well attended. Some of those present were Miss Beeckman, Miss Edith Jay, the Misses Delafield, Miss Marguerite Chapin, the Misses Richards, Miss Ruth Hoe, Miss Marie Huntington, and Messrs. Schuyler Schieffelin, Tracey, Johnson, Leopold Francke, F. P. Delafield, Cecil Landale, Clarence Storm, Arthur Slade, and Alexander M. Hadden.

The annual Christmas ball, which it is the custom for each succeeding junior class of Columbia University to give at this time in aid of the university athletics, took place in Sherry's large ball room last evening. The room was decorated with the college flags and with palms and ferns, and presented an attractive appearance. Small blue and white banners were grouped around the electric light fixtures on the pillars, a huge blue flag, on which was inscribed the class number 1900, was hung on the wall opposite the main entrance to the ball room, while small triangular flags were fastened all around the walls of the ball room in a straight line. This ball is an event of importance and interest to the younger element in New York society, and especially to those families who have brothers, sons, or other male relatives students at or graduates of Columbia. The ball is, therefore, always sure of a large clientele and of a goodly financial return, to which the various athletic organizations of the university look largely for support. This year, as usual, the long list of patronesses was made up of women prominent in society who have supposed affiliations with or in the university. Some of these patronesses were present last night, together with all the younger dancing element who were not at the fortnightly dance at the Astoria or Mrs. Pratt's dance held in the small ballroom at Sherry's. Among the patronesses who were present were Mrs. H. H. Boyesen, Mrs. Charles H. T. Collis, Mrs. William H. Falconer, Mrs. Augustus N. Lawrence, Mrs. W. G. Eyer, Mrs. James O'Shea, Mrs. J. Meehan, Mrs. Karl W. Buchholtz, Mrs. E. B. Bensel, Mrs. J. W. Grace, Mrs. Charles V. Mapes, Mrs. Henry F Shoemaker, Mrs. S. M. Stevenson, Mrs. Morris S. Wise, and Mrs. G. M. Jacocks. The committee under whose auspices the ball was given was composed of Augustine Neil Lawrence, Jr., Chairman; R. S. Woodward, Jr., J. Edmund O'Shea, Henry Jayne Mills, J. A. Meehan, George A. Eyer, Leon F. de Prince, G. W. Buchholtz, William A. Bensel, B. McL. Falconer, W. H. Grace, Clive S. Mapes, Henry W. Showmaker, Henry M. Wise, H. H. Jacocks, and Maxwell Stevenson. There was no cotillion.

Mrs. Thomas Huger Pratt of 29 Waverley Place gave a dance and dinner last night at Sherry's for her daughter, Miss Harriette Wright, the guest of honor being Count Mercati of Greece, who is Miss Wright's fiancé. The Count is a son of the President of the Ionian Bank of Greece. The wedding of the young couple will be celebrated next year, either at Cannes in April or in London early in June. The dinner was one of fifty-eight covers, and was served at four tables. The favors were two large Leghorn hats, filled with pink roses and white hyacinths. Large ribbons were laid across the table to each woman's plate, and after the dinner these ribbons were drawn, and those having cards at the ends got the two hats. Among the guests were Gen. H. L. Burnett and Mrs. Burnett, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest La Montagne, Mr. Perkins, Mr. J. Pratt, Mr. and Mrs. James Converse, Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Pratt, Mr. Lawrence Pratt, Mr. and Mrs. W. Bloodgood, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Leggett, Mrs. Pankhurst, Messrs. Carlisle Boyd, Morton, R. Kip, Henry H. Kip, Wade Chance, Francis F. Plummer, Du Pont Coudert, Leonidas Westervelt, N. C. Nicholls, William V. Stebbins, Van Benthuysen, and the Misses Di Zerega, Lounsbery, Jane Plummer, Angelica Church, Edith Plummer Augusta Robinson, Alberta Sturgis, Berry, Adele Spaulding, Kate Pratt, Lilian Proctor, Grace Gillett, Pauline Ives, Barnes, and Marian Addoms. Miss Wright wore a gown of white tulle, trimmed with paillettes of silver and embroidered with pink roses. Mrs. T. H. Pratt, Miss Wright's mother, was costumed in white satin, with medallions and embroidery of silver, and wore a diamond tiara and a necklace with pearl pendant. Mrs. Pankhurst, the grandmother of Miss Wright, was in black net.

Mrs. John C. Westervelt of 7 West Fiftieth Street gave a tea yesterday afternoon at her residence for Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Kendal and Mme. Olitzka of the Metropolitan company, the latter having just returned to this country. Mrs. Westervelt's object in giving the tea was to start a movement for the raising of money to be sent to the widows and children of the English soldiers who have fallen fighting in South Africa, all subscriptions to be handed to Mrs. Kendal, who has undertaken to forward such moneys to England. Mrs. Westervelt received in a handsome costume of black silk and black lace. Among those present in addition to the Kendals, the Misses Kendal, and Mme. Olitzka were Mr. and Mrs. Brander Matthews and the Misses Matthews, Mr. and Mrs. F. Hopkinson Smith and Miss Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Pell, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph T. Low and the Misses Low, R. S. Hayes, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Hamilton, H. L. Mott, Mrs. Bruce Brown, Mrs. W. F. Stafford, Chevalier de Wooten Doplintes, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hoe, Miss Susan De Forest Day, Mrs. Kingdon of Lakewood, Mrs. Sanford Bissell, Hampden Robb and the Misses Robb, the Rev. John Wesley Brown and Mrs. Brown, and Mr. and Mrs. Luther Kountze. The decorations were simple and were of the Christmas colors, red and green. Mme. Olitzka sang "The Lost Chord" and rendered other selections.

Mr. A. Muller-Ury, the well-known portrait painter, gave a reception at his studio, in the Sherwood, yesterday afternoon. There was a large attendance, despite the storm and heavy rain. Music was furnished by a mandolin orchestra, and there was a collation and a punch bowl over which a pretty girl dressed in Italian peasant costume presided. Mr. Muller-Ury showed five or six recently finished portraits, including an important three-quarter-length seated portrait of President McKinley, two three-quarter-length standing portraits of Mrs. Brown and Miss Daly, a daughter of Marcus Daly, respectively, and three bust portraits of Miss Rutherford, daughter of Mrs. George Crocker; Mrs. Thompson, a sister of Mrs. Jordan L. Mott, Jr., and Mrs. Charles Stout, formerly Miss Henrietta Schroeder. These canvases, and especially the portraits of Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. Stout, and Miss Rutherford, were much admired by the guests, among whom were Mrs. W. A. Perry, Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Oelrichs, Mr. and Mrs. Clement C. Moore, Miss Masterson, Mrs. Havemeyer, Mrs. George Hoffman, Miss Emily Hoffman, Mr. and Mrs. Tiffany, Mr. and Mrs. Cameron, and Mr. and Mrs. Beckwith.

Mrs. Ernest La Montagne, formerly Miss Catherwood of California, who recently moved into the house which Mr. La Montagne purchased from Mr. Bradford, at 114 East Thirtieth Street, will give a large reception at her residence this afternoon. The decorations will be of holly and Christmas greens. Mrs. La Montagne, who is an excellent shot with the gun and rifle, will go South with her husband on a hunting trip early in January.

***

Mrs. Frederic H. Betts of 22 East Sixty-fifth Street gave a large reception yesterday afternoon for her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Wyllys Rossiter Betts, (Miss Ada Godfrey,) who were married last April, at her residence. Mrs. Edson Bradley, who had issued cards for a reception at her residence, 802 Fifth Avenue, this afternoon, for her son-in-law and daughter, the Rev. Herbert Shipman and Mrs. Shipman, (Miss Julie Fay Simpson,) has been obliged to abandon the reception in consequence of the death of Mr. Bradley's mother, Mrs. Glover C. Arnold and Miss Arnold of 115 East Thirtieth Street will give a large reception on the afternoon of Saturday, Jan. 6.

The winning of the suit instituted by Mr. Archibald Gracie against the Commodore Stevens estate, at Hoboken, has been the subject of much congratulation to the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Gracie. The suit was one for an adjudgment of a commission asked by Mr. Gracie in the sale of the rights owned by the Stevens estate in the Hoboken ferries. The amount awarded Mr. Gracie by the decision is over $100,000. Mr. and Mrs. Gracie have not been seen very much in society recently, and have been leading a very quiet existence on Staten Island. Mrs. Gracie was Miss Constance Schack.

The date of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Drexel's dance is Jan. 8 instead of Jan. 2, as reported. It will be given at Sherry's. This is in the mode of Philadelphia, whose society residents give many of their entertainments in various halls, hotels, and restaurants instead of private houses.

***

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur M. King of 61 West Eighty-sixth Street have been obliged to recall the cards for their at home to-morrow evening, from 8 to 10, owing to the dangerous illness of James M. Marvin of Saratoga Springs, N. Y., the grandfather of Mrs. King.

MRS. CROCKER'S MUSICALE.

Mrs. George Crocker, formerly Mrs. Rutherfurd of California, gave last evening, at her new residence, northeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Sixty-fourth Street, a reception and musicale which was the most notable entertainment thus far of the season. Expectation in regard to this entertainment has been high for some time past, as it had become known that the Crocker house is one of the most sumptuously appointed of that series of palaces which have been erected during the past five years on New York's "Park Lane," as that section of Fifth Avenue which skirts the Central Park from Fifty-ninth to Ninetieth Street, is now called.

The reception and musicale of last evening were, in a sense, therefore, a housewarming for the new Crocker mansion, and there were comparatively few absentees from the four hundred guests who were invited. The hour set for the musicale was 9 P. M., and before 10 most of the guests had arrived. They entered first the reception room at the left of the main hall, in which the hangings and furnishings are of pale yellow brocaded velvet and satin, and which last evening was decorated with yellow chrysanthemums, palms, and ferns. The dining room, which is finished in black walnut, with ornamentation of gilt leaves on the panels, and whose draperies are of brocaded velvet in rich shades of moss green, was decorated last night in white and green, with lilies of the valley, chrysanthemums, and palms. The ceiling and panels of this remarkably handsome room were made abroad, and were copied, as is the whole room, from a similar room in an old French château, where Mrs. Crocker was once a guest. This room is extremely rich and soft in color and dignified in tone and finish. Another handsome apartment is the smoking room in the basement, which is finished in mahogany. As this room is not yet finished, temporary hangings were put up in it for last evening. The guests after doffing their wraps advanced up the broad staircase, with its balustrade of wrought-iron work, decorated with dull gilt leaves and fruit. After greeting their hostess, who received with her two daughters, the Misses Rutherfurd, passed on through the drawing room, whose furnishings and hangings are of rose pink, and which was decorated with pink roses and soft greens, to the ballroom, where the musicale was held. The programme of this was as follows:

1. (a) Mélodie ..... Tschaikowsky
   (b) Calabrese ..... Bazzini
   Mr. Alexandre Petschnikoff.
2. Prologue (Pagliacci) ..... Leoncavallo
   Signor Campanari.
3. Chanson du Mysoli ..... Félicien David
   With flute obbligato.
   Mme. Emma Nevada.
5. (a) The Swan ..... Saint-Saens
   (b) Hungarian Dances ..... Brahms
   Mr. Alexandre Petschnikoff.
6. (a) Titania's Cradle ..... Liza Lehman
   (b) In der Fremde ..... Taubert
   (c) La Fée Aux Chansons ..... Bemberg
   Mme. Emma Nevada.
6. Air, "Marriage of Figaro" ..... Mozart
   Signor Campanari.
7. Variations on the Carnival of Venice ..... Benedict
   Mme. Emma Nevada.
   Mr. Orton Bradley at the piano.

The singing of Mme. Nevada and Signor Campanari was much enjoyed, but the chief applause of the evening was given to Alexandre Petschnikoff, the Russian violinist, who is a protégé of the Princess Ourasoff, and who last evening made his initial drawing room appearance in America. At the conclusion of the musicale a supper was served at small tables by Sherry.

Among the guests were Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest C. La Montagne, Miss Crocker, Mr. and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, Mrs. Earl Dodge, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Pendleton, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Berwind, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Coster, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Childs, Mr. and Mrs. James Speyer, Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Oelrichs, Col. Back Broken, Lived Eleven Weeks.

RIVERHEAD, L. I., Dec. 19.—Arthur H. Tuthill died at his home, in Jamesport, last night after suffering eleven weeks with a broken back, received in a runaway. He was an attendant at the Jamesport Congregational Church, and also belonged to the Christian Endeavor Union since its formation. He was forty years old, and is survived by a widow and two children.

MEMORIAL ARCH SCHEME.

John K. Carey, in Washington, Collects Money and Discusses Plan.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Senator Lodge has introduced a bill providing for the erection of a five-hundred-thousand-dollar National memorial arch in this city. A man named John Kortz Carey has been sending out appeals for popular subscriptions for the same purpose, saying that $500,000 is to be appropriated by Congress, if it passes Lodge's bill, and $500,000 raised by popular subscription.

Mr. Carey's efforts came into public notice through the inquiries of a Boston firm which responded to his appeal by sending him a check for $25. Mr. Carey appears on his letter-head as Treasurer of "The National Memorial Arch Association." Later the Boston firm wrote to ask some questions about the scheme, and Mr. Carey replied, saying, among other things: "Your check was deposited last week. If you desire our check for same, we will send it." Two of Mr. Carey's representatives called upon the firm and offered to return the contribution, but the firm declined.

In an interview Mr. Carey said: "New York started to get up a Dewey arch, but New York is only New York, and Washington represents the whole country. Besides, those Gothamites are lobsters, and they don't know the difference between a façade and a mince pie. I saw the possibilities of a memorial arch to commemorate our heroes. I'm not a hero, but I know how to treat 'em after they're dead. I have a partner named Case, who is a corker. We got Congressman Sulzer to introduce the bill in the House and Senator Lodge in the Senate. Sulzer is all right. He saw that this arch was a real good thing. That man has a good nut on him, and it's full of meat.

"Case and I have been putting up our money for the expenses. We hope to get on the commission that the bill provides for. I suppose somebody will start to knocking the scheme, just because a couple of young fellows with only a little coin, originated the idea. If some big guy, with a lot of nerve and a pocketful of kopeks, had started it, everybody would have wanted to give him champagne dinners for being so bright. But how can anybody knock such a beautiful idea?

"We have received a lot of letters from Governors and Mayors. Gov. Roosevelt indorsed the idea, and you know he is one of the most conservative men in the country. If anybody is so 'grouchy' that he 'renigs' after he has given his subscription, we'll pay him back. We offered those men in Boston their money back, and anybody who squeals will have his money refunded so quick it will take his breath away. We are going to get this bill through, and the only pay I will ever get is in honor."

Mayor Quincy of Boston was one of the persons called upon by Mr. Carey's representatives. The appeals for contributions are sent out on an imposing letter-head of the association. Senator Lodge's bill makes no provision for a popular subscription.

IDEAL JAIL FOR PRISONERS.

They Can Unlock the Cell Doors at Will or Escape If They So Desire.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Dec. 19.—The Freeholders to-day directed an immediate overhauling of the locks in the county jail. There have been many escapes from the jail. A trusty in conversation with a turnkey yesterday said there was not a man in the jail who could not open the door of his cell if he desired. He showed the turnkey that a piece of wood, a broken spoon, or any piece of wire would open any lock in the place, and that it could be done as readily from the inside as from the corridor. There was a peculiar twist needed to perform the trick, but the knowledge was always transmitted from prisoner to prisoner.

It was found that almost every prisoner had a tool with which to open his door. If during the night he wanted a drink he opened the door, went for his drink, went back, and relocked the door. If he wanted to escape he went to an empty cell on the top tier, pushed a hole through the tar paper roof, and crawled through. The jail was once broken into and the Sheriff's apartments robbed

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Abner D. Thurber.

Abner D. Thurber died on Monday at his home, 49 Sidney Place, Brooklyn, of apoplexy. He was born at Delhi, N. Y., in 1839, and had lived in Brooklyn twenty-five years. He was one of the old firm of Thurber, Whyland & Co. of Manhattan, afterward the American Grocery Company, from which he retired some time ago. He leaves a wife and four children.

Obituary Notes.

Judge CLIFFORD ANDERSON died at Macon, Ga., last night after a long illness. Judge Anderson was for many years Attorney General of Georgia and codified the laws of the State in 1895.

WILLIAM HUNTER, for ten years Chief Engineer of the Central of Georgia Railway system, died at Savannah, Ga., yesterday of pneumonia. He was a native of Cork, Ireland, and a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin. Previous to his connection with the Central he was engaged with the Norfolk and Western and the Atlanta and West Point. He was fifty-five years of age.

Col. J. A. S. REED, formerly general agent of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, died Monday night at his home, in Chicago. Mr. Reed was born in Buffalo, N. Y., in 1832. On account of failing health he retired from the Lehigh Valley Company a year ago. He was formerly the owner of the well-known pacer Directly, whose record for a mile is 2:03½, but sold the animal at the recent Horse Show in New York City.

GOV. THOMAS'S ULTIMATUM.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Col., Dec. 19.—Gov. Thomas has issued an ultimatum to the United States Government, in which he practically declares that if the United States does not keep the Utah Reservation Indians from crossing the Colorado border, the militia of the State will drive them out.

A year ago, in a brush with Deputy Wardens, two Indians were killed. This year the redskins came in force and in war paint, and the deputies kept at a respectful distance till the Indians had slaughtered all the game they wanted.

More Smallpox in Morristown.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., Dec. 19.—There are four cases of smallpox in this city. The first victim was Albert Hulen, who contracted smallpox while on a visit to Rockaway. The next was Hulen's father, followed by Mrs. Hulen, and last night Jacob Depew was found to be suffering from it. All the victims live in one house on Race Street. The patients are all colored.

THE OLD CURIOSITY SHOP.

Few New Yorkers are aware that we, too, have a "Curiosity Shop." But it is an institution of such striking convenience, so original in conception and so useful and advantageous that there is no doubt of its permanence. Our "Curiosity Shop" is located in ex-Governor Morton's building. Here, through one of the quaintest entrances, you arrive at the fine new clothing and haberdashery store of Maduro Bros. & Co., 112 and 114 Nassau Street. This progressive firm has transformed its splendid business into an efficient assistant to men about town. In connection with their regular trade they have added dressing rooms, barber shop, bathrooms—ordinary and shower—bootblacking parlor and lockers. Having been detained down town, and desiring to go to theatre or elsewhere without first being forced home, your business man steps into Maduro's, and lo, he comes forth arrayed like a bridegroom. Meanwhile his discarded raiment has been properly cleaned, repaired, and pressed, and with his soiled linen, if desired, sent home. All this costs but a nominal sum.

The clothing and furnishings sold by this firm have won for them an enviable reputation and given them a splendid impetus in this departure. The wonder is how this firm can give such great values for such modest prices.

THIEVES REVEL IN BROOKLYN.

Burglaries and Highway Robberies of Almost Nightly Occurrence in Many Parts of the Borough.

Burglaries, highwaymen, and other types of robbers are having a merry time of it in Brooklyn these days. Within the past week numerous unusually bold robberies, including burglaries and hold-ups, have taken place in the borough, and in nearly every case the thieves have escaped arrest.

Less than a week ago Max Metzger, a druggist at Liberty and Railroad Avenues, was held up and robbed at the point of a revolver in his store by a lone robber, who got safely away.

Several nights later two houses in the same block on State Street were burglarized in bold fashion. Four suspects were arrested by the police in this case.

On Monday morning a burglar, while attempting to enter the home of Paul Fritzmeyer on Utica Avenue, was shot at by a young woman of the household and put to flight. The police have gained no trace of him.

At midnight on Monday night two men boarded a Flatbush Avenue trolley car in Flatbush, and, covering the conductor with a revolver, robbed him of all the money in his possession. They, too, made their escape.

Yesterday another bold burglary and a highway robbery were reported. The house burglarized this time was the residence of Dr. Francis H. Stuart, at 123 Joralemon Street, in the Heights section of the borough. The thieves forced an entrance to the house through a basement window early on Monday morning. While the burglars did not carry off much of value, they apparently had a pleasant time in the house while the family lay serenely asleep up stairs. They obtained eatables from the kitchen pantries and enjoyed a feast in the dining room, the remains of which were found on the table by the astonished servants when they came down stairs later in the morning.

Walter W. Arundale of 51 Main Street was on his way home late on Monday night when he was assaulted and robbed by two footpads at the corner of Main and Washington Streets. The thieves took his gold watch. William Gibbons of 62 Front Street and Nell Gillespie of 66 Washington Street were arrested on suspicion and held for a hearing in the Adams Street Police Court.

Besides the cases mentioned, many other burglaries have been committed in several of the best residential sections of the borough. The facts in regard to them, however, have been kept from the public by the police.

HIGHWAYMEN ON THE WEST SIDE.

Three Robberies on One Block in Sixty-ninth Street.

According to some of the residents of the upper west side, that part of the city is becoming a favorite resort for highwaymen. They say that Sixty-ninth Street, between West End and Amsterdam Avenues, especially, is so infested with robbers that any one venturing through it after dark is almost sure to be held up. This block contains several vacant lots and unfinished buildings, where the robbers are said to make their headquarters.

Mrs. C. J. Merrill of 101 West Seventieth Street was passing through Sixty-ninth Street on Saturday night when a man jumped out from a vacant lot and grabbed at her pocketbook. He succeeded in getting it out of her hand, but it was fastened to her wrist by a strap. The highwayman endeavored to break the strap, while Mrs. Merrill screamed for help. The man finally became frightened and ran away.

Mrs. C. B. Culver of 271 West Sixty-ninth Street was not so fortunate, for she was forced to give up $12 to robbers early on Friday morning. Her father had died on Thursday night at 101 West Ninety-sixth Street, and she was on her way home from watching at his bedside when she was confronted by two men at Sixty-ninth Street and Amsterdam Avenue. They asked her to give them what money she had, and she promptly turned over her purse, containing the money. They were evidently not satisfied with this, for they started to pull the earrings from her ears and only desisted when a newsboy, hearing her cries for help, came to her assistance.

J. B. Foster of 271 West Sixty-ninth Street was also held up on the same block. He is a newspaper man, and was going home early in the morning, when two men appeared from behind a tree and ordered him to hand over his money. He tried to rush past them, when one of them struck him on the head, crushing his hat and raising a big lump. Mr. Foster put up such a vigorous fight, however, that his assailants were glad to get away.

The police of the West Sixty-eighth Street Station say that none of the robberies has been reported to them.

NEWS OF THE RAILROADS.

HEARING ON FREIGHT RATES.

Merchants to Appear Before the Inter-State Commerce Commission.

The railroads east of the Mississippi River have promulgated a reclassification of various kinds of freight, which will go into effect Jan. 1. The Merchants' Association, with a number of other organizations and many merchants, objected to the reclassification, and the Inter-State Commerce Commission will give a hearing on the protests at Washington to-morrow.

The result of the reclassification will be a general advance in the rates on many lines of freight.

The general contention of the railroads is that the advance in prices has compelled them to pay from 15 to 40 per cent. more for material used by them in the operation of their roads, which has necessitated an advance in freight rates. The merchants most affected are those who deal in dry goods, coffee, sugar, soap, and hardware.

One contention of the shippers is that the arbitrary advance upon short notice will cause serious loss in many directions, for the reason that large numbers of manufacturers, agents, and commission men have made contracts for future delivery of goods extending well into the year 1900, the contracts being based upon present prices and present freight rates. In view of this fact, they say, such a sweeping change should not be put into effect without sufficient notice to shippers.

BOSTON AND ALBANY LEASE.

BOSTON, Dec. 19.—The Boston Advertiser to-day says that in addition to the opposition of many Democrats in the Legislature to the proposed lease of the Boston and Albany Railroad to the New York Central Company, which will come up for approval at the coming session of the General Court, a new factor has appeared in the opposition of interests representing the Fitchburg Railroad, which, it is said, are evidently not satisfied with the outlook.

The Advertiser says that these Directors will oppose the lease of the Albany, as there is a feeling in the western part of the State that under the lease more traffic than ever would be diverted to the Albany Road, the Fitchburg in the past having suffered through the traffic arrangements between the Albany and the New York Central.

A circular protesting against the lease of the Boston and Albany to the New York Central and signed by John D Bryant, Francis Blake, Uriel H. Crocker, Edward S. Dodge, Frank W. Reynolds, and Charles P. Robinson, has been sent to the stockholders of the Boston and Albany Railroad Company.

RAILWAYS TO GET MORE TIME.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The Inter-State Commerce Commission has decided to grant the request of the railroads for the extension of time in which to equip their rolling stock with approved couplers and other safety appliances.

The commission will announce its decision probably to-morrow, and, it is understood, the time limit will be extended six months from Jan. 1 next, the date now set.

The Vanderbilt Trunk Lines.

Representatives of the Vanderbilt trunk lines had a meeting yesterday at the Murray Hill Hotel. Among those present were A. J. Smith of Chicago, T. S. Timpson and W. H. Underwood of Buffalo, and O. W. Ruggles of Chicago. "Really," said Mr. Timpson to a TIMES reporter, "there is no great significance to our meeting; we meet about once a month. But I can say that our reports of business are most satisfactory. I have been railroading for a long time, but I never saw railroad business in a better condition."

No Receiver for Cape May Road.

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 19.—Vice Chancellor Reed filed an opinion this afternoon denying the application of the City of Cape May for the appointment of a receiver for the Cape May, Delaware Bay, and Sewall's Point Railroad. The application was made because taxes are due Cape May City to the amount of $2,000.

PLYMOUTH AT ERIE BASIN.

Fog-Bound Boat's Damaged Outer Hull to be Repaired There—Was Scraped by Rocks.

The Fall River Line steamboat Plymouth, which struck the rocks off Barretto Point in the Sound while bound from New York for Fall River Monday night, returned to her pier early yesterday morning. All of her 500 passengers had been transferred to the Stonington Line steamer Maine, which was fogbound off the same point during the night, and most of the cargo had been transferred to the Taunton, one of the Fall River Line's freight boats, also bound east and delayed by fog.

The transfer was accomplished by 3:30 o'clock in the morning without incident, the water being smooth, so that the boats were able to be made fast alongside. The Maine and Taunton then worked their way east, while the Plymouth groped her way back to the city. The fog bells and whistles of the fogbound fleet of Sound steamers could be plainly heard in Harlem throughout the night.

The Plymouth did not, as at first reported, stick fast. She simply scraped over a ledge of jagged rocks. She was drawing fourteen feet at the time. She has a double bottom and it was only the outer hull that was injured. One of the officials of the line said yesterday that it was a matter only of stopping the leaks repairs could be easily made, as a small pump had sufficed to keep out all of the water that came into her double bottom. She was what the steamboat men call "weeping" in several places where rivets had been pulled out and seams strained along the port side. Just how much overhauling the steel work will require, however, it was said, could not be determined until she had been examined in drydock. A small portion of her cargo, brought back with her, was landed at her pier yesterday, and she was then sent to the Erie Basin to undergo repairs.

IN MEMORY OF FATHER BROWN.

Requiem Mass Marked Anniversary of Episcopal Rector's Death.

The first anniversary of the death of the Rev. Father Thomas McKee Brown was observed yesterday with a requiem mass at the Protestant Episcopal Church of St. Mary the Virgin, in West Forty-sixth Street, of which he was the founder and the rector for the last twenty-nine years of his life. There was a large congregation, in which women very largely predominated. Many Protestant Episcopal clergymen from various metropolitan and suburban parishes were also present.

The Rev. Father Christian, the rector, was the celebrant of the mass, the curates, Fathers Linn and Macpherson, assisting. The music was Wilcox's mass. It was sung by a double quartet and soloists under the direction of Dr. Prentice, the organist of the church. There was no sermon, but a communion service was held, in which about half a dozen members participated.

As the congregation filed out of the church many paused to admire the reduced artist's model of the memorial to Father Brown, of which J. Massey Rhind is the sculptor, and which has been on view in the edifice for some time. Father Christian announced that his efforts to collect the large sum necessary to finish the work in lasting marble during the year following Father Brown's death had been brought to a successful termination by a generous contribution which he had received only the night before. The model represents the figure of Father Brown clad in sacerdotal garments, lying full length upon a catafalque, with the hands pressed together as in prayer. Two angels kneel at either side of the head of the figure, and at the foot is a crouching lion. The memorial will be life size when completed, perhaps six months hence, and will stand between the two forward piers or columns of the church.

FROM A CONVENT TO SOCIETY.

Miss Willets of Brooklyn Reappears After Ten Years' Seclusion.

After spending ten years in a Roman Catholic convent in this city, in strict seclusion from the world, Miss Anglessea Willets, daughter of Mrs. Edward B. Willets of 77 Columbia Heights, Brooklyn, has returned to society. Miss Willets left the convent last April, but her re-entrance into society did not take place until a few days ago, when she was reintroduced at a reception given in her honor by her mother.

Miss Willets's retirement to a convent, it is said, was not an absolute renunciation of the world. Being of a religious turn of mind, she believed it to be her duty to give up the world for a time and live in the pious atmosphere of a convent.

Miss Willets and her mother are now giving a series of afternoon receptions. "The facts in the case," said Mrs. Willets last evening, "are simply that my daughter, who is a Roman Catholic, has returned home from a sense of duty toward her family, after several years' absence, and, like other people, we are giving a series of afternoon teas. She has been with us several months, and we but lately returned from the country."

NESTOR PONCE DE LEON DEAD.

Lineal Descendant of Florida's Discoverer Passes Away in Havana.

Nestor Ponce de Leon, a lineal descendant of Ponce de Leon, discoverer of Florida, died at Havana on Monday. Mr. de Leon, who was sixty-three years old, had been a resident in this city up to eight months ago. For several years he had practiced law here, and at one time was associated with the late Chief Justice Charles P. Daly. During his recent stay in Cuba he transacted much business there for several prominent law firms in this city.

Mr. de Leon came here from Cuba during the ten years' war. This move was in consequence of his activity in behalf of Cuban independence, and his plantations in Havana and Pinar del Rio, said to have been valued at $2,000,000, were confiscated by the Spanish authorities. Upon his arrival here he became Treasurer of the Cuban Junta, and held that position till the end of the revolution. His advice was often sought by the Junta during the last revolution. Mr. de Leon was the author of several works in the Spanish language and also a Spanish-English technological dictionary.

Governor General Brooke several months ago appointed Mr. de Leon custodian of the archives of Havana and Director of the Museum of Natural History there. Mr. de Leon leaves a wife and family. His son, Dr. N. J. Ponce de Leon of 73 West Eighty-fifth Street, is now in Havana.

Claimant of Diamonds Not in Court.

Essie Blum of 882 Douglass Street, Brooklyn, was not in the Lee Avenue Police Court yesterday morning to press the charge she had made against Miss Florence Moore, daughter of a well-to-do baker at Sanford Street and De Kalb Avenue. Miss Moore was discharged, and her lawyer told the Magistrate that he thought Miss Blum should be compelled to appear in order that his client might have full justice. Miss Blum informed the police a few days ago that she thought Miss Moore was in possession of some diamonds lost by the former three years ago.

Receiver for Franklin National Bank.

Judge Lacombe of the United States Circuit Court, before whom the affairs of the Franklin National Bank have been heard, yesterday decided to appoint a temporary receiver, who will take charge of the bank's affairs until after the meeting of the stockholders, which will be held shortly.

A FIGHT THAT AFFECTS PAYN.

Insurance Superintendent's Tenure of Office Involved in a Rensselaer County Controversy.

There is a pretty political kettle of fish in Rensselaer County, the home of ex-Gov. Frank S. Black. Senator Thomas C. Platt, according to people in that part of the State, is accountable for the trouble.

In the elections last month the Republicans, by a fusion with the Conway Democrats, scored a decided victory, electing a city ticket in Troy and a county ticket in Rensselaer on which all the nominees except Daniel E. Conway, the fusion candidate for Mayor of Troy, were Republicans. Now Joseph A. Leggett, Postmaster of Troy and a leading Platt man, claims that he is entitled to all the credit for the victory. Black's friends dispute this statement and assert that all credit for the victory belongs to the ex-Governor.

Within the last few days two meetings have been held in Troy by Republicans. One declared faith in Leggett, the other pronounced confidence in Black. The controversy is important in its bearing on the retention of the office of Superintendent of Insurance by Louis F. Payn, as it may compel Senator Platt to show his hand in regard to that matter. Black wants Payn retained; what Senator Platt wants is not known, though it is supposed by many he is in favor of giving him a second term. Gov. Roosevelt is certainly averse to reappointing him.

H. O. Ingalls, formerly counsel to the Rensselaer Republican Board of Supervisors, said to a reporter last night: "Leggett is evidently in Platt's corner and is trying to do Black in Rensselaer County."

"I don't know what to think of the fight," remarked John Don, Treasurer of Rensselaer County. "Black won the fight against ex-Senator Murphy, but Leggett claims the credit. Black made Leggett what he is, politically, but Leggett knows a thing or two about politics. Perhaps he thought Black intended to make his home in New York, and that he had a right to go to the front. That was a mistaken idea."

Among New York politicians the belief is entertained that Platt fears the active influence of Black in State or New York City politics, and he has spurred Leggett on to make the fight. There are many Rensselaer County politicians in town, and all agree that they see the hand of the Senator in the Black-Leggett controversy. The Republican press in Troy is divided on the issue. The Times being for Black, while The Record is for Leggett.

OUT OF THE CITIZENS' UNION.

Isaac H. Klein and Others Withdraw from the Organization.

Isaac H. Klein has resigned from the Citizens' Union. He said yesterday that his business would not permit him to indulge in politics. Several other members have recently resigned from the organization. It is said that the resigning members favor the nomination of independent tickets in local campaigns and are not satisfied with the idea of fusion movements, and this is thought to be the reason for the withdrawals.

Mr. Klein refused yesterday to discuss his resignation, and other members refused to talk about the matter.

THE ASSEMBLY CHAIRMANSHIPS.

Gossip Regarding Assignments to the Leading Committees.

Gossip over the Assembly committee Chairmanships continues to be one of the principal diversions of Republican leaders. It was said last night at the Fifth Avenue Hotel that it had been decided to make Assemblyman Merton E. Lewis of Monroe Chairman of General Laws. Mr. Lewis was George W. Aldridge's candidate for the head of the Cities Committee, but this place is to go to Assemblyman Otto Kelsey of Livingston.

After much deliberation and the consideration of various names, it is almost certain that Assemblyman William L. Coughtry of Albany will be made Chairman of the Insurance Committee. Assemblyman Robert J. Fish of Madison is slated for the Judiciary Committee, and Assemblyman Louis Bedell will probably be found at the head of the Railroad Committee.

OFFICES FOR TAMMANY MEN.

Three Places to be Filled by the Mayor the Last of This Month.

Mayor Van Wyck will have several important offices to distribute on Dec. 31, and for some days the political gossips have been busy connecting the names of Tammany workers with the various places. The offices to become vacant are: One Police Commissioner, one Commissioner of Taxes and Assessments, and one member of the Change of Grade Damage Commission.

The first becomes vacant through the expiration of the term of Commissioner John B. Sexton, who will, it is said, certainly succeed himself. The elevation of Tax Commissioner Grell to the Shrievalty, will make a place to which ex-Coroner Ferdinand Levy, it is expected, will be appointed. To the third place, which is made vacant by the election of Warren W. Foster to the Court of General Sessions, it was said last night ex-Police Inspector Thomas F. McAvoy, the Tammany leader in the Twenty-third Assembly District, would be named.

DEMOCRATS CALLED TO MEET.

National Committee Will Convene in Washington Feb. 22.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Senator Jones, Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, has issued a call for a meeting of that committee to be held at the Raleigh Hotel, in this city, on Feb. 22 next. The purpose of the meeting is to fix a time and place for holding the National Democratic Convention next Summer.

NEW JERSEY LEGISLATURE.

E. W. Wakelee Republican Leader of the House—Officers Selected.

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 19.—The Republican House caucus for the selection of officers for the Assembly during the coming session of the Legislature, which begins next month, was held to-day in the Assembly Chamber, and the principal places were filled without opposition. E. W. Wakelee was elected permanent Chairman, which makes him leader of the House. Following are the officers:

Speaker—Benjamin F. Jones, Essex; Clerk—James Parker, Passaic; Assistant Clerk—George E. Poole, Morris; Journal Clerk—Noah F. Morrison, Union; Sergeant-at-Arms—Frank Tantum, Monmouth; Assistants—Horatio Hazens, Ocean; John G. Cooper, Somerset; Bill Clerk—George P. Powell, Essex.

The rules of the last House were adopted, except those relating to the engrossing department. On motion of Assemblyman Wright the Attorney General was asked for an opinion as to the constitutionality of the bill establishing the office of Supervisor of Bills.

Mazet Calls on the Governor.

ALBANY, Dec. 19.—Robert Mazet, Chairman of the Mazet investigation committee, called on Gov. Roosevelt to-day and submitted an outline of the recommendations that the committee will embody in its report to the Legislature. Mr. Mazet declined to state what they were.

Title Trust of Jersey City.

The Title Trust and Guarantee Company of Jersey City yesterday elected these Directors: Abram Q. Garretson, Charles L. Corbin, Bernard M. Shanley, William G. Bumsted, Edward F. C. Young, De Witt Van Buskirk, Earle Insley, George F. Perkins, William H. Corbin, John A. Walker, Frank H. Earle, James B. Vredenbergh, Spencer Weart, Lawrence Fagan, and Edward L. Young. At a meeting of the Directors these officers were chosen: President—Abram Q. Garretson; Vice Presidents—William H. Corbin and George F. Perkins; Treasurer and Secretary—J. E. Hulshizer, Jr.; Title Officer—John Glendorf. The annual report shows the deposits on Dec. 1 aggregated $7,000,000, an increase of $1,700,000 over the previous year.

Phi Beta Kappa Alumni Meeting.

The first meeting of the Phi Beta Kappa Alumni Association for the present college year was held last evening at the Hotel Savoy. The principal feature of the evening was the reading of a paper entitled "Light on Roman Life," by Prof. James C. Egbert, Jr., of Columbia University.

PROCLAMATION BY BROOKE.

Says the Change Which Has Taken Place Under His Administration Is "Truly Marvelous."

HAVANA, Dec. 19.—Gen. Brooke will issue to-morrow the following proclamation:

"By direction of the President I hereby transfer to my successor, Major Gen. Leonard Wood, the duties and responsibilities of the office of Military Governor, bespeaking for him that support and confidence which you have come to accord me. To those who have been associated with me in the performance of the difficult task of reorganizing and placing in operation the civil government of the island, I hereby tender this expression of appreciation and thanks for their loyal and patriotic support and assistance.

"A year ago I found the country most thoroughly devastated, its resources and commerce destroyed, and its rural population gathered into towns, without food and without shelter, and dying of starvation and exposure. The Government of the United States immediately supplied work and food. In a short time those conditions passed away, and now the country is rapidly pressing forward to a prosperity hitherto unknown in its history.

"Look about and see how true this is. The various steps that have led to the present condition are well known to you and need not be mentioned here. The change is truly marvelous. Without the semblance of civil government then, you have now a complete organization.

"Your municipal and provincial governments are all in the hands of your own citizens. The military control is purely advisory and supervisory. Many of your laws have been modified and changed to suit the times in which you live, as well as the interests of good government. Your courts have been reorganized and are in operation. Peace reigns. Law and order rule.

"By your own industry and by a careful observance of these conditions, the full restoration of your social affairs and prosperity is assured. With the feeling that the future is in your hands to make or to mar, and trusting that wise counsels may prevail among you, I say to you farewell."

OFFICIALS BACK FROM HAVANA.

Commissioner Scannell Praises Its Volunteer Fire Department.

Among the passengers on the Ward liner Havana, which arrived here yesterday from Havana, were Fire Commissioner Scannell and Corporation Counsel Whalen. Commissioner Scannell went to Havana on the invitation of the municipal authorities to advise them in Fire Department matters as an expert. When asked if it was true that he had gone to Havana to exploit an automobile fire vehicle in which Richard Croker is said to be interested, the Commissioner laughingly replied: "We will discuss that later on."

Discussing the Havana Fire Department, Commissioner Scannell said that it was entirely composed of volunteers. "The only members of it," said he, "who are paid are the engineer and driver of each piece of apparatus, of which there are six. There are 600 firemen, for the most part merchants. When the alarm is given, they vault over their counters, take the first cab, and are off to the fire. The uniform is similar to that of the old New York volunteer force—red shirt, helmet, and blue trousers. The department has two corps, municipal and commercial. I consider them excellent volunteers.

"There are no hook and ladder trucks, since Havana houses are one story high. Nobody sleeps in the engine houses except the engineer, driver, horses, and mascot. The time of hitching up and getting out is thirteen seconds. They are able to make this time because the horses are stabled close to the engine and not in the rear. Fires are of rare occurrence, because each household has a separate building for a kitchen. The department is fully adequate to meet existing conditions. I have no intention of returning to Cuba, and while there I suggested no changes in the department."

Corporation Counsel Whalen said that his trip had been one purely for pleasure. Mr. Whalen praised the work of Major Rathbone, in charge of the customs, and Capt. Lucian M. Young, Captain of the Port of Havana. He said the streets were clean and that Havana was as safe as New York after dark.

NO UNION OF POST OFFICES.

Postmaster Wilson Says Brooklyn Will Not Be Joined to Manhattan.

Postmaster Wilson of Brooklyn, who returned from Washington yesterday, expressed himself as being confident that the proposed consolidation of the Manhattan and Brooklyn Post Offices would not be effected.

"I am satisfied," said Mr. Wilson, "that the department at Washington has no intention of consolidating the Manhattan and Brooklyn offices. They believe the sentiment in Brooklyn to be decidedly against the measure, and that it would not be of benefit economically or otherwise to put the plan into effect."

DEVELOPED SUICIDAL MANIA.

Son of Dr. Samuel P. Cropper Taken to Bellevue Violently Insane.

Harld P. Cropper, twenty-eight years old, of 57 East Eighty-sixth Street, son of Dr. Samuel P. Cropper, who is connected with the Health Department, was taken from his home to Bellevue Hospital last night violently insane. Dr. Osgood of the Presbyterian Hospital brought the patient to Bellevue.

The young man's father accompanied him. He said his son had acted strangely for several weeks. He seemed morbidly melancholy, and yesterday his malady took a dangerous turn. Young Cropper tried to end his life several times, but was restrained by servants.

Verdict Against Daniel E. Finn.

A jury sitting before Justice Freedman in the Supreme Court yesterday returned a verdict for $1,286.92 against Daniel E. Finn, Justice-elect of the First District Municipal Court, in favor of Amelia Gorman, widow of ex-Sheriff John J. Gorman. The suit grew out of a dispute over the pay of two keepers employed by Mr. Finn when he was Deputy Sheriff under Mr. Gorman. It was decided that Mr. Finn was responsible for their pay.

Found Dead in Her Room.

The body of a young woman known as Annie Clark was found yesterday in her room at 313 West Nineteenth Street. The gas was escaping in the room and it is supposed she committed suicide. Little is known about her except that she has a sister in New York named Nellie Clark, who is a corsetmaker, and that she corresponded with a young man called "Will," at Boston Post Office, Box 376.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY WINS.

Ohio Supreme Court Dismisses Charge of Bribery Against It.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Dec. 19.—The Supreme Court handed down a decision to-day dismissing the bribery case of Attorney General Monnett against the Standard Oil Company.

The Attorney General furnished information to the effect that he was approached by Charles Squire of New York with a bribe of $400,000 if he would permit the cases pending against the Standard Oil Company to go by default. It was claimed that Mr. Squire was the representative of F. B. Squire, Secretary of the Standard Oil Company; Frank Haskell, and Frank Rockefeller, son of the President of the company. The decision dismisses the case on the ground that the information does not connect the Standard Oil Company with the attempt at bribery stated therein.

HERMIT OF PINE CREEK DEAD.

Recluse Near Norwalk, Conn., Passes Away in Solitude.

Special to The New York Times.

NORWALK, Conn., Dec. 19.—The authorities are investigating the cause of the death of Robert Wright, seventy years of age, better known as the Hermit of Pine Creek. He lived alone on a small island, and was but rarely seen in town, and then he came only to purchase the necessities of life, though he always seemed well supplied with money. This latter fact has caused people to believe that he had a snug fortune concealed on the island. He was found dead by some duck hunters in his shanty, while it appeared that the place had been ransacked.

Wright's wife died ten years ago. The old man had a family of grown children, but he preferred to mourn his loss in the little cabin, and discouraged visits from every one.

NEGRO RUN DOWN AND SHOT.

Killed Superintendent of Coke Works and Was Chased by 200 Men.

DUNBAR, Penn., Dec. 19.—Sanford White, Superintendent of Construction of the W. J. Rainey Coke Company, was shot and killed to-day by David Pierce, a colored employe.

The trouble began with a quarrel between Pierce and Richard Cunningham, Superintendent of the Mount Vernon works of the W. J. Rainey Company, over a question of work. White interfered in behalf of Cunningham, when the negro drew a revolver from his pocket and fired. The ball penetrated White's abdomen, making a fatal wound.

Immediately after firing, Pierce ran for his life, with more than 200 persons in hot pursuit. He was chased for more than two miles before his pursuers came within shooting distance, but as soon as they did he was made the target for a shower of bullets. He fell with seven wounds through his body, and died in a short time.

White was about fifty years of age, married, and had several children.

CEMENT MINES CAVE IN.

Rosendale Works Much Damaged, But No Life Was Lost.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Dec. 19.—A cave-in occurred in the cement mines of the New York and Rosendale cement works at Rosendale this morning. Thousands of tons of rock and dirt fell in, carrying down buildings and machinery. It was at first supposed that fifteen miners were buried in the débris, but later in the day it became definitely known that no one was killed.

The cave-in was rather in the nature of a series of landslips, thousands of tons of rock and earth sliding from the mountainside down into the Delaware and Hudson Canal in the valley. The iron bridge of the Wallkill Valley Railroad, which is about 500 feet long, was struck, but was not seriously injured, and after straightening some rails which were bent, trains were permitted to pass over it.

The landslide began last night, when a great quantity of rock gave way. The workmen went in as usual this morning. At 8 A. M. another great mass was dislodged, and every one got out of harm's way. The greatest fall of earth and rock occurred about 10 o'clock and carried with it engine and boiler houses and other buildings of the cement company. Exactly how much damage was done cannot be stated yet.

VOGELER COMPANY'S FAILURE.

Property of Devries and His Wife Conveyed to a Trustee.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 19.—Christian Devries and Mrs. Minnie A. Devries, his wife, filed a joint deed of trust this morning, conveying all their property, real and personal, to Henry S. Dulaney, trustee, to be by him converted into cash and used in the liquidation of the debts of the Vogeler Company, of which Mr. Devries is President.

Mr. Dulaney filed a bond for $300,000, which would indicate that the assets are $150,000. Of this, $75,000 is in realty and $75,000 in personal property. The liabilities of the concern are not definitely known, but are estimated at between $175,000 and $200,000.

C. Morton Stewart was chosen President of the National Bank of Baltimore to-day, to fill out the unexpired term of Mr. Devries, resigned. The permanent President will be chosen at the annual election in January.

Schroeder Order of Arrest Vacated.

Justice Marean, in the Equity Term of the Supreme Court, in Brooklyn, vacated yesterday the order of arrest against Quarantine Commissioner Frederick W. Schroeder, which was obtained in the suit brought against him by Mrs. Alice M. Drew to recover $30,000 for the alleged conversion of 10,000 shares of the stock of the Standard Gold Production Company of Colorado.

Steamship Neustria Detained.

The Fabre Line steamship Neustria, which arrived yesterday with 761 steerage passengers from Naples, has been detained at Quarantine, as it was reported 20 passengers from Trieste were smuggled aboard despite their rejection by the United States Consul at Naples. Health Officer Doty has cabled to Naples to learn if the report is true. All of the passengers are well.

AUTOMOBILE CLUB CHALLENGE.

The American Organization Decides to Enter the Competition Next Year in France.

A special meeting of the Automobile Club of America was held at the Waldorf-Astoria last night for the purpose of considering the challenge for the Gordon Bennett Automobile Cup, at present held by the Automobile Club of France, and which will be contested for next Summer in France. George F. Chamberlin, Vice President of the club and Chairman of the Board of Governors, presided. The matter was referred to the Committee on Runs, Tours, and Contests, which made a favorable report. It was then unanimously resolved to accept the challenge, and notification of the fact with 3,000f. forfeit will be mailed to-day.

The club has a right under the rules to be represented by three vehicles. Two members have already signified their desire to challenge through the club. They are A. L. Riker of the Riker Electric Motor Company, Elizabethport, N. J., and Alexander Winton, a manufacturer of automobiles at Cleveland, Ohio. It is understood that the third challenger will be the Locomobile Company.

The prospects of the race were eagerly discussed at the club, and confidence that the trophy would be brought to the United States was freely expressed. "And once we get it here," said one member enthusiastically, "it will come to stay, like the America's Cup."

The clubs that will compete, in addition to the American Club, are the Automobile Club of Great Britain, the Automobile Club of Austria, the Automobile Club of Germany, the Automobile Club of Switzerland, and the Automobile Club of Turin. The competing automobiles must weigh not less than 400 kilograms and carry at least two passengers seated side by side. Each passenger must weigh not less than seventy kilograms, and both must remain in the vehicle throughout the race. If passengers of lighter weight are carried the difference must be made good with ballast. The automobiles must be made in every part in the countries from which they challenge.

The race, which will be held under the rules of the Automobile Club of France, will be a go-as-you-please affair, without any stipulated stoppages to take place on the road. The distance will be from 550 to 650 kilometres, the course to be between two towns or apportioned into several outward and homeward journeys, of not less than 150 kilometers each.

Gen. Avery D. Andrews, who has resigned as Adjutant General of the National Guard, has also resigned the Presidency of the Automobile Club of America, of which he was elected the head at the first meeting of the organization on Oct. 16. Capt. Homer W. Hedge, Secretary, said last night that a meeting of the club would be called shortly to elect a new President. Among the candidates for active membership are Sir William C. Van Horne, President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and G. Creighton Webb. The club intends to establish a good library of automobile literature and to institute lectures on the subject of automobiles.

Frederick R. Simms, founder of the Automobile Club of Great Britain, is expected to visit New York in February, when the American club will give a dinner in his honor.

WOULD BEAUTIFY THE CITY.

National Sculpture Society Members Discuss Plans for Enriching the Open Spaces.

Members of the National Sculpture Society met last evening and discussed various plans for the "Enrichment of the Open Spaces of New York" from the Battery to the Harlem River. A number of photographs of views in the city and plans for suggested improvements were thrown upon a screen by a magic lantern.

The first speaker, George E. Bissell, suggested that at the intersection of streets, especially in the tenement districts, fountains, surrounded by trees, and with sculptural adornments, might be placed. The corners of the buildings at the junctions of the streets might be rounded, and the result would be that the crowded districts of the east side would be made cheerful-looking at a small expense.

Nelson S. Spencer, speaking on "The Battery," advocated the building of a column to commemorate the historical incidents connected with that part of the city, and symbolizing the great number of immigrants who entered the United States through the old Castle Garden.

Charles A. Lopez, dealing with St. Mark's Place, suggested that a large architectural bas-relief might be placed at the end of the building at the junction of Clinton Place and Astor Place. He exhibited a design as a suggestion for this relief, which was received with much applause.

Charles A. Caffin spoke on "Union Square." He said that the square had become recognized as a place for parades and open-air meetings, and suggested the building of a sort of semicircular colisseum at the north end, with seats for auditors and a rostrum for speakers. He declared that, should some such plan ever be adopted, it would be necessary to alter the arrangement of the square itself to a more formal style, and complained that it was impossible to walk through either Union Square or any other of the city's parks without losing time.

Speaking on "Madison Square and the Dewey Arch." Roger Riordan remarked that the members of the National Sculpture Society seemed to think that it would be more becoming to keep in the background as far as the building of a permanent arch was concerned. He thought modesty was a good thing, but at times was out of place. With regard to such an excellent work as perpetuating the Dewey Arch it was certainly out of place.

Karl Bitter explained a plan for the Plaza and the treatment of Fifth Avenue from the south end of the Park to the Museum of Art. He said that if the wall bounding the east side of the Park were moved back thirty feet, and the pathway left, an arrangement would result similar to that of the Champs Elysées and Rotten Row. Carriages would be able to drive up one side of the path and down the other, while seats could be provided on the pathway itself, with possible sculptural adornments.

Charles R. Lamb advocated the clearing away of all the buildings in City Hall Park except the old City Hall, and the employment of a new entrance to the Brooklyn Bridge as part of a general design for beautifying that part of the city.

FINGERHUT MURDER TRIAL.

Counsel for the Accused Woman Sets Up a Claim of Self-Defense.

SOMERVILLE, N. J., Dec. 19.—This was the second day of the Fingerhut murder trial, in which Mrs. Fingerhut is charged with killing Paul Roehricht of New York, who owned the farm upon which the Fingerhut family live. The State closed its case and the counsel for the woman made his opening address.

He said he would prove that Roehricht had tried to induce Theodore Fingerhut, the woman's husband, to set fire to his house, saying he would get the house insured for a large amount, would also pay for Fingerhut's insurance on his household goods, and that Fingerhut would make several hundred dollars out of it. Fingerhut refused to do it, he said, and this incensed Roehricht, who never showed himself afterward on the premises Fingerhut occupied until the day he was shot. He also stated he would prove that Robert M. Clark had never served the notices of ejectment he claimed to have done.

About fifteen or twenty minutes after the father and son left home, the day of the shooting, he said, five or six men came to force an entrance into the house. Mrs. Fingerhut warned them off, saying her husband and son were away, and asking them to wait until they returned. In a short time Roehricht appeared with Robert M. Clark, and Mrs. Fingerhut asked him why he treated them in that way. Mr. Roehricht said: "You must get out."

Clark then appeared at one door with a pistol, he said, and another man at the other door with a hatchet. A battering ram was used, and the woman was frightened. Mrs. Clemmons, a neighbor, was with her, and two small children were in the house and they were crying. Mrs. Fingerhut cried: "My God! they are going to kill me." She then stepped to the window, and fired the shot which killed Roehricht.

Theodore Fingerhut, who was then called as a witness, testified to substantially the facts related by the lawyer, and was on the stand until the closing of court.

Arthur D. F. Wright Dead.

Arthur D. F. Wright, thirty-six years old, a tea merchant and President of the corporation of Wright, Duryee & Barwise of 70 Front Street, died suddenly of heart disease Monday at his residence, 59 Morningside Avenue. He was born in Glasgow, Scotland, and was the son of the late John Wright, who was also in the tea trade in this city. He came to this country when a child, and had been connected with the tea trade for the last ten years. He leaves a wife and infant son.

VIENNA CHESS TOURNAMENT.

The Second Round Completed, with Brody Ahead.

VIENNA, Dec. 19.—The second round of the national chess masters' tournament was played to-night, when the results were as follows:

Brody defeated Schwarz, Kortc defeated Prock, Alapin and Popiel adjourned their game, much in favor of Alapin; Albin and Schlechter adjourned their game on even terms, Wolf and Zinkl drew, and Marocsy and Marco adjourned their game, much in favor of Marocsy.

The third round will be played in the following order to-morrow: Schlechter vs. Wolf, Popiel vs. Albin, Prock vs. Alapin, Brody vs. Kortc, Marocsy vs. Schwarz, Zinkl vs. Marco.

NEED FOR A NEW WHITE HOUSE.

Mansion at Washington Too Small for Present Necessities.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Senator Cullom's bill to improve the White House has aroused considerable interest here and has had the effect of reviving the periodical discussion as to whether the building is suitable for the President and whether better quarters should not be devised. It has been suggested that a building for the President's own use should be erected on the White House ground. The White House is more a business office for the President than a house, and the Chief Executive of the Nation has really narrower quarters in his big house than most well-to-do private citizens. He lives, practically, in a few rooms in his official residence, and has been compared to a tailor living over his store.

In connection with this discussion some interesting views were advanced to-day by an official who believes that the White House is entirely inadequate to the public needs.

"The reason why the inadequate house is retained," he said, "is that we are all waiting for the right woman to come to Washington. The future of the White House depends on some woman whose husband will be elected President. Not until a clever female politician who combines feminine charm with political skill enters the White House will the doom of the old building be sounded.

"Every step forward that has been made in the history of that institution is due to a woman. Abigail Adams was the first builder of the White House; Dolly Madison completed it. The building waits now for a Dolly Madison, and makeshifts like Senator Cullom's bill will be the only improvements that will ever be made until the new Dolly Madison comes.

"It is really remarkable how few women who command the necessary attributes for a successful politician have occupied the White House. There have been a few clever politicians who lacked the necessary feminine charm; there have been many more who were charming and gracious, but had no political skill.

"But when the right woman comes to Washington as wife of a President, and discovers that the White House, as a residence for the head of a Nation of 70,000,000 people is a back-number absurdity, then Congress will take hold of the matter with a will. Before they know that she is influencing them the old White House will be a thing of the past, and the President will have an official residence that is big enough for his needs. The new White House will be her monument, as the old one is that of Abigail Adams and Dolly Madison."

TWO YOUTHFUL FIRE FIGHTERS.

Remove Five Children from Danger, and Then Put Out the Flames.

A bracket lamp hanging in the kitchen of John Sullivan's apartments, on the second floor of the four-story tenement house 110 Sullivan Street, fell yesterday afternoon and set fire to the table beneath. No one was in the house at the time save the six children of the family.

The oldest of these, Edward, twelve years old, shouted fire and then began the work of saving his younger sisters and brother from possible danger. He picked up his baby brother, William Dewey, and carried him to the fire escape outside the front window, at the same time leading his sister Lillie, nine years old, by the hand. He then went back into the rooms and, with the help of Henry Hager, thirteen years old, who lives in the house, took out his other sisters, eleven, six, and four years old, respectively, to the same place of safety.

When the children had been properly disposed of the two boys ran back to the kitchen and succeeded in putting out the flames by throwing water upon them. When the firemen reached the scene they found nothing to do. The damage was slight.

COUNCIL AND CORPORATIONS.

Harlem Railroad Bridges and Astoria Land Grant Considered.

In the Council yesterday the Committee on Bridges and Tunnels reported an ordinance requiring the New York and Harlem Railroad to erect three bridges across Park Avenue between Ninety-eighth and One Hundred and Second Streets. The ordinance was offered a year ago by Councilman Christman, but several Tammany members have obstructed its passage. Mr. Carley, the Tammany leader, opposed it again yesterday, but a bare majority, including the Republicans, voted for it, and the resolution was adopted. The estimated cost of the bridges is $28,000. Mr. Christman, in speaking for the ordinance, gave as the reason for the opposition of Mr. Oakley that the latter was engineering an ordinance to give the New York Central Railroad Company a permit to lay tracks on Forty-seventh Street for the American Express Company. A permit for this work is now held up in committee because three of the members refuse to sign the report.

After a hard fight a resolution calling on Gov. Roosevelt to withhold his signature from the letters patent to the Astoria Light, Heat and Power Company for lands under water at Berrian's Island was adopted. Councilman Cassidy of Queens defended the grant, saying that the land would be worth nothing until the grantee had expended thousands of dollars upon it and that the outcry made by Tammany Hall was not justified by the facts.

Boy Accused of Robbing Employer.

Harry Rubin, fifteen years of age, the son of a butcher, at 355 East Fifty-third Street, and employed until a few days ago as a clerk to Max Schneider, a tailor at 587 Lexington Avenue, was arrested last night and sent to the Gerry Society rooms on a charge of robbing his employer of $61. Rubin deposited money daily in a bank for his employer, and it is charged that he would deposit less than was intrusted to him and then change the figures in the book so his employer could not catch him. When the book was balanced, however, the trick was detected.

Dead Man's Diamond Missing.

Mrs. Lencioni, the mother of Frank Lencioni of 163 West Forty-eighth Street, the bookkeeper employed by Mazetti, at Sixth Avenue and Forty-ninth Street, who died of a hemorrhage Sunday night while returning home from work, reported last night to the West Forty-seventh Street police that when her son's body was brought home Monday morning a valuable diamond stud was missing. It had evidently been wrenched off, as the spiral stem was intact. Detectives are looking for the missing diamond.

More Beach at Arverne.

The action of the tides is increasing the expanse of beach at Arverne, Queens Borough. Within the past few months the distance between the board walk and high-water mark, has been increased by about 100 feet. Only a few years ago the beach was very narrow, the water reaching the old board walk on ordinary tides. Three years ago the new board walk was built, being about 200 feet further out than the old one. Now the high-water mark is several hundred feet beyond this.

Senator Martin Is Re-elected.

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 19.—United States Senator Thomas S. Martin was re-elected to-day for the term beginning March 4, 1901, by both houses of the Assembly, acting separately. To-morrow the two houses will meet in joint session to canvass the vote and declare the result.

Down-Town Fire Does $5,000 Damage

A fire occurred last night on the third floor of a four-story brick building on the south side of Fulton Street, between Gold Street and Ryder's Alley, and did $5,000 damages. The Bell Manufacturing Company, makers of plumbers' woodwork on the third floor, were the heaviest losers.

TO LAW TO SAVE LODGERS.

Sidney G. Poole, Master of the House, the Court Says—Wife Also Collected Rents.

The lodgers in Sidney G. Poole's residence at 109 East Twenty-sixth Street breathed a sigh of relief yesterday when it became known that Justice Giegerich of the Supreme Court had handed down a decision granting a perpetual injunction forbidding Mrs. Poole to collect any more rents from the lodgers, the court deciding thereby that Mr. Poole is the master of the house. The injunction was issued a week ago yesterday, and since that time, so Mr. Poole says, a change has come over his wife.

There had been no end of trouble at the Poole residence ever since early in October. Mrs. Poole began to collect money on the weekly dues, telling the lodgers she owned the establishment, while similar statements and likewise collections were made by Mr. Poole until the twenty-three lodgers began to wonder who was who in the house, and many got out because the domestic atmesphere became too warm for comfort.

This was painfully true, some of them say, especially when Mr. and Mrs. Poole were wont to accost the same lodger at the same time. Frequently the aforesaid lodger fled to quietly think it all over. When the lodgers dwindled to fourteen Mr. Poole appealed to the law, and won. Mr. Poole, in his affidavit, said he was the sole executor of his daughter by his first wife, Lillian, who died in Pittsburg in 1893. He received her furniture and moved it into the house at 109, which he leased.

Mr. Poole said last night that the term "erratic," applied to his wife, was putting it mild. "Why," said he, "she's been doing nothing but raise Cain here for weeks. This injunction has scared her now, and she is quiet, but I don't know when she may break loose again. She is still living here, but I do not see much of her.

"Some time ago after a row," went on Mr. Poole cheerfully, "my wife tried to get me arrested, and I was summoned to Magistrate Brann's court. My wife made her complaint, but the Magistrate stopped her after she had gone on for a time, and he said: 'Madam, the trouble is that you want to wear the trousers. You want to live in every room in the house, and generally you seem to want to make trouble. Mr. Poole is master in that house. You go home and behave yourself and don't you come here again. Mr. Poole is discharged.'"

The reference to living in every room in the house, Poole said, was that Mrs. Poole had a way of taking a fancy to a certain room, and would go up without warning, burst into the room, and order the lodger out.

This happened lately, he said, in the room occupied by a Mr. and Mrs. Carter. "Why, I simply had to pull her out of the room by main force," he said. "She hung on to Carter, and they both came out. Then I released Carter from her grasp."

On another occasion, Mr Poole said he was collecting a bill from a woman lodger, when Mrs. Poole burst into the room and accused him of all sorts of things. "She burst in," said he "in the highest style of Bowery dramatic art. I said I was collecting rent, and told her to get out. She grabbed me. I took out my watch and said: 'Madam, I give you one minute to release your hold.' She did, but the language that woman used to me, her husband, was artistically awful."

Another characteristic of his wife, so Mr. Poole declared before the injunction was issued, was her persistent search for a lawyer who would take the same view as to her rights in the house as she did. Mrs. Poole had five lawyers, but they were discharged one after another, because they did not suit.

Mrs. Poole was not at home last evening. One effect of the injunction, and the principal one, is that all the old lodgers have returned. The next legal event scheduled in the Poole family is the hearing in a suit for separation now pending.

MAZET COUNSEL'S REPORT.

Report that the Chairman Is Also Preparing One Not Credited.

Frank Moss, counsel for the Mazet investigating committee, is devoting his time these days to the preparation of his report. It will be a voluminous document, and will not only review the whole work of the committee, but will containe his recommendations for changes in the charter. He worked on it all day yesterday at his home, 306 East One Hundred and Twentieth Street, and said last evening that he expected to have it completed in time to present it at the adjourned meeting of the committee, which will be held at the Chairman's office, 257 Broadway, on Friday.

In regard to a statement published yesterday to the effect that in view of the clash between Mr. Moss and the committee in the closing hours of their sessions, Mr. Mazet was drawing up an individual report, which would take the place of the document prepared by Mr. Moss, the counsel for the committee, said: "I haven't heard anything about that. I guess it's a guess." Mr. Mazet was in Albany yesterday, but no credence was placed in the story at his office.

MILITIA FRAUDS CHARGED.

Gov. Pingree Demands Resignations of Three General Officers.

DETROIT, Mich., Dec. 19.—A Tribune special from Lansing says: "Gov. Pingree to-day sent letters to Adjt. Gen. Fred H. Case, Three Rivers; Quartermaster Gen. William L. White, Grand Rapids, and Inspector General Arthur S. Marsh, Allegany, comprising the State Military Board, asking for their resignations because of the alleged irregularities said to have been discovered by the Grand Jury in their examination into the sale of some $50,000 worth of military supplies by the board to the Illinois Supply Company for $10,500.

"It is claimed that the board then purchased the same supplies, together with some others, back again from the Henderson Arms Company of Kalamazoo for $62,000. The Governor says these disclosures indicate either collusion on the part of the board or failure to exercise due care in protecting the interests of the State.

"The Governor adds that, while he thinks it was lack of care and not collusion, under the circumstances he has determined to direct that immediate steps be taken to recover the money the State has lost and to ask for the resignations of the board."

THE SEABOARD CONSOLIDATION.

Florida Peninsular and Georgia and Alabama Railways Taken In.

NORFOLK, Va., Dec. 19.—At a meeting of the stockholders of the Seaboard and Roanoke Railroad Company, held this afternoon in Portsmouth, a resolution authorizing the consolidation of the Seaboard Air Line system, which is controlled by the Seaboard and Roanoke, with the Georgia and Alabama and the Florida Central and Peninsular Companies, according to the plans of the Williams syndicate, were adopted. Opposition to the resolution was made by attorneys representing the minority stockholders, chief among whom is Thomas F. Ryan of New York.

Mr. Ryan's lawyers entered a formal protest against all the consolidation proceedings and presented charges touching both their integrity and legality. The fight will be continued to-morrow at Raleigh, where the Raleigh and Gaston stockholders will be called together.

Threat of Lynching in Virginia.

NORFOLK, Va., Dec. 19.—The residence of George Taylor, white, near the village of Oakley, N. C., was destroyed by fire Saturday night, and Taylor was burned to death. Suspicion pointed to Henry and Mack Taylor, colored, as having set the place on fire, and they were arrested. It is feared they will be lynched.

$150,000 Fire in Florence, S. C.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Dec. 19.—Florence, S. C., sustained a heavy loss by fire early this morning. The blaze started in the Florence Hotel. This building, as well as the Bank of Florence, the Opera House, and the City Hall, was destroyed. The Florence Fire Department was aided by the Darlington firemen. The total loss will be $150,000, partly insured.

Died at a Democratic Meeting.

While attending a meeting of the Democrats of the Second Assembly District at 200 East Broadway last night, Louis Bernstein, fifty years old, of 227 Fifth Street, died suddenly of heart disease. Coroner Fitzpatrick, who was in attendance at the meeting, permitted the removal of the body to Mr. Bernstein's late home.

Rich Quarts Found in the Klondike.

VICTORIA, B. C., Dec. 19.—A marvelous quarts find is reported from Dawson. Assays run as high as $800 a ton, it is said, and the ledge is a mile in width.

FIREMEN LOST IN A FOG.

Boat William F. Havemeyer Groped Around in the Mist Three Hours.

The heavy fog of Monday night was particularly severe on the fireboat service of the Fire Department. During the middle of the night and early morning several alarms were received for river front fires. The fireboats Zophar Mills and R. A. Van Wyck, which lay in the North River, found that it was impossible for them to leave their berths.

At midnight call 2—336 was received for a fire at One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Street and Willis Avenue. The fireboat William F. Havemeyer is due at this, and, although the fog was heavy, Capt. Joseph Shaw resolved to make the run.

The fireboat pushed out from her berth at the foot of East Ninety-sixth Street and headed north. The mist closed in around her. Three hours were passed groping around, when suddenly a shore was spied, and the fireboat put in. The land was found to be a part of the Bronx, but it was far from the scene of the fire to which the men had started to respond. A number of the firemen volunteered to locate the scene of the fire, and after a long walk they returned to the fireboat with the news that the land companies had been at the fire and gone hours before. The Havemeyer reached her berth again five hours after she had left it.

Slayer of Brother-in-Law Convicted.

Martin Regan of 339 West Fortieth Street was convicted yesterday in the Court of General Sessions of murder in the second degree. Regan shot and killed Francis Edward Slater, his brother-in-law, in a scuffle which took place on Oct. 26 at Twenty-fourth Street and Avenue A. Regan's sister, an ex-actress, wife of the man he murdered, was his strongest witness. She said that Slater had treated her cruelly.

Two Years for Manslaughter.

Carl Eckel, who was convicted of manslaughter in the second degree, was sentenced yesterday by Judge Blanchard, in Part II. of General Sessions, to two years' imprisonment at hard labor. Eckel and Beyer, the man he killed, roomed together at 339 West Fortieth Street. Beyer criticised Eckel's voice, and in a quarrel that followed was stabbed with a hunting knife.

Disagreement in an Election Case.

Justice Werner, in the extraordinary term of the Supreme Court, last night, discharged the jury in the case of Julius Lyon, charged with intimidating Bernard Sussman in favor of the candidacy of Sherman Max Borges. The foreman announced that it would be impossible for the jury to agree. They stood 10 to 2 for conviction.

EMERALD GUN CLUB SHOOT.

Mrs. Vrooms, Widow of a Former Member, Is Benefited.

The open live bird shoot of the Emerald Gun Club attracted many trap shooters to Dexter Park yesterday. The birds were the fastest lot that had ever been trapped there, and the rain that fell throughout the afternoon had little effect on their fleetness of wing. The club paid 10 per cent. of the gross receipts of the day to the widow of E. A. Vrooms, who was drowned several weeks ago when the ferryboat Chicago was sunk in the North River. Mr. Vrooms was the Vice President of the Emerald Gun Club, and one of the best wing shots in that organization.

The scores in the various events follow:

First Event.—Miss and out; all at 30 yards; $5 entrance, birds extra.—Van Allen and Le Roy, 3 each; O'Connell and Sands, 1 each. Van Allen and Le Roy divided.

Eighth Event.—Miss and out; same conditions.—O'Connell and Chambers, 4 each; Van Allen, 3; Schnebel, 2. O'Connell and Chambers divided.

BILLIARD LEADERS BATTLE.

Poggenburg Defeats Keeney in First Half of Inter-City Match.

Ferdinand Poggenburg and Frank A. Keeney, winners, respectively, of the first and second sections of the inter-city and inter-club handicap amateur billiard tournament played the first 300 points in their 600-point match last night at Maurice Daly's Academy.

Poggenburg, who played 300 to his opponent's 280, had no trouble in winning the evening's play. His average, 6 42-43, is the best he has made since the first section of the tournament began at Slosson's Academy. Keeney was not in his usual form, and averaged but 4 34-42. Keeney took in the opening inning, and followed it with several small runs. Poggenburg, in the fifth inning, succeeded in making seventeen. This run placed him in the lead, which he held to the finish. In the twenty-sixth inning he scored forty-four, the highest run of the game. The contest will be resumed to-night at Slosson's. The score:

Poggenburg—0 4 1 6 17 13 7 23 2 3 0 2 5 0 1 2 0 0 1 2 1 1 2 4 0 6 4 4 0 13 0 0 0 0 0 26 9 12 1 1 4 9 2 1 12 14. Total, 300. Average, 6 42-43. High runs, 24, 44, 26.

Keeney—10 2 1 2 3 6 3 1 4 2 7 1 0 2 5 5 6 0 0 0 5 10 8 9 3 2 5 5 0 4 2 3 2 30 7 7 0 6 0 0 1 5 6. Total, 198. Average, 4 34-42. High runs, 14, 25, 30.

Akron Pugilist Beats Troy Opponent.

"Gus" Ruhlin of Akron, Ohio, defeated "Stockings" Conroy of Troy, N. Y., in the seventh round of what was scheduled for a twenty-round fight at the Broadway Athletic Club last night. The slim crowd present manifested but little interest in the fight. Conroy may have trained a few hours for the fight, but showed no evidence of having done so. After two minutes and fifty seconds of fighting in the seventh round Referee "Charley" White stopped the fight and declared Ruhlin the winner. The preliminary bout of twelve rounds at catchweights between "Long Ike" (white) of Coney Island and Dan Sullivan (colored) of Bath Beach was declared a draw.

Yacht Grayling to be Broken Up.

The schooner yacht Grayling, once the flagship of the Atlantic Yacht Club and owned by Latham A. Fish, has passed into the hands of the wreckers to be broken up. In 1884 she won the Goelet Schooner Cup and was the fastest schooner of her size in the world. Later she became a houseboat, and will now be broken up for her fittings.

MARKET CONDITIONS.

As compared with Monday's panicky experience, yesterday was a time of quiet on the Stock Exchange. Transactions approximated 900,000 shares, and some fluctuations were sharp, but excited nervousness was absent. Action by the Government as to deposits of revenue receipts and action by the banks in uniting to meet loan market requirements exerted tonic effect. Danger elements of consequence were thus removed. What was bad remaining had to do with financial wounds which have been suffered.

Throughout the day there seemed to be substantial purchases of securities by powerful interests not recently showing much interest in any Stock Exchange movement. Millionaires of the Standard Oil group are among these.

The market situation was helped by a cessation of sensational reports from out of town. Boston, Baltimore, and Chicago, which have been large contributors of gloomy rumors and predictions, gave out yesterday practically nothing to worry over. Institutions at Boston recently much forecast for failure were yesterday credited with having been able to safeguard themselves. One bank and a large manufacturing corporation included in recent current gossip there were said really to have become strengthened by reason of resources brought to them by friends resenting what were regarded as illegitimate attacks upon them.

In New York rumormongering there was much slackening of pace. Some sensational tales which have been circulated with detail and explicitness have become materially modified. Yet it would not be true to represent that all apprehensions have disappeared from Stock Exchange circles, there being some suggestions yesterday not

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—The transactions on the Stock Exchange to-day were not marked by any serious amount of liquidation. There was a plethora of offers to sell, but buyers were hard to find. Consequently many shares were marked down, though not to such an extent as yesterday. The lack of actual transactions was greatly due to the feeling that the largest houses will do nothing until it is known whether or not the French bank rate will be raised. It is believed in some quarters that if this should occur the Bank of England would follow suit, with a resulting increase in the gravity of the situation and further depreciation of values. At the close the impression prevailed that the Bank of France would raise its rate, though it would not be definitely known until to-morrow.

At the opening absolutely unfounded rumors, such as a serious defeat of Gen. Clery, helped the depression in prices, though the Bank of England freely discounted thirty-day bills at 6 per cent., and, apparently, there was no particular pressure in Lombard Street. But for the uncertainty regarding the war the money market, it was said, could well take care of itself. Previous to yesterday's semi-panic there had undoubtedly been large liquidations. But it is believed these were anticipated, and to some extent prevented serious difficulties at the next settlement.

The failure of the London and Northern Bank, Limited, a comparatively small concern, was announced to-day. The Directors issued a statement attributing the failure to the alleged libelous assertions regarding the bank which have appeared in the press and showing that its assets should fully cover the liabilities.

The failure of the bank did not appear to have any serious effect on the market.

American securities were dull at the opening, but improved later, only to go off again under realizing. The final tone was weak, with prices slightly above the lowest.

Consols for money, 98½; consols for the account, 98⅜; Erie, 11⅜; Erie first preferred, 31¾; Illinois Central, 113; Union Pacific preferred, 72; St. Paul, 118½; New York Central, 126½; Pennsylvania, 65½; Reading, 8⅝; Northern Pacific preferred, 73¼; Atchison, 18⅝; Louisville, 77½; Grand Trunk, 6½; Anaconda, 6⅞.

Money, 4½@5 per cent.; rate of discount in the open market for short and three months' bills, 6½@6⅞ per cent.

Bar silver, quiet at 27 3-16d per ounce.

The amount of bullion withdrawn from the Bank of England on balance to-day was £84,000. Gold premiums: Buenos Ayres, 129.10; Madrid, 26.80; Lisbon, 43; Rome, 7.02½.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Dec. 19.—Prices on the Bourse to-day opened weak. The fall in consols and one rise in the bank rate caused sales in all departments. Later, the sales ceased and the feeling became firmer. A sharp relapse followed on weak prices in London and the assumption that the rise of the Berlin Bank rate would be followed by a similar measure upon the part of the Bank of England and the Bank of France, and the anticipation of dearer money. Selling then became indiscriminate and prices were weak. Three per cent. rentes, for the account, Exchange on London, 25f 37½c for checks. Spanish 4s closed at 65.20.

BERLIN, Dec. 19.—Yesterday's slump in New York, the fall in consols, and the increase in the rate of the Reichsbank cooperated to cause uneasiness on the Boerse, and large liquidations led to a fall in prices, but they partially recovered on covering purchases. Exchange on London, 20 marks 54 pfennigs for checks.

FRANKFORT, Dec. 19.—The raised bank rate and adverse reports from other Boerses caused a sharp setback in all the departments on the Boerse here to-day.

BOSTON BROKERS FAIL.

Dillaway & Starr Suspend on Account of Financial Flurry There.

BOSTON, Dec. 19.—Dillaway & Starr, bankers and brokers, 40 Water Street, this city, have assigned. The firm is one of the most prominent of its kind in the city, and is composed of Charles F. W. Dillaway, George H. Flint, and A. W. Lawrence. Mr. Dillaway is a member of the Boston Stock Exchange, having been admitted April 27, 1891.

The firm, with two other houses, carried a large quantity of United States mining stocks, it is said. The embarrassment of the Globe National Bank and the subsequent flurry in the stock market are given as the reasons for the assignment, as the firm was a heavy loser.

Soon after the opening of the market to-day a notice was placed on the door that the firm had assigned, and business was suspended pending an examination of the accounts. The New York correspondents of the firm were E. L. Oppenheim & Co., but the firm is said to have been carrying a very small New York account of late.

Assignee Hovey at noon said that no statement would be given out to-day.

DISCOUNT RATE IN GERMANY.

Imperial Bank Raises Its Figure to 7 Per Cent.

BERLIN, Dec. 19.—The rate of discount of the Imperial Bank of Germany was raised to-day from 6 to 7 per cent.

The Reichsanzeiger publishes the following statement: "At the meeting of the Central Committee of the Bank of Germany to-day, Herr Kock, a Director, discussing the financial situation, said the position of the bank had never before been so strained at the same period of the year and that the stock of bullion had become seriously diminished, being 57,000,000 marks less than in 1898.

"After giving other figures showing the difficulties of the situation, he said it had been impossible to avoid an increase in the bank rate."

Dr. von Miquel, Prussian Minister of Finance, has just submitted to Emperor William a special report regarding Prussia's finances from 1897 to 1899. The report on the whole is favorable, showing a diminution of the Prussian debt. The interest on the debt has diminished from 242,000,000 marks to 221,000,000 marks. The State railways, despite the very heavy traffic, make a less favorable showing, the surplus now being 449,000,000 marks, as against 468,000,000 marks in 1896.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Liquidation in the market for outside securities was even more evident yesterday than on the previous day, and in many issues further considerable declines resulted from the day's transactions. Selling that had all the appearance of being by persons obliged to realize on their holdings led to several-point recessions in a number of issues, prominent among which were several of the industrial stocks. It was in this group that the heaviest losses were recorded, the copper stocks and some of the electrical stocks showing strength that under the circumstances was notable. For many issues very few bidders were found, and buyers were obliged to supply practically any bids made, even when these were very much below recent figures. Market selling orders were fully as difficult to handle yesterday as on Monday.

Repetition of the previous day's record was had at the close, when the declines of the earlier part of the day brought into the market a number of buying orders that added materially to the strength displayed when final prices were made and which in some instances materially reduced the day's losses.

AMALGAMATED COPPER was much less active than on the previous day and fluctuated much less. A prominent operator was credited with having profited by Monday's weak market to cover a large amount of short stock and yesterday it was noticed that the bear attacks on Amalgamated that to no small extent were responsible for the recent decline in that stock were not renewed. Amalgamated, as well as the other copper stocks, were relieved of selling pressure and though not active the market for the stock was exceptionally firm. Lowest and highest prices for the day were within a range of half a point and the stock closed with a fractional net loss at 78½ bid.

NEW AMSTERDAM GAS was one of the few stocks in which closing figures showed net gains. In sympathy with Consolidated Gas, New Amsterdam advanced more than a point to 20⅝ and closed at 20 bid, a net gain of 1 point. In the preferred stock the rumor of gas war settlement led to some bidding at figures above the market for long term buyers' options, but regular bids were little improved. In the bonds a more unfavorable condition than has prevailed in some days was noted. Little demand was had for them and at the close the best actual bid was 85, while the bonds were offered at 90, the previous day's closing bid.

DISTILLING OF AMERICA was a prominent feature of the day's trading and one of the stocks in which greatest weakness appeared. Sales of the common stock were made as low as 5½ and the preferred stock sold freely down to 19. Closing figures showed a net loss of 1⅛ points in the common and of 3½ points in the preferred. Trading was heaviest in the latter issue, in which transactions amounted to probably not less than 3,000 shares.

ELECTRIC VEHICLES sold at the lowest price recorded recently, but at the close rallied very considerably from the lowest. Transactions aggregated something in the neighborhood of 1,000 shares and prices ranged from 45 to 48. Final bids were at 52¼, which was several points above the last sale.

Some few stocks were well bought yesterday and showed at the close substantial net gains. Among them were Royal Baking Powder preferred, which closed at 92¼ bid, a net gain of 2¼ points, and Storage Power, which on very light transactions advanced from 9½ to 11¼. At the close bids of 11¼ were made for Tennessee Copper, a net gain of 1¼ points. In most other issues, however, the final figures were below those of Monday.

Closing quotations were as follows:

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 19.—There was a general hardening of prices in the mining group today, with some fair buying for investment in other directions. Parrot was up 5, at 37; Montana fell 8, to 250, thence rising to 267; Utah was off 2, to 21, but rallied to 25; Santa Fé strengthened 1⅛, to 5; Centennial, 2¼, to 38; Wolverine, 3, to 38; Bingham lost ⅞, to 9, later selling at 9⅝; Cochiti was 2½ better, at 12½; United States Oil fell 2, to 23, thence rallying to 26; Central Oil lost ¼ more, to 17½, rallying to 18⅜; New England Gas and Coke lost 1½ more, to 16½, rallying to 19; 5s were 2 lower; at 70; Arcadian lost ⅜, to 21¼, rallying to 22; Arnold rallied ½, to 4½; Butte held at 42; Calumet was 10 lower, at 710; Dominion Coal lost 1½, to 40½, recovering to 41½; Franklin rallied 1⅜, to 13½; Osceola was up 2½, at 67; Quincy was up 5, at 135; Tamarack was 5 lower, at 175; West End Street Railway was up 2, at 90; New Haven, 1 at 250, and Boston Elevated, 2, at 95. Bell Telephone lost 5, to 330, rallying to 336, with 340 bid. Amalgamated was up 3, at 79½; Isle Royale, ⅝, at 23. The close was decidedly strong.

At the Clearing House this morning the rate between the banks was still 6 per cent., and New York funds sold at 20 and 25 cents discount.

Money on call is 6 per cent. and upward, though rates are purely nominal and governed entirely by names and collateral. There is practically no market on time money, and little or no outside paper is selling. Banks are taking care of their mercantile customers at 6 per cent. and upward.

Closing bid and asked:

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 19.—It was a weak but active market. There were some improvements, however. Linseed preferred opened at 48½ and advanced to 51½, closing at 51¼. The common closed at 11⅞, the fraction being the day's gain. Union Traction preferred, on the other hand, opened at 76½ and advanced to 77, only to touch 73, one sale, however, being made at 78. It then sold to 75¼, closing at 75. The common opened at 28, sold off half a point, and closed at 28½. There was a heavy trade in Biscuit common. It opened at 32, and after selling to 32½ dropped to 31½. Then it fluctuated between 32 and 31⅝, until after call, when it advanced to 35 and stood at 34½. The preferred closed at 89, two points gain for the day. Steel opened at 33, sold off half a point, advanced to 34, and closed at 33½. The preferred broke from 90 at the start to 87, and closed at 88. Metropolitan Elevated preferred opened at 74, but broke to 72, afterward advancing to 75½, and closing at 74⅞. The bonds brought 94. West Chicago dropped at the start from 110 to 108, but closed at 111½. Match was very erratic. It opened at 116 and went by quick jumps to 120, and bobbed around 118 and 120, closing at 118¾.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 19.—The stock market opened fairly steady, but there was soon such an outpour of stocks that prices became more demoralized than on Monday, and not a few of them receded to the lowest figures of the present movement, while still others reached the lowest prices ever quoted for them. Lehigh Valley was forced down to 22⅞, Pennsylvania Railroad to 64⅛, Cambria Steel to 16, Diamond Steel to 4, Tidewater Steel to 11¼, Marsden to 9½, Electric Company of America to 10, American Railways to 4½, Asphalt to 10⅛, Philadelphia Electric to 5, United Gas to 144, Union Traction to 44½, Consolidated Lake Superior to 16, American Cement to 7⅞, Susquehanna Railway Co. 6 p. c. 1st to 16, Pennsylvania Steel preferred to 87, Wabash Light to 35, Electric Storage Battery to 75, (a loss of 25 points.) There was substantial recovery later, buying orders appearing in nearly all of the active issues.

The close was steady, at these bid and asked prices:

ALTERATIONS TO A CHURCH.

Madison Avenue Presbyterian Edifice to be Practically Rebuilt.

The Board of Trustees of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church has submitted plans to the Building Department, through Architects James E. Ware & Son, which call for almost a rebuilding of the church, at the northeast corner of Madison Avenue and Seventy-third Street, and the Sunday school building adjoining. The estimated cost of the improvement is $75,000.

Another story will be added to the Sunday school building and the front wall of it rebuilt to correspond with the architecture of the church. In the church itself a gallery carried around three sides will be built, together with a new organ loft and vestibule. The Seventy-third Street entrance will be done away with, and will be replaced by stained glass windows. The towers will also be reconstructed.

The Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, Dr. John Robinson, and the Phillips Memorial Church, Dr. John E. Bushnell, recently consolidated.

A New Office Building.

The southeast corner of Liberty and William Streets, a plot 60 by 121.7, is to be the site of a new twelve-story office building. Plans were filed yesterday by David W. Bishop of Lenox, Mass., through Architects Clinton & Russell, who estimate the cost of the new structure at $300,000.

COTTON.—The condition of affairs at the Cotton Exchange was much improved. The swing of the market was decidedly more narrow. It was a matter of 12 points, with the general tendency upward. The opening call developed the fact that a good many seventh-hour selling orders had reached the market from scattered quarters, but these were promptly absorbed, with the near positions showing leading strength; they advanced 5@11 points on the call, while the more remote deliveries advanced only 1@2 points. The principal cause of the better feeling was the reshuffling of ownerships made in money circles. Advices from the Stock Exchange were of a decidedly more reassuring character. But an underlying element of strength was the resistance shown by the English cotton market in the face of yesterday's panicky conditions on this side of the water. At the close the market was steady in tone, with prices 11@18 points net higher on the present crop months and 1@2 points net lower on the far months.

Southern spot markets were officially reported by wire as follows: Savannah, 7⅛c; Charleston, 7¼c; Wilmington, 7¼c; Norfolk, 7 15-16c lower at 7¾c; Baltimore, ⅛c lower, 7½c; Memphis, ⅛c lower, 7¼c.

FIRES COST SEVEN LIVES

Tenements' Fatalities in Third and Tenth Avenues.

HEROIC RESCUES BY FIREMEN

With Scaling and Extension Ladders They Carry Many Persons from a Burning House.

Seven persons met death in two tenement house fires which occurred in the city early yesterday morning. Several more persons were burned and otherwise injured.

Five of the dead and all of the injured were victims of a fire which nearly gutted the five-story double tenement house at the southeast corner of Third Avenue and One Hundred and Second Street, known as the Mentor. One family was nearly wiped out by the death of father, mother, and child, another child being one of the injured. That the loss of life was not greater was due to the splendid work of the firemen, who were on the scene in an incredibly short time and effected heroic rescues by means of their scaling and extension ladders. The fire had gained a sweep through the entire building by way of an air shaft and the staircase before it was discovered. Had there been fire escapes in front as well as in the rear of the building, there would perhaps have been no fatalities.

The list of dead in the Third Avenue fire is as follows:

BARRETT, PATRICK, thirty-three years old; laborer.
BARRETT, Mrs. PATRICK, twenty-seven years old.
BARRETT, JULIA, six years old.
NICKERSON, RICHARD, bricklayer.
UNKNOWN WOMAN.

Those injured and removed to the Harlem Hospital are:

BARRETT, MARY, nine years old.
FARLEY, MARY, twenty-three years old, niece of Patrick Barrett; afterward transferred to Bellevue.
McADEE, SUSAN, sixty years old.

Though the fire started in the basement, the greatest damage was to the upper stories, which the flames reached by the stairway and airshaft. The Barrett family lived on the top floor. The fire was discovered about 4 A. M. by Martin Ward, a baker of the neighborhood. Smoke at that time was coming from many parts of the building and within the entrance he saw flames. Not a sign of life was there within, and, knowing that all must be asleep, before attempting to send in a fire alarm he sought to awake the tenants by pelting the windows with stones. Henry Kleinwerth, a bartender in a near-by saloon, noticed him and, seeing the smoke, sent in an alarm. Two minutes later the firemen were on the scene and a second alarm was turned in on the arrival of Chief Burns.

Quick as they were, the firemen arrived only to find that the fire had already cut off all ingress and egress. The tenants were hanging out of the windows crying piteously for help. The main work was directed at once to the saving of human life rather than to fighting the flames. Most of those seen in the windows were in their night clothes. Their faces were hidden from time to time by the puffs of smoke which came from the apartments behind them. In some cases they were silhouetted against a glare within that showed that the flames had eaten through the partitions. Some of the tenants had gotten out by the rear fire escapes, but for those occupying rooms in the front part of the building that means of flight had been cut off before they were awakened. Goaded by heat and the suffocating flames, women and men began to crawl out onto the sills, determined to drop before being burned.

Scaling ladders were promptly run up, but before the apparatus could be placed in position one fireman had entered the adjoining tenement, and was soon seen climbing from a window on the top floor next to one in the burning house, in which two women were wringing their hands in desperation. With one leg crossed over the sill and held by comrades, this fireman, who was John Mulster of Engine 53, reached over, and, though his position was perilous, succeeded in lifting each of the women bodily to safety. They were Mrs. H. A. Fletcher, who lived on the top floor, next to the Barretts, and Mrs. Crawford.

Over the windows of a liquor store, occupying a ground floor, is a cornice and several of the tenants got out on this and passed to the next building. Fireman Patrick Doyle went up to the third floor, occupied by the Monahan and Allen families, some of the members of which had escaped by the rear. Doyle found two men and two women standing on the sills and hanging to the windows. He carried the women, one at a time, down his scaling ladder to the cornice, and the men followed. They were all more or less overcome by smoke.

It was not known at that time that any one had been injured, and still less that death had claimed any victims. Crowds had gathered, even at this early hour, and the reserves of the One Hundred and Fourth Street Police Station had difficulty in keeping the streets clear. The Third Avenue cars were blocked.

The greatest excitement prevailed when Fireman Carson of Engine 22 climbed to the fifth story, where he had descried two young women getting out of a window, about which the flames were licking the upper woodwork. He reached them just as they swung themselves from the sill and hung by their hands. It was none too soon, for it was evident that had he not grabbed them and given the support of the ladder they would have dropped in a moment. Their clothing had been singed. Carson passed first one and then the other to a fireman closely following him. Firemen Harvey and Kiley and Chief Burns assisted in this rescue, which was witnessed by hundreds of persons. The two women were carried down to the street, where they proved to be Delia O'Connor and Kate Farley, nieces of Patrick Barrett.

From the fourth floor Mrs. Susan McAdee was taken by Fireman William O'Brien. She was hanging out of the window, and almost fell into his arms. She was badly but not dangerously burned. Two other women and two children were also rescued from the fourth floor, on which the family of William Giles lived. One of the last rescued was Mary Farley, sister of Kate Farley, who was badly burned. Little May Barrett was taken from a window of the same floor—the top. A tongue of flame had wrapped itself across her face, and it was at first thought that she had lost her sight. Her injuries, however, were not serious. Capt. Turpenny of Hook and Ladder 14 rescued her. Just inside that window were found later the bodies of her father, mother, and sister.

The man Nickerson met his death trying to escape through the flame-wrapped hallway. The body of a woman was found on the third floor. As all of the tenants had been accounted for, her identity could not be established. It was thought that she might have been a woman who had sought to hire a room of one of the tenants, and, not succeeding, had perhaps gone into an unoccupied tenement on the second floor to spend the night. Many of those injured were not in a condition that required hospital treatment and they went to the homes of friends.

It was estimated that the damage to the building was about $40,000. The upper floors were badly burned, and considerable damage was done to those below. The building was said to belong to Joshua Gregg.

The other fatal fire of yesterday morning was in the tenement at 496 Tenth Avenue. The victims were Kate Fox, wife of Martin Fox, a cabman, and her child in arms, James. This fire started from an ash barrel into which hot ashes had been put in a store on the ground floor. All of the ten tenements in the five-story building were occupied. The fire occurred at 2:30 A. M., and, like the Harlem fire, had gained considerable headway before it was discovered. Following up the stairways and shutting off escape by that means.

What closely approached a panic followed when the tenants were awakened, but some of the men kept their heads, and most of the occupants escaped in their night clothes through scuttles onto the roof, and thence to adjoining roofs. Some reached the fire-escapes and passed to the adjacent flats, not trusting themselves to conditions that might prevail on the ground in the rear. Battalion Chief Binns had charge of the firemen, but nobody had to be taken out by ladders. After the fire was under control the bodies of the woman and child, both badly burned, were found on the fourth floor. The little one was clasped in its mother's arms. The woman lived on the second floor and had evidently been trying to reach the roof when overcome by smoke. Martin Fox was out with his cab all night and did not know of the fate of his wife and baby until several hours after the fire. The damage to the building was about $5,000.

NEW JURY PLAN SAVES TIME.

Six Men Selected in One Afternoon to Try William Neufeld on the Charge of Murder.

The saving of time which will result from the statute enacted in 1896 which provides for the appointment of a special Jury Commissioner for the weeding out of undesirable talesmen was strikingly shown yesterday afternoon in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court. A jury is being selected there to try William Neufeld, who is accused of having murdered Mrs. Annie Kronman on August 7. A special panel of 150 talesmen which had been ordered for this trial by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court was present and the expedition with which the jurors were chosen was a revelation to Justice Fursman, as well as to District Attorney McIntyre, and William F. Howe, who is Neufeld's counsel.

At the afternoon session of two hours six jurors were chosen out of the seventeen men examined. It took ten day to obtain six jurors to try Roland B. Molineux. Last April the same jury panel was ordered for the trial of Ernest M. Welch on the charge of perjury. Welch's counsel challenged the entire panel, but Judge Newburger overruled the challenge. The indictment was dismissed, however, and no jury was selected, so that yesterday was the first time the new system was ever put into practical operation.

William Neufeld was related to the woman he is accused of having murdered. District Attorney McIntyre says that he has evidence which shows that Neufeld visited Mr. Kronman's house at 226 West Thirty-fifth Street with his mother, his brother, and his brother's wife about two weeks before the murder, and that on that occasion Mrs. Kronman exhibited her collection of jewels to the Neufelds. On the afternoon of the day of the murder Mrs. Kronman was found by her husband, Nathan Kronman, who is a commission merchant, lying near her bedroom door with her skull crushed in. A bloody hatchet was found beside her, and a search showed that her jewelry had been stolen. Suspicion at first fell on Mr. Kronman, who was arrested, but was released after the inquest, which was held on August 11.

A locket which had belonged to Mrs. Kronman was found subsequently on Neufeld, who lived at 92 Goerck Street, and he was arrested. Capt. McClusky investigated the case and found that Benjamin Korn of 337 Park Row had in his possession a watch and chain which had belonged to Mrs. Kronman and which he said he had purchased from Neufeld. The detectives at work upon the case claim to have found the pawnbroker who purchased Mrs. Kronman's jewelry, and say that they can trace the crime directly to Neufeld.

The six jurors who have so far been selected for the trial are Granville Savage, treasurer, 55 West Twenty-third Street; David Henry, real estate agent, 202 East One Hundred and Twenty-first Street; Edward S. Dougherty, real estate agent, 1,936 Lexington Avenue; Thomas H. Thorn, coal merchant, Twenty-ninth Street and Second Avenue; Robert Thompson, retired, 229 West Ninety-seventh Street; John S. Appleby, real estate agent, 55 Liberty Street.

SEVENTY-FIRST'S MEDAL MEN.

Long Service Decorations Presented After a Review.

Brig. Gen. George Moore Smith and staff of the Fifth Brigade, N. G. N. Y., last night reviewed the Seventy-first Regiment in its armory. Several thousands of visitors applauded the exhibition. Col. W. G. Bates was in command, and had about 500 men on the floor. After the review long-service medals were presented to the following members of the command:

Capts. Anthony J. Blefoker, John W. Dowling, John H. Whittle, William R. Hill, Arthur L. Robertson, First Lieut. Herbert H. True, Second Lieuts. William C. Garthwaite and Frederick H. Weyman, Battalion Quartermaster Sergt. John H. Beatty, First Sergts. George B. Young, William F. Weiss, Sergt. Major Joseph J. Adgate, Sergts. Oscar Bruckheimer, Arthur L. Canterbury, Charles H. Ryer, James E. Carroll, James C. Rodgers, Corps. Edward Doty and William M. Merriam; Privates William J. Burt, Paul C. Masterstieg, J. E. Jefferson, David Broder, George S. Andrews, and J. Winter.

A dance followed the ceremony.

QUEENS SCHOOL AFFAIRS.

Borough Board Asks for Advice—Decision Against Teachers.

The Queens Borough School Board does not want to exceed its appropriations for next year and yesterday passed a resolution calling upon Corporation Counsel Whalen to give them legal advice. The board asks "How is the length of service of teachers referred to in the Ahearn law to be computed, since consolidation or total length of service as teachers? If it is service rendered anywhere, then there will not be enough money appropriated to pay the subordinate teachers. Can the Queens Borough School Board reduce the salaries of principals except such as have served ten years? Can the board reduce the salaries in the Superintendent's office, and of the janitors?"

When the opinion is received the board will arrange for next year's salaries.

Supreme Court Justice Garretson, in Long Island City, yesterday handed down a decision denying the application of the teachers in Public School No. 9 of Long Island City for a writ of peremptory mandamus compelling the Mayor, Controller, and Board of Education to pay the teachers their October salaries. Justice Garretson holds that if he granted the writ sought, an injustice might be done to others in the employ of the Board of Education in the capacity of stenographers, clerks, janitors, &c.

SOUTH BROOKLYN R. R. SOLD.

W. Bayard Cutting Buys Terminal Company's Rights for $150,000.

All the real estate, rights, and franchises of the South Brooklyn Railroad and Terminal Company were yesterday sold to Samuel C. Herriman, representing W. Bayard Cutting, for the upset price of $150,000. The sale was in a suit in foreclosure brought by Jonathan K. Gapin, as trustee for certain promissory notes amounting to $100,000. Mr. Gapin represented W. Bayard Cutting and R. Fulton Cutting, holders of the notes, and who were interested in the company. This indebtedness took precedence over a first mortgage of $1,200,000, represented by bonds.

The late John Ambrose was President of the Terminal Company. The property sold consists of real estate on the south side of Thirty-eighth Street, Brooklyn, extending from Third Avenue nearly to Ninth Avenue, together with the stations, shops, tracks, and franchises of the company in South Brooklyn.

The intentions of the purchasers in taking up the property is not known.

FEAR DAMAGE TO DRILLROOM.

Thirteenth's Men Would Bar Singing Festival from Armory.

Some members of the Thirteenth Regiment of Brooklyn are making objection to the proposed use of the regimental armory drillroom for the National German Singing Festival, which is to be held next July.

The festival will continue for more than a week. It is proposed to erect tiers of seats in the drillroom and the objectors fear that their construction will seriously damage the fine, smooth floor.

Brigade Commander General McLeer yesterday said that he believed the bond that had been given would cover any damage which might be done to the drillroom.

COUNTY'S STATE SCHOOL TAX.

In Thirty Years New York Has Paid $30,014,795.06 Over Its Receipts.

Controller Coler yesterday prepared for Corporation Counsel Whalen a statement showing the amount of money paid by New York County to the State for school purposes, and the amount received by the county from the State as its share of the free school fund in the last thirty years. The amounts for each year are shown. In the aggregate, the county has paid the State $51,422,127.95 and has received in return $21,407,332.89, an excess of the amount paid over that received of $30,014,795.06.

The statement is a reply to the charge made by Danforth E. Ainsworth, Deputy Superintendent of Public Instruction, that the Board of Estimate exceeded its powers in applying the money received from the State to the reduction of taxation, after having provided for the payment of teachers' salaries in the annual budget.

TOOK A HOT COAL-ASH COCKTAIL.

Berncona Family in a Comedy with a Doctor and a Policeman.

Valentine Berncona and his wife live at 124 Second Avenue. When he is melancholy she is gay, and when she is melancholy he is gay. That is the way they live, and that is why they quarrel.

The two quarreled yesterday. Valentine declared he would commit suicide. His wife sat down in a rocking chair and laughed and rocked until Valentine became desperate and ran out and bought a half pint of whisky. When he came back his wife was still laughing and rocking. He rushed to the stove, took out some hot ashes, put them in a glass and poured the whisky on top of them. His wife continued to rock and to laugh. Valentine drank his hot coal-ash cocktail and lay down on the floor to die.

His wife finally became alarmed, and ran for a policeman, who called an ambulance from Bellevue Hospital. Copious chunks of ashes were removed from Valentine's windpipe, and when he came to his wife was weeping. Then he laughed and declared that he was only fooling. She thought she had been duped and went for him, but the policeman and the hospital surgeon intervened.

The policeman said he would arrest Berncona for attempting suicide, and Mrs. Berncona immediately changed front and took her husband's part. Together they succeeded in convincing the officer that ash cocktails and would-be-suicide disturbances are regular occurrences in the family, and Valentine was left in the hands of his better half.
